There is Still Much Work Left for Us to Do

Those sleeky, streamlined trains that the railway lines have been throwing about the country lately come close to being the most encouraging single thing that has happened since the depression.

Or, to be more exact, the public's response to them does.

Since those trains appeared, the newspapers and magazines have been full of predictions of vast new railroad construction programs. Hand in hand with this has come a great revival of interest in new types of construction in other fields.

Makers of steel houses are stirring from the long sleep. Automobile makers are playing around with new designs. Even the output of such things as refrigerators and household furniture has been affected.

Now all this, to begin with, is simply the process of putting ourselves on tiptoe to peer into an enormous new field that is fairly begging for industrial expansion.

A great opportunity awaits American business, somewhere not far off; it begins to look as if we would be moving into it in the near future.

But there is more to it than that. It also signifies the revival of the old, traditional American spirit. We are discovering that the world is not coming to an end, after all-that there is work to be done, and lots of it, and that we might just as well roll up our sleeves and get busy on it.

We talked so much about over-production, over-expansion, and over-capitalization in the last four years that we fooled ourselves into thinking that we had left our golden age away off behind us somewhere.

Then we saw a couple of brand-new types of railroad train, did a little meditation, and discovered that it just wasn't so.

There is enough work crying to be done in this country to keep us all busy for generations.

When we have remade the world's greatest railroad system, rebuilt some millions of homes, harnessed all our
