RED URGES MINATION OF GAS WASTING

By United Press
AUSTIN, Feb. 21.—Gov. James Allred today demanded that Texas legislators stop the 1,000,000,000 feet a day waste of natural gas in the Texas Panhandle and requested that Texas be the first to ratify a nine-state compact to conserve oil.

He personally delivered separate messages on the two subjects to a joint session of the house and senate.

Allred's program for gas conservation called primarily for ratable taking and development of new gas markets by pipe lines to St. Louis, Detroit and other places.

Governor Allred submitted a six-point program to combat gas waste. Stressed in it was a demand for divorcement of gas pipe lines from other branches of the industry and prohibition of interlocking ownership through holding companies.

THE WEATHER
By United Press
EAST TEXAS—Partly cloudy tonight and Friday. Colder north Friday.

"that reminds me..."

Along comes another birthday holiday. Tomorrow commemorates the birth of the nation's greatest statesman, diplomat and soldier—George Washington. In diplomacy he said "It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world." In victory he said at Valley Forge, "My brave fellows, let no sensation of satisfaction for the triumphs you have gained induce you to insult your fallen enemy. Let no shouting nor clamorous huzzing increase their mortification. It is sufficient for us that we witness their humiliation. Posterity will huzza for us." In statesmanship he said "The very idea of the power and right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

It would almost be an insult to a child old enough to understand much less those who have reached to age of maturity, to elaborate on the general life and history of George Washington. Every school child knows it by heart. Every American mother places him as an example in the minds of her growing child. Every father likens the shadow of Washington behind his boy's form, and of course every American that ever attended school had the spirit of George Washington instilled into them from the time they entered until they graduated. His most soulful and beautiful expression was "I never say anything of a man that I have the smallest scruple of saying to him." When he declined a military escort on the occasion of his inauguration (1789) he said, "I require no guard but that affections of the people." And that affection was established for all time. Washington still lives in the heart and minds of the millions of American people. This is one fitting birthday commemoration that can truly be designated as a holiday to pay our respects to him, dead, yet he lives.

Chancellor Hitler ordered the heads chopped off of two women, and off they went. High hat and dress suit featured the ensemble of the axman. The back of the necks of the women were shaved before the execution. Evidently Hitler did that as a warning to women more than to men, because the "guy" that hired the women got a jail sentence from news reports. But now since the heads have been chopped off those women, they are out of the power of man to do anything more to them to torture or hurt them, no matter how brutal they may be inclined to be. At that death is more welcome than torture. Those women may have suffered temporary humiliation, but at that they went to the guillotine bravely and erect. Hitler and his cohorts who ordered the execution will suffer humiliation in life and no one knows how much torture they will suffer before they are cut and probably will wish that they had been the executed rather than the executioner. As the English papers stated, Hitler must have some dangerous secrets in his breast, that should be known to the world, regardless of whom gave them out.

Press dispatches stated that funds for appeals of Bruno Hauptmann were being raised by Germans in America who are supposed to be American citizens. We cannot conceive of any person of German extraction sending any money to Hauptmann, as a class and it is unfair to the German extraction citizen of this nation to infer that they were helping a convicted man beat the law. That looks like propaganda because Hauptmann happened to be a German alien. Americans are not interested in the affairs of Germany, nor to protect their felons. They proved that during the World war, at which time sedition was ferreted out in the nucleus of all nations. Any criminal with certain appeals can raise money from the melting pot.

Neighborhood is a relationship that may well be established in any community, and particularly by the merchant and the rural communities. The constant efforts that may be made for the rural citizens to come into town and see the merchant, it is no further for the merchant to go out in the country and see the farmer. It is true that a sale might not be made at the time of the visit, but he may secure a

DEATH ASKED BY THE STATE IN ARGUMENT

Defense and Prosecution
Make Last Pleas This Morning.

