America, the Country Of Inconsistencies

An English visitor not long ago made a three or four weeks' trip across the United States, and the things he saw impressed him so deeply that he had to retire to his study at once and write a book.

In this book, according to advance reports, he expresses his utter amazement at the contradictions he found in American life. Accustomed to the staid and orderly conditions of England, he was bewildered and a little appalled by what he saw over here.

These things being so, his only possible recourse was to turn author and speak his mind about things.

It is impossible not to feel a little sympathy for him, because if there ever was a country which it is impossible to understand at a glance it is this America of ours.

Some of us, indeed, have lived in it all our lives and still don't understand it. It is, all in all, about as amazing a land of contrasts and contradictions, as human beings ever made.

It is a land which professionalizes college athletes and makes heroes out of prize fighters and baseball players; it is also a land which produces scientists like Millikan and Compton and casts a 200-inch telescope to look at stars that man never saw before.

It is the land where the dollar is worshipped, but it is also the land which is willing to go seven to eight billion dollars in the hole in an effort to break its way out of a trade depression.

It is the land of cheap movies, cheaper radio, and "society leaders" who endorse tooth paste for pay—and it is also the land that produces persons like Jane Addams and gives men like Leopold Stokowski free rein to create beauty.

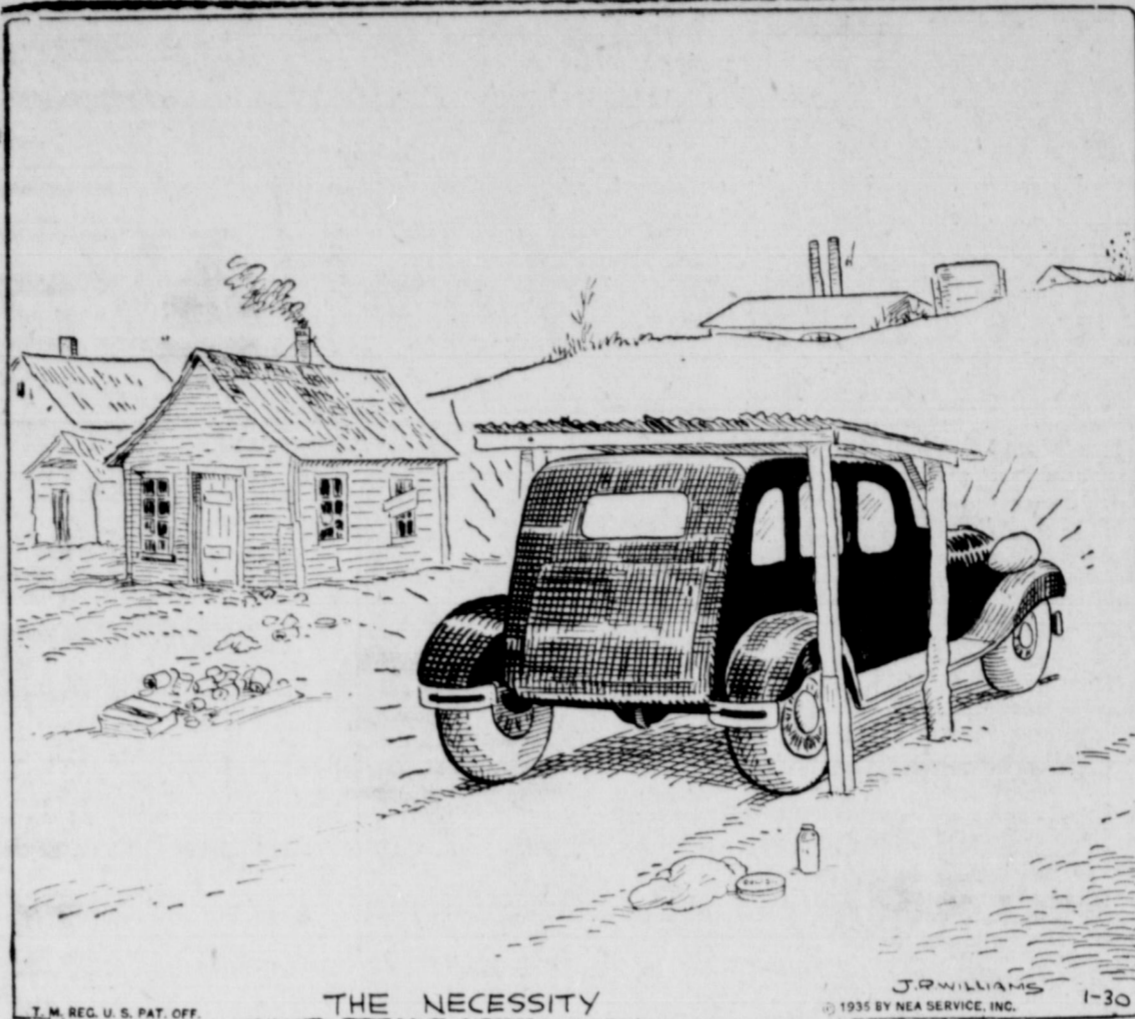

It puts a Huey Long in its Senate, and then counterbalances him with a George W. Norris. It is the land of the Lindbergh kidnaping, but it is also the land which produced Lindbergh himself.

