DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By EDSON R. WAITE, Shawnee, Oklahoma

THAT pessimism is the word some merchants have been living on. They can't make expenses on that word. Now is the time to be an optimist and improve business by advertising.

Advertising helps to make a successful business. Some concerns have thought they could do a big business without advertising—but they didn't.

You will never have the public wearing a beaten path to your place of business until you persistently and consistently advertise.

Advertising speeds up sales. Advertising gives prominence to your business and quickens the interest of shoppers.

In these modern days when people contemplate buying anything they look at the ads to see where to buy. The public knows that consistent advertisers take pride in the fact that at all times their prices represent REAL savings.

You can go to the stores of the consistent advertisers at any time with the assurance that you will be charged reasonable prices and still purchase quality and service of a high degree.

A lot of cats seem to be let out of the bag every time a senate investigating committee gets to work. It won't be long before some big ones appear.

The ROMANTIC RUNAWAY

by KATHARINE HAVILAND-TAYLOR

BEGIN HERE TODAY

PABLITO, a handsome youth, becomes a fugitive when he sees from Key West to Havana with BEAU and LOTTIE, two thieves. Pablito has been accused of a murder he did not commit. He is in love with ESTELLE FIELD, daughter of rich JIM FIELD, but feels he has killed himself from her forever.

In Havana he becomes celebrated as a boxer and he and Beau open a gymnasium.

SIR AUBREY, a titled Englishman and Pablito's father, is searching for his son, employing BILLINGS, New York detective.

Three years pass and then Pablito and Estelle meet again. She tells him she has always known he was innocent. MARCIA TREADWAY, visiting the Fields, could prove that Pablito was not the murderer but remains silent, fearing scandal.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXIX

ESTELLE had disliked Trixy Golden from the day she first met her. Now she knew why—having just seen the tableau of her father's rough capture of this social hoiden; Trixy's perfumery struggle and Jim Field's kisses.

Estelle thought, through a dizziness that came from actual physical nausea, "He should remember to be more careful."

Marcia Treadway had felt that Estelle would never grow up but there were ways in which Estelle had grown up long ago. She had begun to realize that the appearance of respectability was all she could hope for from her father.

A little later she wrote a note to Pablito which she sent by Carlito, a servant whom she trusted.

"Dear Juanito," Estelle wrote. "I wonder if you can meet me in the park at three? I think surely I can get away then. I am a little depressed and you always cheer me up. You can send an answer by Carlito who is bringing this."

"Your friend, Estelle."

Her eagerness to see Pablito would have told her more than it did had she been more experienced. As it was, she knew that even though she tried she could not any longer pretend about her father. She knew, too, that Marcia's calculating creed was the greed of most of the men and women of the shoddy social world into which her father had introduced her. Estelle felt incredibly hurt and incredibly alone. With Pablito she could forget all this and, with him, she would not have to believe that all men were like her father's set.

CARLITO came back swiftly, rattling like a brown-roasted peanut in the small car the servants used. He made his way upstairs carrying a tall glass of malted milk on a silver tray beneath the cloth on the tray was Pablito's answer. Estelle took the milk. Then she smiled at Carlito and lifted the tray cover.

"Thank you so much, Carlito," she said.

"He is a good young man, Senorita. All Havana knows that he is a good young man. Ah, how he flushed as he saw me! It was dramatic. But even the strong are as little children at the touch of love!"

Carlito bowed himself away then. Pausing a moment at the door before closing it, he saw the girl, suddenly pink of cheeks, reading her letter.

Pablito had written: "Will I be there at three? Don't you know at all how I feel? Your wanting to see me, if only a little, has made me more happy than I've ever been before."

The letter bore no salutation. She wished he would call her Estelle. Presently she stood with the letter in her hands, imagining what he would say when they met. Then, once more, she saw the tableau in the living room.

At half-past two Estelle told Ruy that she would use the Lancia to take her to Havana. She had shopping to do and a friend at the Inglaterra to see. Ruy stifled a smile at her explanations. All the servants knew of her meetings with the young man. They discussed the affair frequently and hoped the lovers would elope. They narrated tales of Juanito's strength and bravery, of his excellence of character. Obviously Jim Field was unfit to be housed with a creature so young, so sweet and so altogether lovely as his daughter.

"Ruy," Estelle said, "you need not wait but you may return for me at five. At the usual place—near the Cosmopolita."

"Si, Senorita. Gracias," he answered with a bow and a flash of teeth.

"I AM a little early," she said, seeing Pablito and then coming close to him, her hand in both of his. She had known it would be like this, she reminded herself. All her unhappiness was washed from her and forgotten.

Pablito could not keep his adoration from his eyes. He had flushed darkly as she drew near: "I'm so glad to see you," she whispered instead.

"Look here," he said suddenly. "Let's go to a picture show. We can sit there and talk—"

"And not in a preference," she said, meaning the balcony—the preference of those who pay an extra sum for the privilege of stumbling up a twisting, narrow, dark stairway to look down upon those in cheaper seats.

