TESTIMONY OF DOCTOR HEARD THIS MORNING

Jury Is Expected To Retire This Afternoon.

The jury in the Motley murder case, in which defense witnesses delivered their testimony this morning, were expected to retire this afternoon after charges will be delivered.

Dr. J. P. Lovett, testifying under question by J. Frank Sparks, defense attorney, said that Carl D. Herring was under the influence of liquor when he was treated at the hospital.

Ernest Simmons of Eastland, who under questioning, testified the defendant had worked in his shop at irregular intervals, stated that at one time when Herring was in the rear of his blacksmith shop, Motley started to enter but left when Herring shouted "Here's that Pretty Boy."

Simmons said Herring said, "I want to tell that black-haired something. He's been messing in my business." Simmons stated Herring "had it in for him pretty strong."

J. R. Hill of Albany, on the stand, stated that with Motley and his brother, Roe Hill, had come from Albany on Saturday, Aug. 4. They arrived in Eastland that afternoon. That night, he said, Motley in company with himself, went to the dance.

Hill testified that he saw Herring hit Motley. The crowd at the dance gathered around the pair. After Sag Robertson's ejection of Motley he stayed around for a while and joined Motley who was "poking" along the way home.

House sponsors of the bill continued to nag for speedy action. Senators believed they could clear two hurdles in one jump tomorrow. The first was the bill to remit interest and penalties on delinquent taxes paid by March 1.

The second was the Hornsby-Hughes bill setting up a policy of discount for early tax payment and penalties for delinquencies.

Senator W. B. Collie of Eastland hoped to incorporate in the Hornsby-Hughes compromise bill the merits of the delinquent tax bill, thereby economizing in time and action.

The Hornsby-Hughes bill now is in a conference committee for adjustment of differences. A final report is to be completed this afternoon.

Attorney Gives Views On The Proposed State Amendments

By L. R. PEARSON "Taxation shall be equal and uniform. All property in this state shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

The power sought to be given by the amendment is the power to destroy the oil industry, the sulphur industry, the cattle or cotton industry or any other legitimate industry of the state which produces, or deals with personal property, sufficiently distinct from other personal property to justify a separate classification.

It has long been said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. In a government by the people, the power of taxation is not likely to be used to destroy the people, so long as there remains in the organic law the mandate of equality and uniformity.

I challenge any advocate of the proposed amendment—whether he wears little or big breeches—to answer this question: Why should the legislature have the power, and why should any fair-minded person desire to grant the power, to make one man pay more taxes for the support of the government because he owns property of given value of one kind than another man who owns property of the same value of another kind?

Eric Schandler, the victim's cousin, came here after the shooting and surrendered to the sheriff. Officers said a charge of murder was to be filed against him.

The prisoner said Edwin struck Eric's brother-in-law with a hammer twice. Eric said he fired from a car in which he was seated.

ABOUT THE AMENDMENT

"All friends of education and good government," says a printed document which has just made its appearance, "should join in defeating these dangerous amendments."

The protest is against the amendment limiting to $11.25 per capita per year the total amount of taxes from all sources and for all purposes which can be collected by the state, and another to permit counties and school districts to collect taxes on university lands within their boundaries, the money payable from the university available fund.

It has been shown clearly that the tax-limit amendment would protect larger taxpayers and shift the burden back, by shifting taxes to local subdivisions to the small home-owner who thus would lose the homestead exemption.

The other, to tax university lands, is an extension of a policy already ratified by the voters, in permitting a county to tax the school lands within it. At present, the payment of these taxes is by legislative appropriation.

It seems the objection is to taking the money from the university available fund.

Due to the importance of killing the tax-limit amendment, it seems of doubtful wisdom to have linked with it the other, which could be of but minor and local importance, and which at least carries within itself a suggestion of being as well justified as the previous one of its kind that won overwhelming approval of the voters.

Voters will realize that to prohibit greater levies than $11.25 per capita per year, in connection with the fact that the rate of ad valorem taxes is set many months before collections start, the bar would only prevent the levying and collection of adequate natural resource taxes or any taxes out of the huge profits made possible by monopoly in the hands of utilities.

They also will easily see that, by limiting the state tax for educational purposes, the tendency would be to cripple the public school system; and to the extent that it failed to cripple the schools only would be the extent of shifting the taxes back to local district levies that would apply on the small homesteads that are exempt from the state taxes.

Laws are made for both public officials and private citizens to obey. When the private citizens alone obey the law, a city or state is in a sorry way, indeed.

Your Chamber of Commerce is busily engaged in improving trade conditions, social welfare and in encouraging the growth and prosperity of your city. Every business man should be an active member.

'Dusting the Covers of Texas History' for The Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936

A devout Catholic, Cabeza de Vaca thought it an act of God that he was permitted to give the Indians such encouragement over their illnesses that they thought him possessed of supernatural powers. "They wished to make us (Lope de Ovideo and Cabeza) physicians," he wrote in his journal, "without examination or requiring diplomas."

