A STATEWIDE ORGANIZATION OF ALL INDUSTRIES

There is a congressional committee in investigating petroleum conditions in Texas. 'Tis well. All the important facts and figures are at their disposal. There is a state regulatory body elected by all the voters of the commonwealth. Its members have made a remarkable record for the enforcement of proration orders since the fifth district court of appeals rebuked and reversed orders of minor Federal judges not long ago in the city of New Orleans.

Speaking of the Roosevelt reign. "we have now been for a year and a half under the New Deal."

In this deal over three-fifths of the nation is for the idea and execution as performed. It is safe to say in Texas four persons out of five are for the New Deal as the President has carried it forward. It is also safe to say that four persons out of five are very definitely and acutely concerned about states rights. This is as it should be.

There should be local organizations in all the 254 counties. Those who believe in the dogma of state rights should affiliate with the organization for the protection of the constitutional guarantees given to the states in the long ago by the immortal makers of the federal constitution who were likewise the founders of this republic.

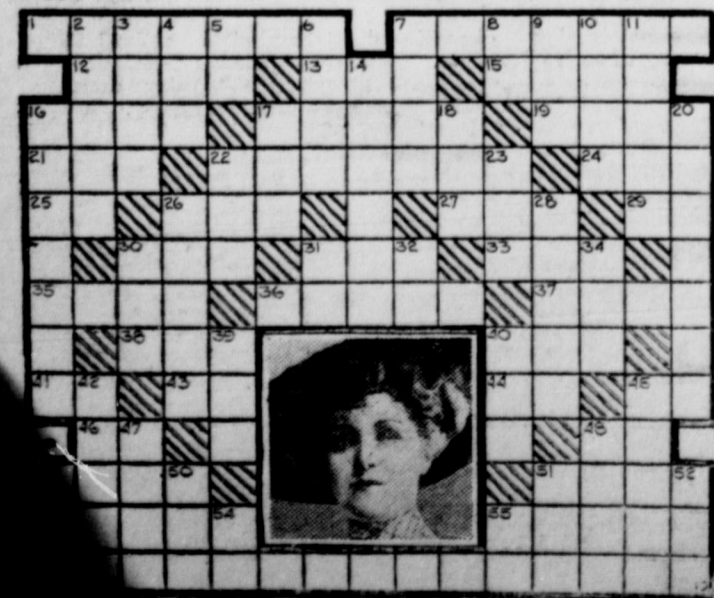

In 1934 states rights means a broad basis of happiness for 6,000,000 people. It concerns an economic question and not the right of secession of a state or the defense of chattel slavery. It covers the right to divide between husband and wife community property not only in connection with the division of possessions but the division of income in the payment of taxes.

It also involves such questions as high tariffs and low tariffs. For many years the makers of things have been the beneficiaries of high tariffs and the growers of things, who produce the staples of the farm and the ranch and the orchard and the garden have been largely overlooked. It concerns restricted immigration laws, which prevents the coming of new people into new land and therefore perhaps reduces the value of what we have in a new country as well as the creation of new land values and an increase in the tax-paying element of a commonwealth.

Eternal vigilance being the price of liberty, on with the movement.

CONFERENCE ON THE STATE OF THE NATION.

MISSISSIPPI REGAINS POLICE POWER OF STATE

In the long ago as time is counted a Mississippi legislature was among the first to ratify the 18th amendment of the federal constitution. It surrendered the police power of the state—a most sacred right passed on to the states by the makers of the constitution. Well, the 18th amendment was repealed. Mississippians have state constitutional prohibition. A repeal amendment was submitted to the voters the other day. Then it was that Mississippians clamored again for the right to regulate their own affairs, speaking of the liquor traffic, and the dry leaders declared for the retention in the constitution of the organic law for the protection of those who did not believe in the licensing and sale of hard liquor. The dries won by a handsome majority. They had surrendered the police power to the federal government. Now it has been returned to the Mississippi commonwealth.

This is as it should be. A national convention of democrats declared for a return of police power to the states. The American congress voted for the return of its power. Now Mississippians have been given the right not only to regulate the sale of intoxicating beverages but to stamp out the liquor traffic within the borders of their commonwealth. Surely, the makers of the constitution of the republic who were the founders and the builders of this nation of freemen knew what they were doing in the long ago when they drafted and adopted the constitution.

Texas, or a vast majority, have ever been for the rights of the state. Now it is for Texans to exercise their rights as freemen and to strive by voice and influence to preserve and perpetuate inviolate the rights passed on to their commonwealth by the makers of the republic and the Lone Star siser admitted in the long ago by articles of annexation which had been given the approval of the congress as well as the voters of a little republic that passed out of existence and became one of the proudest stars in the diadem of a great nation.

Unless they use advertising behind their efforts and make up their minds to fight for business, some business men will be like some unplanted ones that still just manage to keep on earth.

D. L. Kinnaird

D. L. Kinnaird of Eastland, who is a candidate for floratorial representative from the 107th district composed of Eastland and Callahan Counties.

