After her father's death ANN HOLLISTER, pretty and 20, learns that her college course was made possible by loans from her father's friends. To repay them she offers her home for sale and then shocks her relatives by holding a sale of the family antiques. On the day of the sale a young man motoring through the small Georgia town is stopped by motor trouble almost in front of Ann's home. He goes there to telephone a garage and she invites him to remain while the car is being repaired.

When he leaves Ann discovers he has taken a blue vase, leaving a note and $50 to pay for the vase. The note is signed "P.K." Ann is humiliated and augry but finds it impossible to put the engaging stranger out of her mind. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY BEGIN HERE TODAY

CHAPTER II

AFTERWARD Sarah Kent was sure that she had realized trouble was brewing when she saw Tony heading for the library's reference department. Only a girl, Sarah was certain, could have drawn Tony into the gloomy quiet of the reference room, and kept him there for two viole hours! Suddenly Sarah came to another of her quick, intuitive decisions. Tony was turning bookish because of that red-headed girl from Georgia, Ann Hollister, who had been added to the staff only
