

Court Upholds Hauptmann Death Sentence

That reminds me...

Picked this up in one of our exchanges which is food for thought. It is reliably estimated that the public utility industry spent approximately $1,500,000 in its effort to present its side of the holding company issue to the public and government officials.

"Contrary to what politicians claim, the $1,500,000 did not come out of the pockets of the ratepayers, but out of the pockets of the stockholders. Under the American system of state regulation of utility operating companies, they are permitted to earn only a limited and definite profit above the expenses of carrying on the business.

"The politicians have likewise said that spending $1,500,000 by utility managements amounted to misappropriation of the money. The number of utility stockholders in existence is reported to be in the neighborhood of five million—if the $1,500,000 had been divided among them, each would have received an average of about 30c. Not very much to defend a $15,000,000,000 business."

Proving that modern commercial appliances are not new, a student delving into the archives of ancient history answered the professor, that the loose leaf system was used in the garden of Eden. When industry first started on its upward movement for general service to humanity it took the efforts of all concerned; business was little, all of it; business had its ups and downs when it was little; it had its drawbacks, just as big business has today.

For a couple of centuries the American farmer has always been in a position to plant what he wanted, when he wanted, where he wanted; sell at any time he got ready at any price that he wanted to sell for. Everything looked rosy when the idea of plowing up crops was introduced, but now when it comes to the point of the realization that the farmers signed up an iron clad agreement that they could only raise so much and only sell so much, it doesn't look so rosy. And in fact it isn't.

Returning from Washington, where he was in conference with heads of the Resettlement Administration, the director said procedure is now being worked out, and allocation of funds made, under which the pick of rehabilitation families will be accepted for the new and permanent phase of Resettlement, under which they will be given opportunity to purchase small farms.

Let Us First Provide Wealth, To Share It

The bullet that let the life out of Huey Long also deflated the most promising (or menacing, if you prefer) of the political movements based on the simple discontent of the man whose pockets are empty.

Since people of this kind have been numerous of late, their their resentment has been great, Senator Long was able to ride a long way and looked like riding farther.

But although he is gone and the movement he led is in a state of profound confusion, the urge to share the wealth—to cut slices off the cake on the rich man's table and pass them around to those who have no cake—still exists, and needs to be reckoned with.

One of the sanest ways of reckoning with it is provided in the recently released report of the Brookings Institution, which has just finished a three-year study of the way wealth and distribution of income are related to economic progress or the lack of it.

If the masses are to be enriched, this report says, it must be done through increased production and lowered prices rather than through a division of the wealth already existing.

The productive capacity of America today, continues the report, is not in excess of our requirements for consumption. On the contrary, it is behind them.

If we divide the wealth now, we shall be freezing our economic level at a point too low to satisfy us. Before we talk of dividing it, we ought to get busy and increase it.

This, to be sure, is nothing more than elementary common sense; and yet it is a point that needs to be made over and over again, if we are to understand the real nature of the problem that faces us.

With our productive plant, our natural resources, our inventiveness, and our skilled energy, we could make this nation of ours incomparably the richest ever dreamed of; richest in the sense that the ordinary, undistinguished man could have more comforts, more luxuries, and more safeguards in his daily life than even the kings of the earth had a few generations ago.

To do this, however, we cannot stop where we are. We do not, as of today, possess enough wealth for it. We possess the means of producing that wealth—but the wealth itself we have not got.

What the Brookings report amounts to is simply a plan reminder that the way to make ourselves rich is to set our productive machinery to work at top speed. More goods and lower prices—there is an avenue down which we can progress toward that nationally desired goal, a more abundant life.

Trying to "share our wealth" today is putting the cart in front of the horse. It would seem to be more sensible to set to work to increase our wealth so that the shares would be big enough to be worth asking for.

Life of World League Demands Flexibility

If the British pick up their navy and flail Mussolini on the head with it, as they seem to be fixing to do, it is probably quite true that they will be doing it less because of pure altruistic devotion to the League of Nations than because they figure that Italian designs in Ethiopia threaten one of the British empire's choicest preserves.

There is no use, in other words, in any innocent bystander getting a cock-eyed picture of the European mess. Human beings are pretty much alike, in Italy and in England; it is not unduly critical to say that the governments of both nations are being moved by selfish motives.

Nevertheless, there is a welcome amount of good sense in the statement of English foreign policy as set forth by Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary.