It is world-famous as a land of boasters, but for years it has paid good money to foreign authors and lecturers to tell it what is wrong with it.

It is the hard-hearted land of lynchings, and it is the generous land which will send millions of dollars to Japanese earthquake victims. It maintains a gigantic navy and spends millions on aircraft, but it is the only nation brave enough to expose the chicanery of munitions manufacturers.

You could go on like that for an hour. How, indeed,

"OUT OUR WAY" - - - - - By Williams

is any foreigner to understand such a people?

A compound of wisdom and foolishness, of braggadocio and humility, of strength and weakness—we can't understand ourselves.

We can only sense that we are a strange people of infinite possibilities, who are building a society unlike any other on earth. . . . and our saving grace is that the fact that we have the courage and the idealism to insist that it shall also be better than any other.

When you are served in a store by a clerk who really seems interested in you and what you purchase, you are pleased and go back again when you are in a buying mood.

'Dusting the Covers of Texas History' for The Texas Centennial Celebrations of 1936

Father Manuel de Silva and Father Joseph Francisco Mariano Garza were making their plans for the building of a mission in the Gulf Coast region of Texas. It was the winter of 1790. In spite of the cold rains and quarrelsome tribes and unfavorable reports, the two men had set about to make an inspection tour of that region, in order to convert and civilize the tribes. Father Silva firmly believed that the Karankawas would accept them if they were treated in the right manner, and he was determined to make a success of his work.

Twenty-three years passed before he had the opportunity to even investigate the territory. Taking Father Garza with him in 1790, he visited the tribes, making friends with some, and gaining no headway with others. The two fathers established themselves in a presidio near Rosario. Some of the converted Indians assured their friends at Rosario that the Spaniards would help them and be their friends, and soon the Indians were inviting the priests to their own homes, sharing their food and game, proudly displaying their blankets, rugs, and sharp tomahawks. Wherever the missionaries visited the Karankawa camps, they were treated as friends. All too soon the good work was interrupted by the recall of Father Silva to Zacatecas. Cautioning Father Garza to time and again to keep on peaceful terms with the military authorities, Father Silva regretfully left his co-oworker to carry on. The seed of Christianity and civilization had been planted on the Gulf Coast, and it was to grow and improve with the succeeding years. In the meantime, Father Garza kept before his mind constantly the silent pledge he and Father Silva had made to the dead Father Margil, and continued his work with the Indians.

Income Tax In A Nutshell

Forms For Making Returns

Forms for filing returns of income for 1934 have been sent to persons who filed returns last year. Failure to receive a form, however, does not relieve a taxpayer of his obligation to file his return and pay the tax on time, on or before March 15 if the return is made on the calendar year basis, as is the case with most individuals.

Forms may be obtained upon request, written or personal, from the offices of collectors of internal revenue and deputy collectors. Persons whose net income for 1934 was derived chiefly from salary or wages and was not in excess of $5,000 should make their returns on form 1040A, a single sheet. Persons whose net income was in excess of $5,000, or, regardless of amount, was derived from a business, profession, rents or sale of property, are required to use a larger form, 1040. Failure to use the proper form presents difficulties to both the taxpayer and the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Therefore, it is emphasized that a taxpayer engaged in a business or profession from which he derived a net income of less than $5,000 is required to use the larger form.

The return must be filed with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which the taxpayer has his legal residence or principal place of business on or before midnight of March 15, 1935. The tax may be paid in full at the time of filing the return or in four equal installments, due on or before March 15, June 15, September 15, and December 15.

Anti-Long March Is Being Planned

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 30. The bitter Anti-Long Square Deal Association today organized battalions of citizens in all parts of the State to march on the capitol, if Long calls another special session of the legislature to strengthen his dictatorship.

Activity of Gov. O. K. Allen and the confidential statements of members of the Long machine, indicated a special session would be called, probably beginning on Sunday night, to legislate more Long enemies out of public office and possibly call a constitutional convention to re-make the constitution to conform with Long's political principle.

The Square Deal association planned to assemble an unarmed citizens "army" near Baton Rouge a few hours before the first session of the new legislature and march on the capitol in a body.

Normandie Uses Material From U.S.

PARIS, France.—Although "Buy French" is the modern hue and cry, part of the giant French liner Normandie will be "Made in America."

