Crew Is Held At Bay While Safe Looted

LONG BEACH, Calif., July 8.—Five modern "pirates" armed with shotguns, boarded the gambling ship Monte Carlo at 5 a. m. today, forced members of the crew to open the safe and took $32,000. They fled in a small, white power boat.

CREW IS HELD AT BAY WHILE SAFE LOOTED

Daring Daybreak Robbery Nets Five Pirates $32,000 From Ship.

Ed Turner, owner of the barge, said the men carried shotguns and were disguised by stockings pulled over their heads. Eye holes had been cut in the masks.

A few hours before the robbery hundreds of week-end gamblers had been taken to shore in speed boats. Only Turner and members of the crew were on board. While members of the pirate crew held Turner and his aides at bay, others forced Turner's cashier to open the safe. They seized the money, went over the side and their power boat sped toward shore and hundreds of inlets, docks and miles of beaches which offered concealment or a place to land.

Cotton Acreage Is Slightly Above That of Last Year

WASHINGTON, July 8.—The Department of Agriculture today placed cotton acreage of July 1, at 29,166,000 acres and increase of four and six-tenths per cent over last years acreage on that date.

With Bankhead act restrictions in effect, however, the acreage is 28.6 per cent less than the average for 1929-33 and the smallest, except last years, since 1906. Last year's total yield was 9,569,038 bales. With average yield per acre the year's crop would be slightly larger. Acreage increases were shown for all major states except Oklahoma, ranging from 4 per cent in North Carolina to 10 per cent in Louisiana.

Planes Without Men Next War Dread

If you want to get a shuddery new glimpse of what warfare in the future is apt to be like, you might study specifications of the new airplane which has been undergoing tests by the British Air Ministry.

This plane is almost completely automatic. With no human being aboard, and all controls operated by a complicated radio device, it can take off by itself, fly to a height of two miles, speed along along at 1200 miles an hour, perform all kinds of twists, turns, and dives in the air, and then make a safe landing.

To date the British authorities have used it only for flying tests and for target practice. They admit, however, that it would be a simple matter to turn it into a bomber, with radio-controlled apparatus for releasing its deadly cargo—and your imagination can fill in the rest of the picture.

Imagine a fleet of these grim machines flying toward a city—an entirely automatic fleet, without a man aboard, ready to shower bombs on factories and railroad stations, on homes and school houses, impervious to any danger or threat of death, riding soullessly through the sky under the control of some super-radio operator safe on the ground miles away!

It is the kind of picture that makes cold shivers race up and down one's back. The sheer impersonality of such an attacking fleet, its utter lack of any human attributes, would provide war with its ultimate horror.

To be sure, a vision of this kind won't become a reality tomorrow. Ingenious as this automatic plane is, it still needs improving; it cannot, for instance, fly more than 10 miles away from its radio controls at present.

But it is a safe bet that limitation will be dropped before long, and that these automatic bombing fleets will be regular equipment for every air force before many years have passed.

And yet, in spite of the grim menace of this forecast, one might wonder if inventions such as this may not, eventually, make war less deadly.

Every time an ordinary plane is replaced by one of these radio-controlled planes, one pilot is saved from the risk of death. Does this weird invention foreshadow the day when all our fighting will be done mechanically—when we shall send out machines, and not men, to destroy one another?

Altogether, the idea seems to offer queer alternatives. If we don't first blow our civilization to bits, we may some day arrive at the stage in which we fight battles that don't hurt anybody.

The Standard, Buenos Aires, Argentina, tells us in their "Random Topics" column that history has taught us that the chivalrous actions of men pale into insignificance when compared with accomplishments and sacrifices made by women.

Nothing helps a city as much as a good appearance. To be known as a clean city, a busy city, a god city in which to live is something to be proud of.

Men build cities, not locations.

Floods May Cause Typhoid Epidemic

AUSTIN.—Recent floods may be responsible for an epidemic of typhoid fever, declares Dr. John W. Brown, state health officer. Flood conditions have prevailed over most of the state and unless the utmost precautions are observed to prevent this disease the monetary loss from illness may equal the property loss.

Such treatments are advised for public and well water supplies; (3) extermination of flies; (4) healthy food handlers; (5) supervision of disease carriers; (6) public milk supplies of high quality with the added safeguard of careful pasteurization.

CHAPTER I
JO DARIEN straightened from the trunk she was packing and regarded her roommate with disapproval. "Haven't you any packing to do Tubby?" she asked. Tubby Davis nodded. Dark and complacently buxom, Tubby sat on the window ledge swinging her simple legs continuously. At about every tenth crack of such heels against the woodwork she took a chocolate from the disheveled box in her lap and popped it into her mouth.

There was something in Jo Darien's blond beauty that reflected the windswept freedom of the sea . . . brave and clean and breathless.

"As you know, Jo, there wasn't much left after the sale of your father's store. By the time he had paid the bills he owed, and the back taxes on the house, there was even less than he planned. Of course it would have worked out all right if he had received the appointment he was promised. But your Uncle Frank isn't in the same department as he was at the state house, and since being transferred he doesn't seem to have anything to say about who shall have a job. His last letter to your father was anything but encouraging.