"I suppose downstairs would be safer for you."

"Yes, under the balcony." He signaled a roving footboy and helped her in.

After they were settled in the theater and the story, with Spanish and English captions, was moving on the screen Pablito felt the pressure of her shoulder against his. He set his teeth, start-

He turned and saw that she had been crying. "It's all right," she whispered with a little quiver of a smile. "I can't explain, only when you feel you can't believe something you must believe—and then know that you can, you're so happy it's almost an ache." He understood her not at all but it did not matter. "You're the finest person I know, Pablito." She felt his sharply indrawn breath and felt her hand pressed against his lips. Her heart trembled and seemed to turn within her. She saw the figures on the screen only as misty blotches and moved closer to Pablito. With her free hand she patted his arm. He dropped her hand then and turned eyes toward her that dawned the last of her reserves. "I do—love you," she whispered. She had not known she was to say it. For a short second he put an arm around her slender shoulders, pressing her close. She felt his lips against her hair and started at that. "People might—" "It's dark and they do anyway—sometimes—down here—" he whispered in turn. He kept her hand in his, kissing it when he dared trust himself. He was secretly afraid that he might go wholly mad; to stand up, fling wide his arms and smash things; to laugh and cry and kiss her—kiss her! "You haven't said you love me," she whispered shyly. He could not. He pressed her hand against his lips until she winced a little. Then, breathless and without having seen her wince, he said, "Did I hurt you, my dearest?" "Oh, Pablito, you must know that with me it's for always!" she assured him. He felt her cheek pressed against his shoulder. He sat, blind and trembling. Then he heard her voice again. "Pablito, you're so—wonderful!" Some day, he thought, she would raise him from his knees and let him touch her lips with his. All the hunger he had ever known paled before this hunger. She thought, "We can meet in the grounds, perhaps, with Carlito watching to see that no one comes near." "Pablito, I want to see you alone," she whispered. Their parting that day was the sweetest heartbreak either of them had ever known. Estelle rode homeward with closed eyes, still seeing his humble, adoring gaze. (To Be Continued)

Dizzy Dean Speech Blamed for Feud

By FRED BAILEY United Press Staff Correspondent CHICAGO.—To the national baseball rivalry between St. Louis and Chicago National league clubs has been added a "feud" between Guy Bush of the Cubs and "Dizzy" Dean of the Cardinals. For years Bush has been one of the hardest pitchers in the league for the Cardinals to beat. Dean usually has been "poison" to the Cubs. Interest to the rivalry will be added this year by reason of the fact both clubs are expected to be pennant contenders.

The Dean vs. Bush feud dates back to a radio speech which Bush claims to have heard Dean make last summer. Dean was quoted as saying the Cubs were "yellow" and he hoped to face Bush the next day and that if he did the game was "in the bag" for the Cards. Bush reported the speech to his teammates the next day. He asked Manager Charlie Grimm to send him in against Dean. He taunted the "great Dean" about the radio speech, and the Cubs chased Dean to the showers in the third inning with an avalanche of six hits.

On the final day of the season the same two pitchers were pitted against each other in St. Louis. Bush again reminded his mates of the Dean "insults," and the result was that the Cubs aided Bush to his twentieth victory of the season. "I hope Grimm will let me pitch for the Cubs every time the Cardinals send Dean to the mound against us this season," Bush said recently. "I get more satisfaction out of beating that guy once than I do winning from anyone else twice." Bush has been with the Cubs since 1924. Last season was one of his best. He attributes his improvement to a study of the pitching style of Carl Hubbell, left-handed star of the New York Giants.

McDonald Aided By Ferguson at Houston Meeting

AUSTIN.—Candidates for governor came to a sudden and disconcerting realization this week that James E. Ferguson, master politician, materially aided the campaign of C. C. McDonald at the Houston meeting of the State Democratic executive committee by keeping prohibition repeal off the Democratic primary ballot.

Repeal was saved as a leading issue for a contemplated run-off primary battle between Attorney General James V. Allred, a "dry," and McDonald, a "wet."

One close to the administration councils predicted this week that McDonald would get 75 per cent of the so-called "Ferguson vote" and that strength with votes gained in his strenuous personal campaign will put him in the run-off with Allred. The state vote is virtually unseizable in winter and spring because of its extreme slopes. The CCC workers now are constructing a lateral road up Lone Pine canyon to Hunters Flat at the base of Mt. Whitney. Using this road, it will be possible to carry materials for construction of the cross much closer to the sides of the mountain than now.

AFTER THE WAR HISTORY AN OLD-TIME REPEATER

In the game of practical politics history repeats itself. In the wake of a bloody war history repeats itself. By a tremendous majority vote the house of representatives overrode the Roosevelt veto of the congressional plan for granting bigger allowances for veterans and more pay for federal workers. The count was interesting. It showed a vote 310 to 72 against the President. Many of the leading democrats broke away. All but two republicans voted against the veto. Now a two to one vote by the senate was necessary to enact the measure in the face of White House disapproval—and yet the senate had sought even a more liberal allowance than that forced into the bill by the house of representatives. These were the high points of the veto:

The President told the congress in his message the added funds carried by the bill "would upset his budget plans, take money required for emergency relief and violate principles he believed should govern the allowances of veterans' compensations. Moreover, it would add $228,000,000 of continuing expenses for which congress had failed to provide by additional taxation."