Great Britain, says Sir Samuel, does not feel that the mere failure of any nation to fulfill the terms of various treaties calls for the application of sanctions by the League of Nations.

When such a nation as Germany demands revision of existing treaties, he adds, it must be remembered that "elasticity is a part of security," and that "the world is not static."

Behind these somewhat hifalutin' phrases there is a simple statement that while England may be ready enough to use force to back up the League of Nations in this one particular case, it is not prepared to do so in all cases.

England, in other words, has not come around to the traditional French viewpoint—which seems to be that existing frontiers, boundaries, and levels of national strength are fixed and immutable from now on, with the league standing ready to crack down on any country which tries to amend them.

If the French attitude be adopted generally, the whole League of Nations idea is valueless as a means of obtaining world peace, and becomes instead simply a super-alibi of nations which are satisfied with what they have directed against nations which are not.

Only by following a course similar to that charted in the British declaration can the league's usefulness to mankind be salvaged.

For the plain fact is that many injustices exist in the world today. Many European states are hopelessly crippled as long as present boundaries exist; many people are forced to live under foreign masters. The league must not be used as an instrument to freeze the status quo.

Famous Cannon Are Being Sought

DALLAS. — Directors of the Texas Centennial are hunting for the "twin-sisters," two cannon presented to the Texas Republic by the City of Cincinnati during the Texas Revolution, which have been lost since the Civil War.

The cannon, which comprised Texas' entire artillery during the Texas War for Independence, disappeared at the close of the Civil War under mysterious circumstances which have never been fully explained.

One story, told by Dr. Harry H. Graves of Georgetown, Texas, says that two Confederate soldiers and a negro buried the prized six-inch cannon when General Magruder of the Union Army landed with troops at Galveston and called for the surrender of that city.

The Man Who Knows

Whether the Remedy You are taking for Headaches, Neuralgia or Rheumatism Pains is SAFE is Your Doctor. Ask Him

Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuralgia or the neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

Congressman and Judge Speakers At B&PW Meeting

CLEBURNE, Oct. 9.—Congressman Fritz Lanham and Judge Sarah T. Hughes will be the principal speakers of the District No. 2, Business and Professional Women's Conference to be held here Oct. 12 and 13. Mr. Lanham will speak on "Texas" at the Centennial Banquet Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock at which time the Club Chorus of the Fort Worth Club will sing a group of songs under the direction of Arthur Faguy-Cote with Mrs. Berry Walcott Faguy-Cote as accompanist. Mrs. H. E. Snipes, president of the Cleburne Club, will preside.

The banquet will honor the presidents of district clubs and Miss Blanche McComb, state president, will bring greetings from the state federation. An informal party will be held after the banquet.

Sunday morning sessions will also be held at the Liberty Hotel with the luncheon at the Cleburne Country club. The parliamentary drill will be given Sunday morning from 8 to 8:30 o'clock by Miss Averill Gouldy, district parliamentarian, with the devotional service from 8:45 to 9 o'clock with Miss Ethie Eggleton in charge. The North Fort Worth club chorus will sing. Mrs. Julia Davis will be director and Miss Jennie Hereford accompanist.

The "Women, Unite for Effective Democracy" luncheon will be held at 1 o'clock with Judge Sarah T. Hughes of Dallas speaking on the subject, "Do Women Have Full Rights Under the Constitution?" Mrs. John G. Sims, Jr., Fort Worth, district director, will preside and Dr. Lena Skiles of Denton will read the club collect as the invocation. A quartet from Cleburne with Mrs. John Battle as accompanist will sing. State officers in attendance will be honored at the luncheon.

The resolution committee will meet under the leadership of Mrs. Paula McKee of Sherman at 11 o'clock and report to the luncheon meeting. The entire morning will be taken up with a round table discussion on club programs and activities and will be in charge of Miss Frances Alexander of Dallas. Mrs. Verma Adams of Arlington, chairman of the attendance committee, predicts a large attendance for all meetings. There is a cash prize for the club having the highest per cent of its membership present.

The Paris club, formerly in this district, has been voted back into the district and a large delegation is expected to be present.

The GOLDEN FEATHER by Robert Bruce

CHAPTER VI DONALD MONTAGUE signed the last of the sheet of letters that lay on his desk, shoved the little pile aside, and said, "There—that's done." He looked up at Jean and said, "Well, if you'll get these off, Miss Dunn, you might as well call it a day."