By United Press
PAWNEE, Okla., Feb. 21.—The jury in the trial of Phil Kenamer for murder, filed into a bare little room in the Pawnee county court-house to decide the fate of the 19-year-old confessed killer of John Gorrell, Jr.

The case went to the jury at 11:44 a. m.

Ringling in the ears of the 12 farmers and villagers, was an emotional plea for mercy from venerable C. B. Stuart, 78-year-old defense attorney and Kenamer family friend, and an impassioned demand for death in the electric chair from young W. F. Gilmer, assistant prosecutor.

Gilmer's demand was a surprise as the state had said the death penalty would not be sought.

"On behalf of the state we are going to ask that you inflict the extreme penalty of the electric chair with the same calm, cool deliberation that he sent the soul of John Gorrell into oblivion. Send him down there and rub him out," Gilmer asked.

Stuart was the last of the defense staff to argue for the son of U. S. Judge Franklin Kenamer. He went and shook his white haired head as he begged the jury to decide the youth killed Gorrell because he was crazed by futile love for Virginia Wilcox, believing her life was threatened and his own endangered.

This, he said, would be a "needed contribution" to "real recovery."

Mr. Hoover's statement was telegraphed to New York last night from Tucson, Ariz., where the only living ex-president passed on route to his home at Palo Alto, Calif.

Foreign Markets and Future of American Cotton

For years and years cotton was the new money crop of Texas. Its surplus was sold in foreign lands. Now petroleum is the new money crop of Texas and its products are sold everywhere. President Roosevelt has declared the produced cotton barter deal with Germany to be dead. He explained that Germany offered 25 per cent in cash and 75 per cent in goods for American cotton. Then what happened? Lee the President tell it: "The question immediately arose with in the government and among the United States merchants, whether the 75 per cent in goods would not be material banned by that anti-dumping clause. Because of this the deal was finally abandoned.

Soviet Russia was to become a large buyer of American cotton. Soviet Russia asked for an American credit or loan of $100,000,000. Then the blow up came on the part of the Stalin government and the deal went up in smoke.