Kinnaird Issues Statement to the Voters of 107th

In presenting myself as a candidate for State Representative from the 107th District, comprising Eastland and Callahan Counties, I believe the voters of the District are entitled to know something of my background. Briefly, I was born in Missouri, and at an early age my parents moved to Oklahoma where I completed my grade schooling. After graduating from the local school I attended the Oklahoma State University for three years and a half, working my way through. The war came on in 1917 and I enlisted. I was in service almost two years. Was with the 36th Division one year. After my return from the army I located in Eastland where I have resided for the past fifteen years, having engaged in the same occupation during that period. I own my own business. I am at present, Chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the City of Eastland, serving without compensation, and am a member of the Eastland County Reconciliation which is also a Board serving without compensation to adjust farm loans. Through my contacts with numerous people in the District, I believe that I have a clear insight into the needs and desires of the people of this district.

Among the measures which I favor as a means of remedying the present situation of economic stress, are a marked reduction in ad valorem tax on all real estate and exemption of any and all taxes on small homes, unemployment insurance, old age pensions and strict regulation of public utilities and control rates. I believe one factor necessary to recovery is to exercise economy and careful expenditure in Government.

In addition to this I favor the passage of any other legislation which is calculated to relieve the present situation, if such can be done without permanent injury to this District or its people.

Upon the basis of my record as Mayor of the City of Eastland and as a member of the Reconciliation Board I submit that I am fully qualified to properly represent this district in the State Legislature. My record shows conclusively that I have always held unswervingly toward the course which promised the greatest good for the people who had placed me in office. I can pledge to you that I will continue the same policy if I should be elected as your representative in the oncoming Democratic primary election. I was elected Mayor of the City of Eastland on a (anti-utility) ticket.

I will welcome an investigation into my qualifications and experience. I owe no allegiance and am under no obligation to any person or organization save to the people of this district for whose support I am making this appeal. If elected I shall put forth my utmost endeavor to perform my duties as representative in an honest, impartial and business-like manner.

I earnestly solicit your support and influence in the approaching primary election upon the sole campaign promise that if I become your State Representative that my duties will be performed with a view for the greatest good of Callahan and Eastland Counties.

D. L. (Donald) KINNAIRD, Candidate for 107th floratorial Representative. (Political Adv.)

Youths Throat Is 'Short Circuited' For Nearly 3 Years

By United Press
EL PASO.—Three years ago doctors "short-circuited" Efrain Alvarado's throat with a rubber tube when the year-old youngster swallowed a lye solution which closed the tract to his stomach. He was fed through the tube for two years until finally the seared throat tissues healed. Doctors were not aware the lad had recovered until about a year ago, when he grabbed his brother's portion of oatmeal from the breakfast table and swallowed it without injury. By that time Efrain had become proud of his artificial throat, which he exhibited to playmates. He objected when doctors prepared to remove it. Humoring his whim, the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mike Alvarado, permitted him to retain the tube. Recently it came in handy. The child, now four, swallowed a prune seed, which resulted again in closing Efrain's throat. His parents resumed feeding him through the rubber tube. Doctors believe the seed eventually will become dislodged, permitting the boy to eat normally once more.

SOPHIE KERR'S SUPERB LOVE STORY

"STAY OUT OF MY LIFE!"

By Sophie Kerr

MEAN HERE TODAY

JANE FERBY comes to New York determined to show her home town Marburg, and especially AMY JACKSON that she can make a success of her life. She had been her best friend until HOWARD JACKSON broke the engagement. Jane had loved him and married Amy in New York. Jane obtains a position in a real estate office and soon is making a large income.

She has an affair with GLEN FERBY who is married but she is not. When he offers to bear the expense of their child she contemptuously dismisses him. She considers in Amy, realizing she is her only friend. Jane insists on giving her daughter away and Amy takes the child promising never to reveal its parentage. The baby is named AMY.

For two years Jane stays away from Marburg. Then on a business trip she goes to her home and asks to see her daughter. Amy's face that Jane will insist on taking the child appear to be unfounded.

When America enters the World War Howard is eager to enlist but Amy all his decision until after commencement.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXV

THE last day of Commencement the dean's wife telephoned in a flurry. "Amy, Rufus is terribly sick, one of those awful stomach upsets he has when he gets too tired, and I'm in such a fix—we were to have two of the trustees for dinner tonight, you know Will and Barney and Louis Prentice, a couple of old treasurers as ever were. Would you take them? I'll send over the whole dinner, all cooked and a maid to serve it. And listen, Amy, there's plenty for a dozen or so more people if you feel equal to it. There's collards and beef and three roast ducks and I'll send cocktails and some really good Burgundy. Rufus has been saving and, oh Amy, do give them a real time. They've both been so generous with the Endowment Fund and we want them now to do something about the scholarships—you see how it is! I do wish you could die up an entertainin' pretty woman or two, but I suppose that's impossible. Marburg might be Sahara so far as extra women are concerned, but of course they'll enjoy you dear. They haven't got their wives with them, thank heaven!"