Jean picked up the letters and started for the outer office and her own desk. Glancing at her wrist watch as she did so, she exclaimed, "But Mr. Montag—It's only half-past eleven."

"What of it?" he asked with an air of paternal amusement. "It's Saturday, isn't it? I've a lunch on engagement and I'm not coming back this afternoon. You can use the extra hour, can't you?"

"Oh—of course—and thanks," she said, slightly confused. She withdrew, prepared the letters for mailing, and five minutes later was on her way out.

Born and reared in a small town, she knew moments when the great city was almost unbearably oppressive and confining; and the sudden realization that this afternoon she must manage somehow to get out into the open country, away from the crowds and the noises and the bustle and confusion of Dover.

"I'd like to take a long hike across the fields," she mused. "Let's see—who could I get to go with me?" She thought of Bobby; but she knew he would be working all day and she also knew that an afternoon of his romantic instincts and cause him to speak pleadingly of marriage and a little apartment. Today he didn't want to be proposed to.

She thought of Bobby; but she knew he would be working all day and she also knew that an afternoon of his romantic instincts and cause him to speak pleadingly of marriage and a little apartment. Today he didn't want to be proposed to.

"I'll hurry home and change, and then start telephoning," she thought. She walked to the corner and caught her street car. When she had reached her apartment, bathed and changed her frock for a rough tweed skirt, woolen stockings, low-heeled shoes and a sweater she discovered that she was ravenously hungry.

"The telephone can wait," she told herself and she went to the little kitchenette to prepare a lunch. Just as she was about to use the percolator the telephone rang. She scampered into the other room and answered it.

"Miss Dunn?" said a man's voice. "Well, now isn't that luck for you? I didn't think I'd be able to raise you on a nice afternoon like this!"

Remember? My name's Harkins—Sandy Harkins.

"Oh," said Jean. "Oh, yes. Mr. Harkins."

"Well, listen here, good-looking. I'll bet down here you come from you like to go horseback riding on your afternoon off, don't you?"

"Horseback riding? Why, yes. But—"

"I thought so," said Sandy. "You looked like a girl that knew how to ride. Listen, how'd it be if I came around and took you out to a riding academy and we got a couple of nags and went for a little ride—huh, how about it?"

To ride a horse again—something she had not done since she left Maplehurst. She suddenly discovered that that was what she wanted to do this afternoon more than anything else; and before she knew it she had made up her mind she heard herself saying, "Oh, I'd love to."

"Kayo, baby," said the breezy Mr. Harkins. "I'll be at your front gate in half an hour."

In precisely half an hour her bell rang. Sandy met her in the little lobby on the first floor and they were in his roadster—it was a flashy yellow thing which looked only a little shabby and less powerful than one of the navy's newest destroyers—almost before she knew it.

HALF an hour's drive got them out of the city. They followed a gravelled country road for a few miles, and at last came to a huge, white-washed barn, so big that it completely overshadowed the little cottage in front of it. Along the side of the barn there was a big sign, "The West Park Riding Academy."

grown slope toward a little stream and a clump of woods.

Sandy had been watching her with a knowing eye, and he evidently had satisfied himself that she was quite at home in the saddle.

"Come on," he cried. "Race you to the woods!"

And they went off down the slope, the horses' hoofs drumming on the springy turf, while the wind whipped the ends of the scarf Jean had bound about her hair, and she laughed aloud from sheer happiness and excitement. They came nearer and nearer to the little stream; at this point it was no more than a brook, not six feet wide, with firm banks. Jean boldly spurred directly toward it and took her horse across it in one graceful leap. Then she reined in, and came to a halt at the edge of the woods.

Sandy was beside her, looking at her admiringly.

"Say," he said, "you can ride, all right."

She was breathless, laughing, with little wisps of hair escaping from under the scarf.

"I used to ride almost every day, down home," she said.

"Good girl," said Sandy. "You did that jump like a champion."

They came out of the woods into an ungrazed country road. It led them in a gently undulating course past the woodland, along the edge of a prosperous-looking farm and around a bend to an ancient wooden bridge over a small river.

They talked lazily as they rode. Sandy seemed a strange combination of frankness and reticence. He spoke of life on the western plains, of going hunting in the Osage hills, of nights under the stars in bar-camps but he seemed to be reluctant to say much about the present, or about his reasons for leaving that open western country.