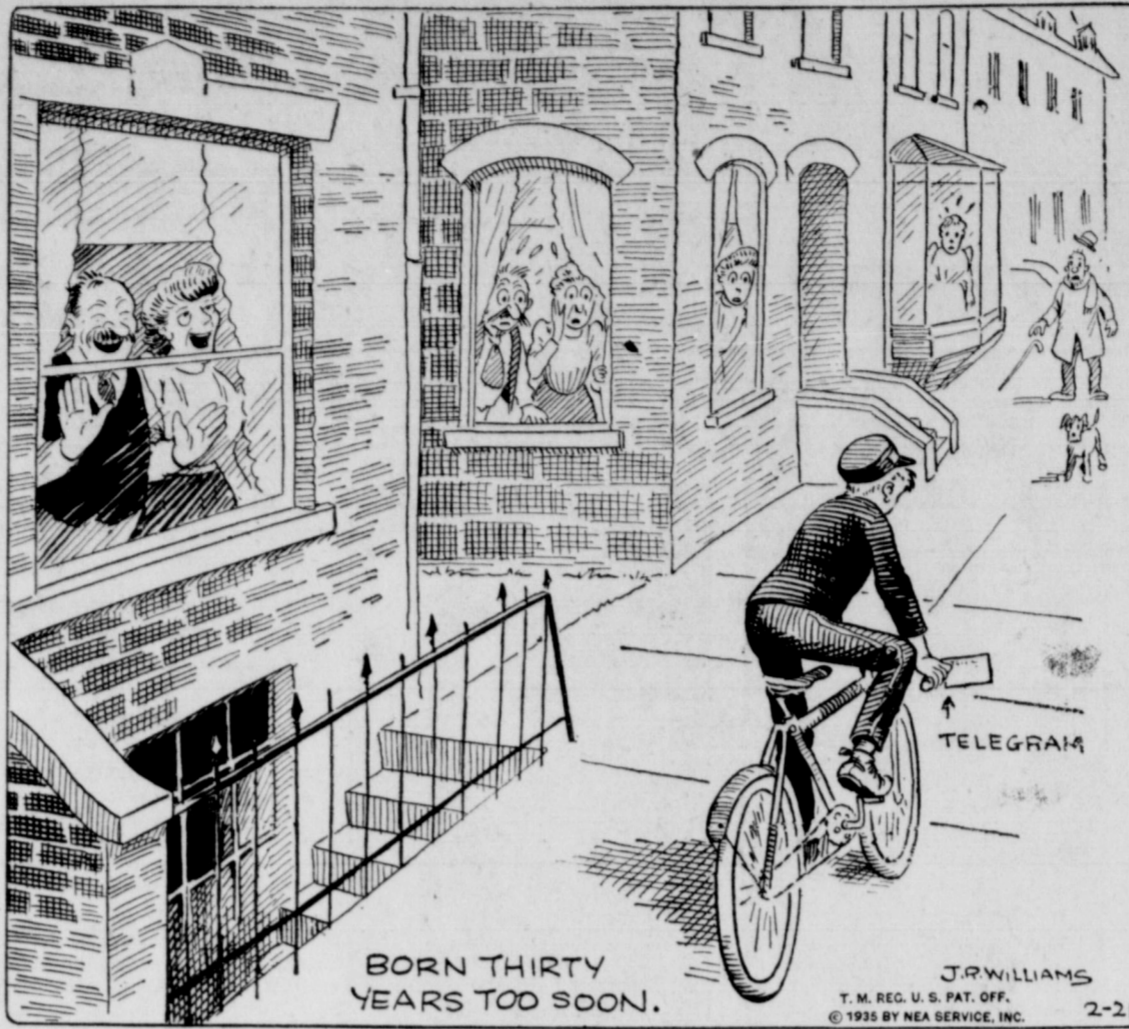

William L. Clayton of Texas is one of the largest exporters of American cotton. He appeared before senate agricultural committee and declared two major operations are necessary to restore the commodity export trade of American to its normal place. His testimony was interesting. He declared sweeping tariff reduction and war debt settlements must be made before America can expect to recover its world trade. He emphasized that war debts are the flies in the tea of foreign trade. He favored the repeal of the Hiram Johnson resolution which prohibits loans by America to nations in default on war debts as another way to restore foreign trade. He most sweepingly declared that America could never expect to cover her war debts "dollars dollar for dollar." To make himself clearly understood Witness Clayton shot this clincher: "THAT IS AN IMPOSSIBLE THING?"

To be exact, and in plain English, the American government, or rather the people, must make heavy loans to foreigners in order to win their trade. Well, Germany refused to accept the terms. Soviet Russia balked and negotiated a loan with the French government. There are millions of idle workmen in America, on the farms and in the industrial centers and thousands are known as white collar workers. America advanced billions in the shape of war loans and additional billions after the war was over. Now the proposal is that the tariff walls of the republic shall be battered down and that heavy loans must

Income Tax In A Nutshell

Deduction For Taxes

Taxes on real estate and personal property paid during the year 1934 are deductible against local benefits, such as streets, sidewalks, drainage, and other like improvements, are not deductible, for they tend to increase the value of the property and thus constitute cost of a permanent improvement. The Federal income tax may not be deducted. Income tax, however, paid to the State by an individual on his income is an allowable deduction on his Federal income-tax returns.

Customs duties paid by a person on articles imported for his own use are deductible. Admission taxes, imposed on admissions in excess of 40 cents, are deductible, but the taxpayer must show that account has been kept of the amount paid. Taxes on club dues are deductible by the member paying them. An individual may deduct the tax on his telephone conversations, radio messages, telegrams and cables, on the checks he has drawn, and on the rent of his safe deposit box.

