Survey Shows Room For Improvements

Many a resident of a large midwestern city the other day undoubtedly read with a combination of doubt and shame some figures taken from a survey of the city made by the government with the aid of CWA and FERA work-relief people.

The figures showed: THAT 8805 families in that city's metropolitan area are living in homes unfit for human beings to dwell in.

THAT there are 29,258 families without tubs or shower baths.

THAT 3867 families are without running water.

THAT 5702 families still light their homes with kerosene lamps.

THAT there are 14,108 families without the sanitary necessity of a private indoor toilet.

All this is no reflection on that city, which was Cleveland, Ohio. Official figures on conditions elsewhere show that there are many cities which do not stack up so well. In fact, Cleveland is one of the better cities in regard to its general standard of living.

Of course there were also redeeming features, showing the efforts that are being made to advance the standard of living.

For instance, there are 83,151 wage-earners in the city who ride to work in automobiles. There are 57,201 families using electric refrigerators. There are 14,203 families with two or more automobiles.

It is not necessarily a black picture at all, for it shows clearly that many, many thousands of workers are living in a comfort that could scarcely be imagined by workers in any other country in the world.

Nevertheless, the inadequate standard available to even a small minority is a blot on any city and a danger. Surveys like this are the first step toward improving the conditions they expose. For unless we first get a clear picture of our shortcomings it is hard to move toward better things.

Every city would do well to think about these statistics, for no city can afford to allow such conditions to exist without making a determined effort to better them.

Further, the potential domestic market for housing, plumbing, lighting, and similar improvements is clearly shown. It waits for the time when the people lacking those vital things get enough money to buy them.

Japanese Fail To Get An American Joke

The latest "tempest in a teapot" to disturb international good-will is being brewed over a cartoon in a "smart" American magazine. It is a good illustration of how a little thing, important in itself, may, sometimes weigh heavily in the delicate relations on which depend the friendship of peoples.

The page of cartoons was based on an old wuzzle, which every high school and college editor has used at one time or another—pictures of the impossible or unlikely, used to emphasize the actual. This page, entitled, "Five highly unlikely historical situations by one who is sick of the same old headlines," showed Holy Long entering a monastery, Admiral Byrd watering in Tahiti, J. P. Morgan delivering a soap box oration against capitalism, W. R. Hearst becoming ambassador to Soviet Russia, and the Japanese emperor getting the Nobel peace prize.

It is a very old form of joke among comic artists, so throwbare in America that no one could possibly be shocked by it or even very much amused.

But the Japanese emperor, bemedaled and uniformed, is represented drawing a cart on which lies a ribboned scroll representing the Nobel prize.

It was not the implication that Emperor Hirohito is perhaps less peace-loving than a Quaker which drew Japanese resentment and brought Ambassador Saito rushing to Washington from his vacation to handle Japanese protests.

It was the fact that Hirohito, believed by many of his subjects to be virtually a divinity, was shown at the menial task of pulling a cart. To pious Japanese, this is a gratuitous affront, not the policies, but to the person, of the emperor.

Americans can not understand this at all. President Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt have been lampooned far worse by this same magazine. But they understand American humor and American political cartooning. They laughed whole-heartedly at such cartoons of themselves, and even asked to have the original drawings in some cases.

Japanese must try to understand two things in this connection:

First, that this artist, while attacking the public policy of the emperor, probably had not the slightest idea of affronting the emperor's person and undoubtedly did not know he had done so until it was explained to him.

Second, that the American government has not and can not have any control over such cartoons.

It is hard to believe that any real harm will have been done by this frolicsome and, to the American point of view, quite innocent bit of satire. But it does show why peoples must try to understand better each other's point of view, and be tolerant of it.

HOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXIII

Jo said, hiding as best she could her surprise at Babs' sudden announcement. "I'm awfully glad she's here."

Babs gave her a queer smile. "I know you would be, Jo. . . really did."

"When does the big event take place?" asked Tubby.

"Doug wants it to be right away," Babs told them. "In fact, it was all for ebbing. But of course I couldn't have that."

Tubby shook her head. "Of course not. Think of the parties and the fun."

Babs' eyes grew sharp, and Jo was relieved to see Lolita Montez coming for their table. At sight of the actress Babs felt that Lolita should be recognized and for acknowledging Lolita's greeting she excused herself.