"You must want to get back there," said Jean. He looked at her soberly, and when he grinned, at last, there was something wistful in his eyes. "Yeah, I guess maybe I do," he said. "Reckon I will, too, some day."

They left the river and came out in a broad pasture lot. Beyond the level expanse of grass they could see the roof of the riding academy barn rising above a clump of trees.

"Another race?" said Sandy abruptly. Jean answered by leaning forward and spurring her mount forward. Again they went drumming across the springy earth, and again a wild sense of physical exhilaration and mental well-being took possession of the girl, so that she found herself laughing aloud, for no especial reason, when she finally reined in her horse at the far end of the meadow.

Sandy came up beside her and pulled his horse to a halt. Then suddenly he leaned over, slipped his arm about her shoulders, and kissed her on the mouth.

He looked at her coolly, for a moment, and then grinned.

"Oh," he said, "I just sort of travel around, from here to there and back."

"It is," said Sandy.

W. M. S. Baptist Church Business Session

The Women's Missionary Society of the Baptist Church held a business meeting Monday afternoon at 2:45 o'clock in the church, with 26 present.

The session was opened by their president, Mrs. Clyde L. Garrett, with a song service, "I Choose Jesus," led by Mrs. H. A. McCannell, with Mrs. J. F. McWilliams at the piano.

The Lord's Prayer in unison was followed by the reading of the minutes of the last session by Mrs. William Shirriffs, secretary. Reports by the chairmen of the various committees were presented by Mrs. R. A. Larner, program; Mrs. H. A. McCannell, stewardship; Mrs. R. L. Young, personal service; Mrs. E. E. Layton, social; Mrs. J. F. McWilliams, mission study, and reports of the treasurer, Mrs. Jess Seibert.

Announcement was made of the reception on Friday night at 7:30 in the church, honoring the pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Eastham, and the workers' conference at Rising Star on Tuesday.

Mrs. Frank Lovett, retiring president, expressed her appreciation for the splendid co-operation given her during past year.

The following chairmen of the standing committees were announced by Mrs. Garrett:

Mrs. Carl Springer, enlistment; Mrs. William Shirriffs, publicity; Mrs. Jess Seibert, literature and stewardship; Mrs. E. E. Layton, social; Mrs. P. L. Parker, menu; Mrs. R. A. Larner, program chairman.

A short talk on the tasks for the society for the coming year was made by Mrs. Garrett.

Mrs. Lee Bishop urged that all children attend the various children's organizations of the church. The meeting was adjourned with prayer by their president, Mrs. C. L. Garrett.

The Oil Belt branch of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Eastland County, held an invitational meeting on Monday night at 7:30 o'clock at the home of Mrs. H. O. Satterwhite.

The session was opened by the president, Mrs. Charles C. Robey, and the program was in charge of Mrs. Vera McLeroy, who led in a sing-song.

During the business session it was decided to meet on the first and third Mondays in each month at 6:45 p. m.

It was also voted to keep the charter list open until the next meeting which will be on Monday, Oct. 21, at the home of Mrs. H. O. Satterwhite.

Mrs. Charles C. Robey, president, told of the aims and objects of the organization; higher ethical standards in business; best thoughts in public address; and to foster the community spirit and co-operation in community welfare.

Seven new members were added to the charter roll; Mrs. C. I. Hyatt, and Misses Clara B. Simer and Eunice Hamilton of Olden; Misses Ida B. Hines and Louise Karkalits; Meses. J. D. Blankenship and John Harrell of Eastland, making the charter membership 27 to date.

Mrs. Harry B. Sone, hostess to Auxiliary

The Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church was entertained at the home of the hostess, Mrs. Harry B. Sone, Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The session was presided over by Mrs. J. LeRoy Arnold, president, who opened the meeting with the Lord's Prayer in unison.

The roll call response was followed by the reading of the minutes of the previous session by their secretary, Mrs. Robert Tierce.

During the business session the report of Mrs. Tierce, chairman of the rummage and bake sale, which was a grand success, was presented, and the public and their friends were graciously thanked for their wonderful patronage.

Mrs. Charles W. Estes reported that all arrangements were completed for the joint meeting with the Methodist Women's Missionary Society, for the study of "That Other America," on Nov. 18.

Mrs. J. L. Cottingham brought the devotional, and Mrs. C. W. Gene gave a wonderful talk on "Stewardship."