Scheduled to sail in May on its maiden voyage to New York, the Normandie is thoroughly French in design, conception and material, but its motor equipment will come from General Electric company's French subsidiary...

The searchlights on the bridge will be provided by the Sperry Gyroscope company of Brooklyn, and the refrigerating equipment will bear the American stamp "Frigidaire."

The French line has announced that the Normandie will sail from Le Havre on May 29 on its first voyage to New York, where it is due on June 3. The first eastward voyage will begin from New York on June 7.

French firms naturally have been used wherever possible, but in certain cases the French product was not quite up to the American, in which case the order has been placed with the French subsidiary of the American firm concerned, practically all being represented here.

SILKEN SPINDLES

By Laura Lu Brookman © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Gale Henderson, pretty and 23, works in a silk mill. She and her 19-year-old brother, Phil, support their invalid father.

Steve Meyers, who also works in the mill, asks Gale to marry him. She promises to give him an answer in a few days.

Gale goes skating, breaks through the ice and is rescued by Brian Westmore, whose father, now dead, built the mill. Brian asks Gale to wait while he gets his car but when he returns she is gone.

Brian has come home after two years in Paris, convinced he can never become an artist and ready to go to work in the mill. Vicky Thatcher, daughter of Robert Thatcher, general manager of the mill, schemes to captivate Brian.

Brian sees Gale in the mill and is amazed to find she is an employee. Vicky telephones that her car has broken down. Brian takes her home and on the way they witness a street fight between Phil Henderson and Ed Vogel.

The heavy porcelain dishes clattered and voices buzzed—now rising and lowering in volume, broken in upon by shrill laughter or a sharp exclamation. It was lunch time for the day shift in the mill.

Gale Henderson, halted by the line in front, rested her tray against the steam table. She nodded and said, "Yes—the tomato soup," to the woman across the counter. Someone joggled Gale's elbow as the woman set the bowl on the tray and the thick red liquid splashed. Gale turned. She heard the voice of a girl in front:

"Suppose you heard about the fight last night?"

"You mean Vogel and Phil Henderson?" It was a different girl speaking now.

"Yeah. Know what started it?"

"Ruby, I suppose."

"Sure. What all these guys see in that dame—but I guess it was some fight! Phil ought to know better than to try to cut in on Ed Vogel."

"Say, I thought it was just the other way around!"

The first girl shook her head knowingly. "No, I've got the straight of it," she said. "Blanche Ryan told me and she used to go around with Ruby all the time. Blanche says it's the limit—the way Ruby is always two-timing guys. Just the same, Phil ought to leave Vogel alone. Ed Vogel can lick any man in the mill. That's what my brother says."

The two girls had reached the end of the line and made their way toward a table. Gale halted, holding her tray. Color flamed in her cheeks. She was angry at the girls, angry at Phil. What a way for him to behave! No wonder he'd left the house so early this morning. Fighting with a brute like Ed Vogel. Over a girl like Ruby Griffith! That's who they meant, of course.

She wished she didn't have to sit with anyone at lunch today. But she did. There were no individual tables in the mill cafeteria. There was Josie Gridley at a table where there was a vacant place.

Gale made her way toward it.

Josie said, "Hi, Gale. Sure there's room for you," and pushed some dishes aside. "Well," she went on, "what do you think of the new boss?"

"The new boss?"

Josie nodded. "Brian Westmore," she explained. "The old man's son. They say he's going to work here now—that is, if you can call it work, sitting in a swell office like Thatcher's, giving orders and all that. That was him Thatcher was piloting around yesterday. Didn't you see 'em?"

"Yes," Gale said, "I saw them, but what makes you think Brian Westmore's going to stay here? Maybe he's just home for a visit."

Josie's nod was negative and emphatic. "No," she said, "Bill Keeley knows a fellow in the business office and he said—this fellow Bill knows, I mean—that young Westmore's got a special office, right next to Thatcher's. Gee, he's swell looking! Don't you think so? Tall and dark and such swell clothes. They say he's been everywhere—all around the world."

"And he paints pictures," the girl across the table put in. "That's what he was doing in Paris. Painting pictures!"

"I'll bet that wasn't all he did," her neighbor added knowingly. "I've seen it in the movies—the way they cut loos in Paris. Champagne and swell parties and girls dressed up in feathers and not a stitch of anything else. I saw a movie just last week where there was a fellow who was an artist."

"What I want to know," Josie interrupted, "is why he came back to this place. Imagine a guy with the money Brian Westmore's got, able to go anywhere he wants to and do anything he pleases. Imagine coming to this place!"

There was a chorus of agreement. "Gee, I know what I'd do—" the girl across the table began, but again Josie cut her short.

"Look," she said, pointing to the clock on the wall. "Seven minutes and you've got to be back on the job. Wonder how long Mr. Brian Westmore gets for lunch. D'you suppose they cut his pay if he's a minute late?"