License fees exacted by a State or city upon certain businesses are deductible as taxes. Automobile license fees are ordinarily taxes and deductible. Postage is not a tax and is not deductible. In general, taxes are deductible only by the person upon whom they are imposed.

Under the Revenue Act of 1934, no Federal estate taxes, State inheritance, estate, legacy, or succession taxes, or gift taxes are deductible on any income-tax return. The Federal taxes on automobiles, gasoline, and liquor are imposed upon the manufacturer, producer, or importer, and are not deductible by the purchaser or consumer. Whether or not the gasoline tax or the sales tax levied by a State may be deducted by the individual purchaser depends upon the terms of the State law imposing the tax, consequently the right to the deduction, as between purchaser and seller, varies in the different states.

Henderson, pretty and 23, silk mill. She and her brother, Phil, support her.

Gale to marry who also works at the mill. Vicky did not seem to hear them, to know they were there.

Brian asked quietly, "Why so silent, Vicky?"

"Oh, yes," she said, "I'm not—my head, she said, frowning slightly. "It's aching fearfully."

"Shall we leave?" Vicky hesitated. Then she said, "I believe I'd like to if you don't mind."

"I'll drive you home," he said. Five minutes later they were outside. Brian helped her into the coupe and she leaned back, breathing deeply. The fresh, cool air struck her face.

Vicky closed her eyes as Brian shifted into first and the car moved down the driveway.

Presently she opened them again. She said, "I feel better already. It was so stuffy at the club."

Brian nodded. "Yes, it was," he agreed. "Are you sure you're warm enough?"

"Oh, yes," she said. The collar of her fur coat had slipped to one side and she drew it into place. She said, "Let's not go home just yet. This air seems to be just what I needed. Let's drive out on the Morley Road."

Brian turned the car at the next corner and soon they were traveling along a country road with level fields on either side. Moonlight shone down, casting a silvery magic over the ground. Lights from farm house windows sparkled in the distance. Barns and clumps of trees were black, mysterious shadows.

Wind whipped Vicky's hair back and a tangle of it blew against Brian's cheek. He asked, "How's the head?"

"Much better," Vicky was silent.

went on. Only Vicky said nothing. She sat, very still and white, looking down at the silver bracelet on her wrist, fingering the bracelet mechanically. The voices of the others flowed around her. Vicky did not seem to hear them, to know they were there.

Brian asked quietly, "Why so silent, Vicky?"

"Oh, yes," she said, "I'm not—my head, she said, frowning slightly. "It's aching fearfully."

"Shall we leave?" Vicky hesitated. Then she said, "I believe I'd like to if you don't mind."

"I'll drive you home," he said. Five minutes later they were outside. Brian helped her into the coupe and she leaned back, breathing deeply. The fresh, cool air struck her face.

Vicky closed her eyes as Brian shifted into first and the car moved down the driveway.

Presently she opened them again. She said, "I feel better already. It was so stuffy at the club."

Brian nodded. "Yes, it was," he agreed. "Are you sure you're warm enough?"

"Oh, yes," she said. The collar of her fur coat had slipped to one side and she drew it into place. She said, "Let's not go home just yet. This air seems to be just what I needed. Let's drive out on the Morley Road."

Brian turned the car at the next corner and soon they were traveling along a country road with level fields on either side. Moonlight shone down, casting a silvery magic over the ground. Lights from farm house windows sparkled in the distance. Barns and clumps of trees were black, mysterious shadows.

Wind whipped Vicky's hair back and a tangle of it blew against Brian's cheek. He asked, "How's the head?"

"Much better," Vicky was silent.

for a time. She stole a swift look at the young man beside her and then plunged. He could not see that her eyes had darkened, did not notice the faintly perceptible change in her voice.

"Brian," Vicky said, "I've been thinking about things."

"What things?"