"Won't you sit down?" Jo invited the little actress.

Montez shook her head. "I'd like to—but Drann is herding us all to the station in half an hour. I just wanted to stop a moment and tell you how much I've enjoyed being here and knowing you and Miss Davis."

Jo assured her that the tubby had been mutual and Tubby asked, "Do you really leave so soon?"

"Yes. . . except for Fragonet," Jo started. "Isn't it Mr. Fragonet returning, too?"

"Oh, not with it," Montez smiled. "I don't think so."

Jo's tone distinctly malicious. "We might distract him. I suppose I believe he's taking the night plane."

Tubby glanced significantly at Jo, and when Montez had departed she put into words what had been in her eyes. "I'll bet I know why Fragonet is hanging back. He means to shanghai you on that plane."

Jo laughed. "Don't be silly, Tubby."

"You wait. The minute Drann and his gang get away, you'll be hearing from Fragonet."

"O' laughed again, but before the next morning was over Tubby's prediction proved correct. Jo had decided on a swim before lunch and then avoid encountering Bret Paul, she walked down the lake shore a quarter of a mile and selected a pretty spot away from the rest of the swimmers who were out that morning. She'd just completed a vigorous turn out from shore when she saw Fragonet hurrying along the path.

He stood smiling down at her as she walked up from the lake in a shimmering suit. Unconsciously she removed her white bathing cap and tossed her golden hair in the bright sunlight. Fragonet stood stolidly frank in his admiration of her glorious figure.

"By the Lord Harry Jo! You're beyond words!"

"But not beyond taking cold," she laughed, pointing to her beach robe.

Instantly he retrieved the robe and draped it around her shoulders. "I suppose you know why I didn't leave with the rest?"

"Why. . . no. I'm afraid I don't."

"Let's don't play-act, Jo. I want to take you back with me tonight. You know that." Jo was silent and he rushed on. "We'll drive to the Crestwood airport to night at 10 and catch the night plane out. That way we'll reach Hollywood long before Drann and the others get there."

"But, Peter. . ."

"I'll call at your room at 9:30," he said quickly. "And you'll be ready."

His imperious tone irritated Jo and she asked, "Are you sure?"

"If you're not," Fragonet smiled. "I'll take you anyhow."

"But—"

He shook his head, interrupting her. "There's no use talking about it, Jo. You know you can't stay here any longer." He bent and kissed her quickly on the cheek then turned abruptly and hurried toward the Inn without her.

Thoughtfully Jo followed the path, forgetting her wet suit and the breeze that swept up gently from the head of the lake. What had he meant by saying "You know you can't stay here any longer?" Did he know that Babs and Marsh were to marry, and sense that Babs with her new influence over Marsh would never stand for Jo remaining at Crest Lake?

AT any rate Fragonet's words whether they had been calculated in his meaning or not, started Jo into a sudden realization of her own position at Crest Lake. Things had been happening so swiftly in the past few hours that this was the first moment she had found in which to view her self objectively. Certainly now that her father had been successful in getting a job she did not need to remain at Crest Lake. And Babs' engagement to Douglas Marsh was likely to create even greater tension between Jo and Mrs. Marsh, who was so friendly with the Montegomerys. As for Bret—the old Bret who might have been her friend—

Jo shuddered, remembering last night when she had stood before the window of the little cottage and watched Bret take the Saunders girl in his arms. "I never want to face him again," she said half-aloud. "Never. . . Perhaps it was true that whatever he was Bret deserved her gratitude for having saved her life. But even gratitude can be devoid of respect, and Jo decided that a note to Bret would do better now than facing him.

She was still deep in thought when she reached the Inn and hardly realized that she was at the veranda steps when she heard Douglas Marsh's pleasant voice above her.

"Good morning, Jo. . . Wonder if I could see you when you've changed?"

There was something strange in his eyes, something Jo recognized at once and which made her say, "It won't take long, will it? You might as well talk to me now."

Marsh looked startled. "You—you know what I'm going to say?"

"Perhaps not exactly. But obviously it's not pleasant." She drew the robe around her throat and stood facing him. "It's really my fault that you've found your self in this difficult situation," she said in a low tone. "You've been wonderful—and I should have left Crest Lake long ago. I should have gone when this trouble with Fragonet first came up."

