Another Body Blow Given NRA Recovery Act

There is an election coming next year. A third of the membership of the senate will face the voters of their respective states for re-election. The United States senate voted to extend the NRA until April 1, 1936, after eliminating its price fixing provisions and limiting its regulations to interstate commerce. President Roosevelt asked for an extension of its life for two years.

All this happened after the senate had backed up the New Deal power program against in adverse court decision, voting 56 to 19 to give the Tennessee Valley author ity specific power "to generate, transmit and sell electrical energy." Only a score of senators were in the chamber when the NRA extension measure was passed without a record vote. Senator Lafollette, progressive, of Wisconsin, warned that it "would kill the recovery law as dead as a doornail," but he said the house will grant the two years extension recommended and then the conferees named by the house and the senate will complete the job.

Texans are reminded that the senate resolution would extend the recovery law "with price fixing eliminated except in mineral natural resource industries and with purely intra-state business exempt from the code structure." Texas is the greatest of oil and gas mineral natural resource industries. Eternal vigilance appears to be the price of liberty today as it was in colonial times, when freemen were preparing to battle for a republic of their own.

This was twilight, Not the Montana twilight Michael knew and loved, with its sudden drop from full day to dusk, its almost dazzling, crystaline coolness, but an eastern twilight, warm and heavy and languid. The day had been extremely hot. Michael drove out of the lane and down the road toward the village.

On the porch of the Merser house two small girls dressed in sleeveless thin frocks were having their supper. They both waved wildly to Michael as he passed, and he waved back. Sybil and Diana adored him already. They had had three riding les-By HAMLIN

He frowned. The mortgage on the place, the old Rogers' that he had bought so confidently last year, would fall due in September. He hadn't realized the taxes would be so high. Hadn't known about that special assessment, either. He gritted his teeth, remembering the figures as he had gone over them last night. He had pared expenses to the bone-yet the place wasn't paying. All his savings had gone into the purchase of the club. He simply had to make it go.

The bank held the mortgage. Innicock Trust & National. Michael was going down tonight to see about it. See if he couldn't get a renewal.

He went through the shabby portion of the village that lay just west of the railroad tracks. The old red brick station with a modern background of up-to-date landscaping lay bathed in a wash of clear late sunshine. Every spear of grass stood separately apart and every single petnuia in the round beds blazed with added color. Several stout, weary women with little children in tow sat limply on the benches in the station park. Michael sat down and lighted a cigaret. Something must have gone wrong in Mr. Moon's plans. Well, Sally would explain.

She came in presently, a breathless scrap of femininity, with her dark curls tumbled around her face, her voice breaking into constant laughter.

"Michael, I am so sorry! Whatver must you think of me?" He stood, smiling down at her. at her troubled eyes, at the halfearnest, half-pretended seriousness of her tone. A small girl, Sally Moon, although one day she

That is-oh, I'm getting this all mixed up. He did come home, about 5. But he had to rush right off again and I told him you wanted to see him and he said tomorrow would do just as well . . '