In spite of the fact that Lope and Cabeza were with Indians so kindhearted that they wept a whole year over the loss of one child, they were treated none too kindly. "I had to dig for edible roots from among the cane until my fingers were so worn that they did so much as straw touch them they did bleed," he said.

Cabeza knew that some of his Spanish companions were on the Island, but Lope de Ovideo could never get up enough courage to leave the tribe of Indians and go with Cabeza to look for the others. His stout muscles were not an indication of a stout heart. Each year Cabeza tried to persuade Lope to leave with him, but six long years had passed before they finally set out together to look for their lost friends.

Nevada County Leads Nation In Number Weddings

CHICAGO. — Ormsby county, Nevada, on the California border, is the "marryingest" county in the nation, a report of the American Legislators association reveals.

Each year, 638 persons per 1,000 of the population consummate 319 marriages. But it's not the local boys and girls who make business brisk for parsons and other official wedders.

Conservative marriage laws in California are believed responsible for Ormsby county's marriage "gold mine."

Runner up in proportionate weddings is Yuma county, Arizona, also on the California border. As Ormsby serves northern California trade, so Yuma handles rush orders for the southern section of the sunny state.

Yuma officials each year marry 436 persons for every 1,000 of the county's population.

Quick transportation facilities successfully combat the conservative marriage laws a single state might enforce within its own boundaries, the association believes.

The figures indicate the necessity of uniform marriage laws, the report said.

Unwed Mothers Are Given Shelter

PHILADELPHIA.—There is a haven here for unmarried mothers and their babies.

Since 1854—the year of its establishment—St. Vincent's Hospital, a Catholic institution, has sheltered and cared for many hundreds of unfortunate cases.

Expectant mothers are not placed on a clinic basis. They may go to the hospital for examination and stay there three months after the baby is born. The babies go to "school" and are "graduated" when they reach the age of four years. Then usually they are turned over to an orphanage.

But by the time they leave the "school" the babies have been given the needed care and attention which is found in the average home.

Play periods with an abundance of sunshine are given the infants. By the time they are four, they have learned to eat their meals alone, brush their teeth, bathe themselves and attend nursery classes.

The maternity qualifications of the hospital have attracted many private patients, and a paying clinic also is well patronized.

The Clew of the Forgotten Murder

BEGIN HERE TODAY

When CHARLES MORDEN, a reporter for the Blade, is found dead, DAN BLEEKER, publisher, is called to investigate the murder. Morden had been investigating the murder of FRANK B. CATHAY, a wealthy and prominent citizen, who has reported to the police as being killed by a girl named MARY.

The day following Morden's death, Cathay's direct business partner, ESTHER ORDWAY, visited the apartment of ALICE LORTON, who has reported to police the disappearance of her roommate, ESTHER ORDWAY.

Griff accuses Alice of being involved in Morden's murder but does not succeed in breaking down her story. He learns Cathay broke an appointment with HARRY FANCHER, inventor, the night of the murder, and goes to see Fancher who tells him the saw Fancher leave the Hillcrest hotel with a young woman.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXIV

SIDNEY GRIFF paused, his hand on the door. "It doesn't matter about the telephone," he said. "I'll send a messenger for you if I need you."

Fancher followed Griff outside the house and stood meekly watching as the criminologist strode down the cement walk toward his car.

"That wind," Fancher said apologetically, "has made the yard look like a mess. I hope you don't mind."

"Oh, no," Griff called as he climbed into the car. "I don't mind in the least."

Before Griff started his drive back to the city he telephoned the detective agency that had shadowed Alice Lorton the night before. From that detective agency he found out that Alice Lorton, together with a male companion, had journeyed to the Trent Apartments on 212 West 16th street; that the couple had entered the apartments and had not left them; that, as nearly as the detective could ascertain, the man was Kenneth Boone, who rented apartment 209 in the front of the apartment house.

Griff instructed them to keep the apartment house under surveillance and to shadow the pair whenever they should leave, putting sufficient men on the job so that they could shadow both the man and the woman. He also instructed them to cover the Hillcrest hotel thoroughly, searching for a young woman who had been registered there on Monday night, who was about 22 years of age, a brunette, and who had had dinner with the man who had registered as Frank B. Cathay of Riverview.

Having set those wheels in motion, independently of the investigation which was being made by the newspaper, Sidney Griff yawned, climbed back in his car and started the long drive back to the city. When he had arrived he went directly to a Turkish bath and remained there until morning, when he had a leisurely breakfast and then strolled to his apartment.

It was approximately 10:30 Monday morning that Bleeker telephoned and announced he was on his way to Griff's apartment with important news. He arrived less than 15 minutes after the telephone call had been completed.

Griff, looking fresh and rested, reclined in the large lounge chair.

"You've got important information," he asked.

Bleeker nodded, took a notebook from his pocket.

"In the first place," he said, "we found the taxi driver."

"What does he remember?"