"Well, they'll cut yours," the other girl snapped back. "I wouldn't care how many new bosses we got if only it wasn't so hot and close. Honest, this morning I could hardly breathe!"

"It was bad," Gale agreed. "Worse than usual."

Josie pushed her chair back. "I'll drop in and mention the fact to Thatcher," she said sarcastically. "Or Mr. Westmore. I saw they'd be glad to do anything to make their dear employees happier!"

Josie arose and a moment later Gale followed her. She joined the throng in the hall just as the warning bell rang. "If only I knew what to do about Phil," she thought again. "If only I knew how to help him!"

She was back at her place, hands ready, a full minute ahead of time. The warm, moist air pressed about her. Now the spindles were dancing again. The machines roared. Sixty women in blue dresses, heads and fingers moving as though they were machines, too, clamped, snapped them off. Human arms and machine arms; human fingers and machine fingers; up and down, up and down—

That was the afternoon Connie Bauman fainted. Gale didn't see what happened. She didn't know anything about it until she heard Fisher, the foreman, saying something in a loud voice. Gale turned and saw Connie on the floor. Another girl was leaning over her and Fisher was beside them.

"Here, you," he called to Gale. "Help us get her out of here!"

They had to carry her. Connie's eyes opened when they were in the corridor. She tried to speak but, though her lips moved, no sound came. They took her through a door marked "Emergency," into a little room in which there was a couch.

A cowl of half a dozen had gathered about the door. Someone said, "They ought to keep her head down. They ought to put water on her face." Another said, "My sister fainted once—"

"Get back to your machines," Fisher ordered. "I'll take care of this."

Gale, turning into the hall, almost walked into a tall young man in a brown suit. It was Brian Westmore.

"What's happened?" he asked.

"Was it an accident—is anyone hurt?"

Gale said, "A girl fainted. She's in there—"

She slipped past him then, hurrying down the hall. "Wait a minute!" Brian called. He took a step after her, but the girl apparently did not hear. She was out of sight in another instant, disappearing through a door from which came the grinding roar of the machines.

Connie did not come back to work that afternoon. Voices buzzed in the wash room at quitting time. Someone said Connie'd been warned by a doctor that her lungs were infected. Another said, no, it wasn't her lungs; it was her heart. There were rumors that she'd been rushed to the hospital, that her brother's wife had come for her, that Connie had recovered completely and walked home.

"I like to fainted myself," a girl beside Gale fretted. "Hot as it was today! It's bad enough most of the time, but today—"

"Yes," Gale agreed, "it was worse than usual."

"Know what I think's the matter with Connie?" the other went on.

"What?"

"I think she's starving herself, that's what I think. She doesn't buy any lunch, you know. Just brings something. All she had the other day was an apple—I know because I saw her eating it here in the wash room. She said something about not being hungry and having had a big breakfast, but I didn't believe a word of it. Connie lives with her brother and his wife and he ain't been workin', you know. Laid off a month ago. I don't think they've got anything but just what Connie makes—"

Gale nodded. She said, "Yes, I think that's what the matter with Connie. She shouldn't do it. She won't be able to work if she doesn't eat."

The other girl turned away. Gale put on her coat and hat and went down the corridor. Outside she faced Brian Westmore. He was smiling and he said, "I thought if you were going down the street you might let me walk along with you."

Commission Warns Of Mis-Information About Civil Exams

WASHINGTON.—The United States Civil Service Commission says that numerous letters received at its office from different parts of the country indicate that misleading information is being given to the public by agents of some of the correspondence schools which give instruction in preparation for civil-service examinations.

To guard against the loss of money paid for tuition of this kind the Civil Service Commission informs the public as follows:

No one can promise appointments to positions for which the United States Civil Service commission holds examinations. The claim that such assurance can be given brands the person making it as a fraud.

Information regarding examinations for the United States Civil Service may be obtained from the boards of United States Civil Service Examiners. There is such a board in each community which has a post office of the first or second class. In nearly all cities the civil service board is located at the post office.

Before paying money for tuition, or signing a contract, it is advisable to make inquiry concerning the prospect of examination. There is reason to believe that agents of some schools deceive the public as to the probability of early examinations.

No school has advance information regarding the need for employees or the probability of examinations.

DEATH FOILED BY 45 IN SHIPWRECK

Death was cheated by moments when the 45 members of the crew of this Japanese freighter, the Hoku-maru, were rescued by the Dollar Line's President Jackson. The freighter is shown, listing heavily to starboard, as it sinks, prey of a terrific North Pacific storm off the Washington coast. At the left, the last lifeboat is pulling away from the doomed ship. At the right, a lifeboat drifts, abandoned by the rescue vessel in the furious storm.