Mrs. Joseph M. Perkins, guest speaker, presented a book review on "Green Lights," by Lloyd C. Douglas, which was greatly appreciated by the members.

Mrs. George E. Cross was welcomed by the class as a new member.

Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served by the hostess.

Guests for the afternoon were Meses. O. E. Harvey, Fred Crossland, R. N. Grisham and Joseph M. Perkins.

SHOOTING THE

MAVERICK

Things look bright on Maverick Field.

With few injuries and those that have been out returning, the situation is in reality rosy for the tilt Friday afternoon at 3:30 with the Breck Buckaroos.

We don't know where they were last week, anyway Raymond Hamilton and James Hill have been practicing this week and will likely see action in the Buckaroo tiff.

Truman Brown, one of the several lettermen of last year's squad, will see action in the game.

Brown suffered the misfortune of undergoing an appendix operation following the Mavs' return from the short stay at Buffalo Gap.

Brown's return heartens the fans as well as the team members.

Since the Shooter has started making the column an all-Mav today, it might not be unwise to carry our and others' observation of the local team's heartiness and power packing playing.

Mavs have a habit, we've noticed since the game with Mineral Wells, of tackling low. Injuries have been many in opposing teams. Not interested in technicalities and only of the game from your standpoint, that's something.

They may get their eagle eyes focused on some highly touted Buckaroos Friday and boost their chances up notches.

By what we've said don't infer that dirty or unfair playing of the localites has been inferred. It wasn't means that way.

You've probably noticed them—the Taylor brothers, Jim and Harry. Harry and Jim, this their first year, have showed up well.

Both are small statured power-houses. Speed, too, has been observed in their performances.

The brothers, fresh from experience on the Junior High team last year under the coaching of F. D. Crossland, have been the subject of many observant fans.

Harry plays left half while Jim has been making a dandy guard when Coach Kithen sends him in.

Ranger is facing a gloomy outcome with their Cleburne game Saturday afternoon.

Tuesday, W. H. Mayes in "Peeping Thru the Knothole," at Ranger said: "Backs who sweep around ends with alacrity and elan, not to mention speed and elusiveness, and who can play through the line like the Italians marching into Aduwa or Adigrat, are reported to be headed this way with the Cleburne Yellow Jackets."

Cleburne has won two games this year by the score of 58 to 0, said the knothole peeper.

Don't forget the Eastland game Friday, here.

That Reminds Me

ten and where forty or fifty thousand bales were raised prior only around three to five thousand were raised in the county.

Based on the same average with Central Texas counties, Ellis, Williamson and several further west counties, Eastland county farmers took a terrible rap. The same farmers those counties can raise ten times or more cotton than the Eastland county farmers can. Certainly this is out of line and should have been taken into consideration in the proration figures.

Instead of Eastland county farmers profiting by the idea they are worse off than ever.

Oh well, we can talk a lot and cuss a lot, as well as argue about it. But, what can be done about it? Next year is election year; that's the only time the average citizen has a real say so; the thing to do is pay your poll tax and be sure that when election time comes that every man and woman can step up and cast their ballot—not for the demagogue, not for the sensationalist, not for hero worship; but for sound constructive government principles with men at the helm that will keep the government within the necessary budget. It takes a business man to do that—not a politician.

PUBLIC HEALTH ENEMY NUMBER ONE

Again America's Public Health Enemy Number One, the common cold germ, marshals his forces. Your family may be the next to be stricken!

Leading doctors tell us that fifty per cent of all disabling diseases start with a "common cold." America's Public Health Enemy Number One, the common cold germ, strikes with such viciousness that sixty per cent of the population has three or more "colds" each year. Think of this startling total of over two hundred million illnesses—many of which could be avoided!

The common cold germ shows no favor. Invisible but dangerous, this Number One Enemy of Public Health stalks like a bandit in the night ready to rob you and your loved ones of health and energy. Cold germs find a fertile field in inadequately ventilated and improperly heated homes during winter.

Strike at the root of fatal winter illnesses by the simple precaution of providing proper ventilation and adequate heat in every room in your home. It's good health insurance! COMMUNITY NATURAL GAS COMPANY.

Tune in each Thursday night at 6:45, WFAA-WBAP, beginning Oct. 17, for vital facts to help you guard your family against Public Health Enemy No. 1