"A lot," he says that Morden engaged him by the hour on Thursday morning; that Morden went to a garage at the corner of Robinson street and Huntley street. He made some investigations there, went to the Elite Apartments on 319 Robinson street, returned to the cab within a matter of five minutes, went to Ninth and Central streets, had the cab park around the corner on Central while Morden went into an office building somewhere near the corner of Ninth and Central. The cab driver thinks it may have been the Monadnock building. Morden was gone for nearly half an hour, returned, and drove once more to the Elite Apartments. He stayed there for a few minutes, then returned to the cab and discharged it, remaining at the Elite Apartments."

Sidney Griff jumped to his feet, dropped the cigaret into an ash tray. His lazy relaxation had vanished as completely as a cloud wisp drifting from the edge of a snow-capped mountain out over a dry desert.

GRIFF swept his hand toward a battery of filing cabinets which lined one side of the room.

"I study crime," he said. "I study the modes and methods of operation. I study the habits of criminals. In those card indexes you'll find digest of every major crime for half a century. The big embezzlements! The big murders! The big hold-ups! Crimes of passion! Crimes of deliberation! Crimes of violence!"

"I've concentrated for years on the best methods of getting quick results in criminal cases, and here an ordinary newspaper reporter thinks of something that has entirely escaped my mind!"

"What do you mean?" Bleeker asked. "I don't see it. I don't get the sketch."

"The garage," said Griff, striding up and down the long room, flinging the words over his shoulder without turning his head. "It's a new city ordinance, of course, but I should have thought of its possibilities."

"I don't follow you," Bleeker remarked. "Do you think you know what Morden had in mind? What he was doing?"

"Of course I know what he had in mind and what he was doing!" Griff said, turning on his heel and striding back toward Bleeker, making fierce, impatient gestures with his hands as he walked, emphasizing his words with little jabs of his extended right forefinger. "It's that new city ordinance, the one that requires garages to turn in the license numbers of all cars that are stored in the garage overnight. It was sponsored by the automobile insurance companies in order to give the police a chance to check up on stolen cars. Every public garage has to submit such a report."

"I still don't see," Bleeker said, "what you're driving at . . ."

"MORDEN," said Griff, "wanted to check up on what Cathay was doing in the city. Remember that he wasn't sent out to check up on the man who had assumed Cathay's identity; he was sent out to check up on Cathay. You wanted to get something that would put Cathay on the defensive. Very well, Morden found out Cathay had been here in the city on Monday night. Cathay's business was somewhat mysterious. Morden wanted to find out what it was. He got the license number of Cathay's automobile and checked down through the numbers that were reported of cars stored in public garages."

"It was probably a tedious job, but he found the car number, found that Cathay's car had been stored in the garage there at the corner of Robinson and Huntley. From there he got a lead that took him direct to the Elite Apartments. He went there and found that Alice Lorton or Esther Ordway, as the case may be, wasn't in, so he went out and ran down another lead and then returned, and either found the party he wanted in the apartment or found that the party was going to be there shortly, and decided that he'd wait."

"Now then," Griff said, "having established that this young man, Morden, was a logical worker and a fast worker, the question arises why he went to Ninth and Central."

"Probably some other lead," Bleeker said. "But how did he get it?"

Griff shrugged his shoulders.

"No matter," he said. "We'll run that down a little later. In the meantime we've got a live lead on this garage business. Suppose you have one of your men run over to the garage with a picture of Morden. Find out if Morden wasn't there making inquiries about the car that was registered in the name of Frank B. Cathay of Riverview. You can get that registration number by checking up the records in the Motor Vehicle Registration department. You can put through a telephone call and get that information."

"Now?" asked Bleeker.

Griff nodded.

"Let's get that disposed of," he said, "before we go any farther. I want a check on that."

He jerked his head toward a desk telephone.

"You can use that telephone," he said.

In the next installment Dan Bleeker comes across a love letter that seems to have played a part in the murder mystery.

The Proper Treatment

Give that sluggish child a liquid laxative containing senna (a natural laxative). California Syrup of Figs has the right amount for children's use, and this rich, fruity syrup does not upset them.

Just give any headachy, bilious child a little of this gentle laxative when constipated, and a little less if dose is repeated until bowels seem to be moving regularly and thoroughly without need of help.

When you change to California Syrup of Figs instead of harsh medicines, you'll risk no more violence to your child's appetite, digestion, and general physical condition. You'll have a safer, more satisfactory result, too.

So, get a bottle of California Syrup of Figs from your druggist, and start tonight, if your child is constipated, giving a good, cleansing dose. Repeat as necessary, giving a little less each time. That's the secret of this treatment—gradually reduced dosage.

Here is a simple way of finding out if any youngster with irregular or insufficient bowel movements is in need of relief, or getting the wrong treatment:

THE "LIQUID TEST"

This is the way to relieve occasional sluggishness, or constipation in a child of any age:

First: select a liquid laxative of the proper strength for children.

Second: give the dose suited to the child's age, and condition.

Third: reduce the dose, if repeated, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

An ideal laxative for this purpose is California Syrup of Figs which every druggist keeps in stock. Be certain that it is the genuine product, with "California" blown in the bottle.