"Oh—everything. I'm so tired of doing the same things—shopping and playing bridge and going to parties. Seeing the same people and hearing them say the same things. You think I'm terribly frivolous, don't you. I'm not—I mean I don't want to. I wish I could do something that really counts."

"But you can, Vicky."

"I hadn't thought much about it," the girl went on, "before you came. You've made me realize how silly and foolish it is to waste time the way I have, the way almost everyone I know does. I want to work like you do."

Brian smiled grimly. "That's not much of an ambition," he said. "So far I haven't done anything at all."

"Oh, but you have! I've heard Father tell about it. He says it's wonderful the way you've taken hold at the mill."

"Then your father's not as observing as I thought he was. What do you want to do, Vicky? Is there anything special you have in mind?"

"Well, there is—" She hesitated. "I wanted to talk to you about it. I've been thinking I'd like to know more about the people who work at the mill. You're so interested in them. I'd like to—well, get acquainted and see if there aren't ways I could help them, little things I could do."

"I think that's a great idea, Vicky!"

"Do you, really? Oh, I'm so glad. Then will you help me with this?"

"Of course I will."

Vicky touched his arm. "You are sweet," she said. "I thought if I could get acquainted with some girls about my own age at first that would be the easiest way. You must know some of them, don't you? Will you take me to the mill village and introduce me?"

"There's one girl," Brian said slowly. "I might take you to see her—"

Vicky's eyes were watching him, narrowed, cat-like. "Then it's settled," she said. "When can we go—tomorrow?"

"No, not tomorrow. I could take you Tuesday."

"What time shall we go?"

"I'll have to be Tuesday evening. I'm busy all day, you know."

"I can hardly wait," Vicky told him—and meant every word of it. "I can hardly wait until Tuesday."

Gale looked at the dresses hanging limply in the clothes closet. There was very little choice—the black dress with the red buttons or the blue dress with the lighter blue collar. They were the only two that could be considered. The old brown crepe was hopeless since the rent had come into its skirt. It had been mended so often there was nothing to be done about it any longer.

Gale took out the blue dress and held it up before the mirror. It was older than the black one, but really more becoming. Yes, it had better be the blue. She'd rip off that collar and baste in a fresh white one.

She hunted for needle and thread, cheeks flushed, eyes shining. There was plenty of time. Brian wouldn't come before eight o'clock—eight-thirty, more likely. And yet her fingers were awkward as she tried to slip the thread into the needle. She had to do it over and over before the thread was secure.

There was a knock on the door and her brother opened it.

"Gale," he asked, "could you loan me a dollar?"

She took her purse from the dressing table and opened it. There were three crumpled dollar bills in the purse and some silver. She held out one of the bills.

Phil took it. "Thanks," he said. "I'll give it back to you on pay day."

"That's all right."

When he was gone the girl sat for a moment, staring at the floor. Oh, well, there was no use worrying about Phil. Not tonight, at least. Tonight—

Gale began basting the white collar into place. Even Phil's mysterious absences, his frequent need of money didn't seem so alarming tonight. For two days Gale had been living in a dream world. She had gone to work, cooked meals, washed dishes, made the beds and measured out her father's medicine without really knowing she was doing any of those things.

There were times when she couldn't believe the glorious secret locked away in her heart. There were times when she told herself that was a dream.

But it wasn't—it wasn't! Brian Westmore had said, "I love you, Gale. I think I've been in love with you from the very first time I saw you."

He had said that and he was coming tonight. There were so many things Gale should have done. Her father, of course, would have to know. She should have thought how she was to tell him, how she was to make him understand how really fine and sincere Brian was. There were things her father was sure to say—objections—and she should have thought how to meet them. She hadn't been able to settle any of those things. She hadn't been able to plan anything. Perhaps Brian could help. Of course he could. Brian could do anything!