In general election year the President recommends and the practical politicians who are the lawmakers of the nation ignore the recommendations or vote to override his vetoes. All this is running true to form and true to history.

There are millions of veterans in the 48 American commonwealths. There are thousands of employes on the government payroll. They constitute a voting strength that is very important as well as very formidable in many congressional districts the country over.

Looking backwards the federal soldiers who were the victors not only clamored for high pensions or allowances but for years and years they dominated the elections. As for the veterans of the Southland who lost, they were compelled to go before the legislatures of their respective states and battle for meager allowances—but they had a large share in the political spoils at home for years and years following in the wake of the surrender of the sword of Lee to Grant at Appomattox courthouse.

There will be a nationwide election in November. All the members of the house of representatives who wish to succeed themselves must stand for re-election. A third of the membership of the senate must go before the voters of respective states. Politics is a scientific game. Americans from the beginning (for the most part) have been scientific players where self interest governed the individual mind and action. Where self interest is deep-seated in the human breast.

Peanut Industry Protection Plans Being Considered

Measures for protecting the peanut industry against low returns which may result from increase in production, are under consideration by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, it was announced today.

The control board set up under the recently established marketing agreement for peanut millers, has requested the Administration to adopt, as early as possible, some program for control of production or marketing. Relatively favorable prices brought by the 1933 crop, and the release of labor and equipment from production of other crops in the South may, it is feared, bring about increased production, a surplus, and low prices, unless some protective steps are taken.

One plan, tentatively approved by the control board, would be to determine the amount of the 1934 crop which could be moved into cleaning and shelling channels without danger to the minimum price schedules established in the marketing agreement, and to apportion the growing of this amount among States, counties, and individuals on the basis of acreage and production in a base period to be specified.

Under this plan millers would be permitted to purchase, for cleaning and shelling, only peanuts grown under such allotments. Peanuts from farms without allotments, or peanuts grown in excess of allotments, could be marketed only to be crushed into oil, or for other purposes than cleaning and shelling, and would therefore bring approximately oil prices.

In its present form this plan includes production control features that can be applied only to products listed as basic agricultural commodities in the Agricultural Adjustment Act as it now reads. The plan as now being considered would therefore be applicable only in the event that proposed amendments to the Act, making peanuts a basic commodity are passed by Congress.

A modification of the plan, also under consideration, would be directed wholly toward market protection, with allotments based on a flat percentage of acreage and prospective production in 1934.

Broadway America Convention Will Be In Dallas May 8th

DALLAS. — The convention headquarters of the seventh annual meeting of the Broadway of America Highway association, today announced that delegates to the forthcoming convention would travel to the convention city in two motorcades.

R. A. Jones, Hot Springs National Park, Ark., will head a group leaving Knoxville, Tenn.

Both motorcades are expected to reach Dallas, the convention city on the evening of May 7, prior to the opening of the convention on May 8.

With touring bureaus throughout the nation calling for literature and maps of this scenic route,

U. S. Salaries Are Surprise to British

LONDON.—Salaries paid to British heads of huge industrial enterprises do not approach those received by United States giants of business.

The chairman of Imperial Chemical Industries, Sir Harry McGowan, who controls the destinies of 60,000 employes, and nearly $400,000,000 of invested capital, is reported to be the highest salaried industrialist in Great Britain.

Sir Harry's salary, estimated at $125,000 a year, is only pin money compared to the big emoluments of the boom years in the United States, when the Bethlehem Steel head, E. E. Grace, drew as much in salary and bonuses as $1,623,750.

Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, who probably has dealt with more millions than any banker, draws less than $25,000 a year. Up until a year ago, he received only $12,000.

As Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald is paid only $25,000 a year compared with $75,000 received by the Archbishop of Canterbury and $50,000 by the Lord Mayor of London.

A Fashion Arranged for You

WE MUST be in fashion today.

Fashion reaches even into our thoughts and speech, into our every activity, into almost every incidental of our present-day background. Though elusive and constantly changing, we must be familiar with this force—if we are to hold our places as active members of a modern community.

To speak of young girls as flappers is to date ourselves immediately post-war. Plush and mohairs would stamp the past on our home furnishings. And antiquated household appliances would continue to submerge us in drudgery distinctly unfashionable.

There is no better parade of fashion than that which is presented to you daily in the pages of this newspaper. Through the advertisements, leading merchants and manufacturers are telling you about fashions in living.

Hats and shoes now being worn, the better kind of household conveniences, the best values in foods, decorations, furnishings—each advertisement contains sincere and truthful news of the latest offerings of the stores. With the advertisements you can keep abreast of the times. You will find that it pays you to read them every day.