It was a nuisance thought Amy, but she could not refuse. She knew both Mr. Prentice and Mr. Barney. They were as the dean's wife had said, treasurers, and rather formidable treasurers, too. Greedy and autocratic. Now who on earth could she rate up as extra guests at this late hour—no other father and mother, for they had a party of their own. In deed no one in the faculty circle was available, not even an unattached instructor. Edgar Moreland and his pretty young wife. Yes, they might come. She telephoned at once and they accepted. Then she remembered Miss Rosa Terry. Miss Rosa's voice, over the wire, sounded very sprightly. "Why I'd love it, Amy, only—Jane's here again for a day or so, came to finish up some of my business. But I daresay she won't mind—"

"Oh, bring Jane along—so, it will even up the table instead of throwing it out. Half past seven, then."

THERE was plenty to do to get ready for the dinner. The dining-room required extra cleaning. Leaves must be put into the table glass and china and silver arranged for a strange maid's serving. Mrs. Pearce, ever available, would help. She had been on hand every day during Commencement Week because Amy had to be out so much. She could give Nancy her supper and put her to bed and still be ready to open the door for the guests and later help behind the scenes. Amy wondered what to wear. She had only two evening dresses and one had been torn to rags at the Senior dance. The other and older was very tired and shabby and just now spotted from a spilled mignonette at a reception. With quick resolution she went to the closet and took down her wedding dress, unwrapped it from its enfolding tissue paper and muffled. It was not in style, but its simplicity, the quality of its ivory satin made it dateless, classic.

When Howard came in, late and hurrying, she was already dressed and the shining satin was covered by an engaging apron, the skirt tucked up while she finished the last things in dining room and kitchen. That was why he did not see her until he ran downstairs just as the first guests rang the bell. He stopped and exclaimed, "Why, Amy—darling! You look like an angel—that lovely dress—"

"Do you remember it?"

"Do I? What do you take me for?" He could not go on, for Mr. Prentice was entering, red and puffing and obviously disgruntled at being switched from the dean to an obscure and young member of the faculty. But he unbent at sight of Amy with the cocktail tray in the background. Perhaps it would not be too bad, after all.

And now Edgar Moreland was coming and Alice, his wife—pink cheeks and curly hair and ruffled pink organza—and at the sight of another pretty woman Mr. Prentice began definitely to brighten. Barney was next, tall and gray and skeptical, but he also liked pretty women and cocktails and was much less assertive of himself and his money and opinions and prejudices than Prentice.

AND now Jane and Miss Rosa were coming in, Miss Rosa trailing her best black chiffon and glittering with her entire set of old pink topaz, necklace, brooch, bracelets, earrings, and behind her, with the expression of one who lends herself to a small town diversion with kindly patronage, came Jane. Jane at her most sophisticated in a bareback golden frock, pointed up with a jade cigarette holder and an enormous jade clasp on her girdle. The borrowed maid appeared at the door. "Dinner is served, Mrs. Jackson," she murmured.

Linger-Not Club Plans New Work

Mrs. C. O. Fredregill, the new director of the Linger-Not club, a charming little coterie of young girls, called a meeting of the club at her home Tuesday afternoon and outlined a program of coming activities for the club work that promises to be most interesting. Embroidering pillow cases was the immediate occupation, introducing the hand class work, one of the new studies. Patriotic songs were practiced including "Texas, Our Texas" and "America the Beautiful," with an extra practice for the club theme song, Virginia Nell Garrett and Elizabeth Ann Sikes were appointed as committee to make some pretty pins to wear on club badges and to be ready for the members at Friday afternoon's meeting. The poem, "To a Water-fowl," by William Cullen Bryant, was read and explained by the director, followed by a well told biography of poet given by Virginia Garrett. An interesting round table discussion of books read by the members was held and a sketch of the life of Carnegie was nicely given by Donnie Parker and Nora Frances Mahon. Arrangements were made for an alphabetical roll call response of girls for building good character. They will give a play sometime this summer and plans for this were considered. They will also have a song contest in which Mrs. Fredregill will present a prize to the best singer. Scrap books are being collected to preserve newspaper clippings of the club meetings. ily will be missed, and it seems as if a cog in the wheel is being taken out with the repair to take a long time to be remedied. Attorney Key not only enjoys the confidence of the members of his profession but he has proven himself a most desired citizen in social and civic activities. Such a man and his family will be an added asset to any city and Houston will not be sorry he came there.

Although this is vacation time we see lots of Eastland's business men still on the job. Even those who "steal" off for a little vacation recreation don't stay away many days. Two things could enter into this condition this year. One is a loyalty to stay with the community at a time when their presence is most needed and the other is to realize that their business needs their attention every moment. It cannot be lack of finances because folks can live just as cheap on a vacation as they can at home if they want to.

News stories carries the information that all food commodities are up from ten to twenty percent due to the continued drought. That kinder makes things look gloomy at the outset; however when it is considered that there is something left to buy with the terrible drought we have had all over the country, we should be thankful. It always had rained, and it will rain again. That's a cinch. But we can't do anything about what, how or where. There is no use to worry about it, there are so many things that can be done worthwhile even in a drought that our minds can be busy thinking and our bodies busy being active, that the drought won't seem near as bad as it may appear if we keep on brooding about it. Of course it is serious, but we've got to make the best of it.