The collar was in place now. Gale laid the dress aside and stood before the mirror. She brushed her hair until the bronze highlights in it flickered like gold. Her cheeks needed no rouge; the ivory skin glowed with the fire beneath it. She touched her face with a powder puff, studied the effect. She wanted so much to look her best tonight.

The blue dress went over her head. Yes, the white collar did make it look fresher. It was a cheap little dress, one Gale had made herself. She thought of the frock she would like to wear tonight, the sort to be seen in shop windows at the other side of town—sapphire satin or black velvet with silver buttons, slim and sophisticated.

She heard a knock on the outer door and for an instant her heart ceased beating. Then she hurried into the living room. She opened the door, said "Good evening," and then stepped back.

Gale's eyes, wide, searched the shadows. Vicky Thatcher was facing her and behind Vicky, half in darkness, stood Brian Westmore. (To Be Continued)

THREE SUPERB TALENTS JOIN IN PICTURE

Three supreme figures of screen, stage and vaudeville are brought together in Fox Film's "The Little Colonel" which comes Friday to the Lyric Theatre.

They are Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore and Bill Robinson.

Shirley Temple, the foremost child actress, can be counted among the miracles of movie history. Within six months, she has scaled to stardom and now ranks among the ten best box-office stars. She is the first child actor today to attain this honor. Today this prodigy counts her fans by the millions.

Co-starring with Shirley is Lionel Barrymore, easily the screen's leading character actor, one whose presence lends distinction to any role.

Bill Robinson of course has a niche for himself as the originator of the imitable stair dance which, is the last word in tap dancing. The stairs on which he used to dance on the stage were inconsequential beside the two elaborate flights of fifteen and ten steps, on which he dances alone, and with Shirley.

"Little Colonel," from the pen of Annie Fellows Johnston, has been read in book form by millions. It is the tale of a Kentucky rebel who didn't know the Civil War was over. He banishes his daughter when she weds a Yankee. The disinherited daughter goes with her husband to the Indian frontier, where their daughter become the honorary colonel of a regiment. Later, in the duel of a golden-locked colonel of five, and a crusty colonel of fifty, the youngster sends her battery of charm against the older.

Others in the cast of this De Silva production are Evelyn Venable, John Lodge, and Sidney Blackmer. Part of the picture is filmed in glowing Technicolor.

customer which will mean an entire family trade and possibly an entire neighborhood trade for many years to come. Good-will has a cash value. Where good-will and neighborliness are made means for rendering greater service, both parties of the relationship are benefited. We shouldn't leave it up to the political candidate in election years to make the visits to the rural communities. Walter Burr, in his book on small towns quotes King, of the "king-road-drag" fame, as saying that when a merchant rolls his car into the farmers yard which he may do on rare occasions, the farmer knows he is there for one or two purposes: He wants the farmer to assist in grading of a road to town, or to vote for a certain candidate for office. There is a trade extension committee of the Chamber of Commerce. We know they are anxious to do something. Why let such an important committee remain dormant and idle?

On March 22 begins the county meet which will be held in Eastland. People from every section of the county will be here for the event. Eastland has an unusual opportunity to show itself at its best. Mr. Palm, principal of the Eastland high school, remarked to this columnist recently that the school here was attempting to raise funds for the event through plays, etc., and that they didn't want to ask the business interests to contribute any money. Our suggestion to the business men is to get in touch with Mr. Palm, through their Chamber of Commerce or otherwise, find out how much money it will take to have a successful county meet, and get busy and get it without a whimper, and then get busy and cash in on the opportunity to make new friends, sell Eastland more solid to its trade and suburban communities and let folks of Eastland county know what a good town we have, and that it is a wonderful place to do their trading by giving values, with interesting side entertainment. As we understand it, last year was the first time that Eastland had the county meet, and we've got it again. The way to keep this valuable annual event is to make efforts to keep it. It can't be done with the Eastland business interests sitting by and letting the school authorities shoulder the entire burden, particularly when it is the merchants who will profit by the venture, if they go after it.