CHAPTER I
"Satisfied?" inquired an arrogant voice, and Jo whirled to see Babs Montgomery framed in the doorway. "Tubby said you were busy packing—and here I find you taking inventory of your charms. Are they all there?" "I—I was just thinking," Jo said. Somehow, much as she disliked Babs, the girl had the power to disconcert her, to throw her off balance. "Oh, thinking?" said Babs. "Then you've a brain, too? What a catch for some summer beach Romeo! By the way, where're you going to spend your summer, Jo?" "I hadn't thought about it," Jo lied. "I suppose I'll go home first." "I'm tired of the seashore," said Babs in a bored tone. "I think this year I'd like the mountains—of course, where they have handsome dude cowboys. What I'd really like to do is take a summer tour to Europe, but Dad's set his foot down on that. He hasn't forgotten the time I went to Mexico City! By the way, I saw Bret this afternoon." "Did you?" Jo resumed her packing. "Yes, I offered him a spin, but he had to go to the library. It's a shame how that man works! He studies like a mad person, and does odd jobs to boot. Is it true he's a life guard in the summer?" "Is there anything wrong about being a life guard?" asked Jo acidly. "Not in the least. Especially if there are pretty girls to save." Babs took a cigarette from her silver bag, lit it carefully with her sliver pocket torch. "What Bret Paul should do is marry money. It's a rotten scheme for a man like that to be born poor." "If I know Bret," Jo replied trying to keep the anger from her voice, "he'd rather work for what he gets—even if it's only a little." Babs shrugged. "I've heard there are people like that." She turned toward the door. "If I don't see you until next fall, pleasant vacation!" "Thanks Babs." No sooner had Babs left the room than Tubby reappeared, her amiable face a study in mock astonishment. "Did I hear Miss Montgomery wishing you a pleasant vacation?" "You did. . . and where's the trunk you were going to pack?" "I decided it was too near dinner-time to start packing. I'll just wait until tomorrow. I always feel better in the mornings, anyhow. You'd better get ready for dinner, Jo." "I'm not having dinner here, Tubby."

CHAPTER I-A
"Nothing," Bret said, "can happen in a year to make any difference."
he back next year. I've got to find a job—and right away, too."
The other regarded her for a scant moment, then took both Jo's hands in her own. "So that's it!" She shook her head gravely. "I'm darned sorry, Jo. And I think I know just how you feel. It's not just finding a job, or leaving school, maybe forever that worries you. It's taking a chance of losing Bret." Jo met Tubby's gaze unflinchingly. "Suppose you're right?" "I know cockeyed well I'm right! None of the boys pay any attention to me because I'm fat—but I know what it's all about just the same. I like being fat, and watching the skinnier girls get your selves into over men. Now are you coming down to dinner?" Jo tried to smile. "No, I know it's silly feeling this way, but I can't help it."
Tubby released her hands. "Of course you can't. And you'd be crazy to come down and eat with that cackling mob if you didn't feel like it."
"Oh, Tubby!" Jo embraced those well-padded shoulders hard. "Tubby, you're the grandest person I've ever known."
"Skip it," Tubby told her, blink her eyes suspiciously. "Just hit house. . . and though we part, we'll come together again. . . Hurriedly Jo pressed on. Past the library beyond the low engineering laboratory where Bret spent most of his hours, clear down to the president's house at the very tip of the campus. Then she doubted back walking even faster now for she had come farther than she planned, and Bret would be waiting for her on the steps of the library.
"Hello, Jo darling!" He peered down at her in the darkness. "Anything wrong? You sounded upset over the telephone."
Jo shook her head. "It isn't anything. Bret. Only you know how we'd planned. I would spend a week at Harvard beach where you're a summer job?"
"Don't tell me you can't."
"I'm afraid that's it, Bre."
His voice usually so light and boyish was filled with dismay. "You mean I won't see you until next fall?"
"If you see me then, I have to find a job. Bret I'm hoping, I can find something here in the city. But if I can't find it here then I'll just have to go where there is a job."
His arm tightened around her waist. "Something wrong at home?"
"It's just that Dad and Mother aren't exactly rich, and it's mostly up to me now."
"Gosh darling, that's tough."
At Bret's ingenuous tone Jo couldn't restrain a laugh. "You seem to thrive under similar circumstances, Bret. Any reason why I shouldn't?"
"But you're a woman!"
"Heavens! Don't tell me you're old-fashioned enough to believe a woman shouldn't work!"
He turned her toward him. "You shouldn't. And if I only I were through the university and we could—"
"But we can't," Jo said. And then she added, "At least not now."
"But in another year I'll graduate and old Prof Keagles will set me in somewhere. Then we'll be married!" He looked down at her nervously. "Nothing can happen in a year to make any difference between us!"
Jo couldn't reply at once, because just then he bent down swiftly and kissed her hard. And even if he hadn't kissed her she would have had no answer to his question. What could happen in a year out beyond the campus? It wasn't a thing to think about now. The problem of what they should do and do. Something better than either of them was planning for them. Tomorrow she had to start hunting a job and had to start preparations to go to Harvard beach. She had so much money to spend. His that went at the university. (To Be Continued)