"Jo. I want you to realize that I—"

She nodded quickly. "I know. And I don't blame you. There must have been a lot of talk. Too much for comfort and I know what your mother thinks."

"You see, after all, she's getting along in years, and I don't like to excite her more than necessary. Somehow she's quite convinced that you aren't straight, Jo. And while it's absurd and—"

He stopped his voice trailing into silence. Then, desperately, "I want to do what's right, you know. A month's salary in lieu of notice—and if any time you need help—"

"I don't want a month's salary," Jo said. "But I do appreciate your kindness."

SHE felt somehow sorry for Douglas Marsh but she felt resentment, too, that he should be so quickly dominated by Babs. For Jo was certain that it was not entirely Mrs. Marsh who was behind this.

"And, Jo. . . Marsh resumed, "I want to know where you'll be, because I intend to see you again."

Jo laughed a little bitterly. "I'm not presentable here at Crest Lake. I'm not likely to be presentable anywhere else, am I? Besides—I really don't know where I'll be, unless it's Hollywood."

"Hollywood?" Marsh's eyes widened. "You don't mean. . . Fragonet?"

"Not necessarily. But I've always wanted to see Hollywood—and he's asked me to go with him on the plane. Is there anything so wrong in that?"

He turned his eyes to the lake. "Perhaps not wrong. And God knows I haven't much right to meddle in your affairs after telling you it would be better if you left Crest Lake, but—"

"Then," said Jo, putting a hand on his arm, "suppose we both stop worrying about it. I've really liked it here, and you've been more than fair."

He took her hand quickly. "Jo. . . Whatever he had wanted to add never reached his lips. He stopped squeezed her fingers hard, and said "Goodbye, Jo—and lots of luck, always."

Jo nodded, finding her throat suddenly dry, finding her tongue unable to answer. She withdrew her hand and hurried into the Inn, ran blindly up the stairs. At her door she found Mrs. Marsh standing resolutely as if she had been waiting there for minutes.

"Did my son have a talk with you, Miss Darian?"

"Yes. . . just now."

The old lady nodded solemnly. "Men are blind sometimes. I was sorry to have to tell him certain facts which he seemed to have missed, but—"

Jo could stand no more. She turned fiercely, her back against the door of her room. "You told him lies!" she almost screamed. "You told him nothing but lies!"

Texas' New Laws Which Go Into Effect on Aug. 10 Are Outlined In Series of Austin Dispatches

(Editor's Note: This is the fifth and final of the series of articles dealing with new Texas laws becoming effective Aug. 10.)

AUSTIN.—Most popular of nearly 200 new Texas laws which become effective Aug. 10 is that creating a state department of public safety, a powerful public agent to combat crime.

A new force of up-to-the-minute Texas "G-men," comprised of Texas rangers and state highway patrolmen, will head a co-ordinated drive on vice. The public safety department will be made up of 40 rangers, a total of three companies, and 146 highway patrolmen.

The pictureque Texas rangers will not lose identity in the new department, but they will be subordinated to "the department," headed by a three-member appointed commission and a director. The commission will serve six-year terms. They will select the public safety director and his assistant, whose salaries will be $3,000 and $2,700 per year respectively.

Safety commissioners are Geo. W. Cottingham, Houston editor; Ernest Goens, Tyler attorney; and A. S. Johnson, Dallas lawyer. They will call an official meeting at an early date.

Temporary state headquarters are expected to be established in Austin soon.

The commission has met several times during the past two months, unofficially, mapping plans for the new department.

Under terms of the act local officers may be recruited to aid in blockades or other needed work inside their own jurisdiction. The commission's force will be served by the latest equipment—radio, teletypewriters, modern arms.

Names of bureaus indicate the types of policing that will be possible under the new organization: bureau of intelligence, headed by the senior ranger captain; bureau of communications, in charge of the state highway patrol chief; bureau of education, directed by the assistant public safety head; bureau of identification and records, directors to be appointed.

The last named has been advocated by Texas peace officers for many years. It will be available to all local agencies. The bureau of education also is new in Texas. Public safety department men will be trained for their work in latest methods. The bill also mentions that schools may be conducted for local officers. For analysis and laboratory assistance, the University of Texas and other state schools will make available their equipment.

District officers will be maintained by the department. To finance their installation and maintain the entire system, the legislature appropriated $5,000 to last until Aug. 31, with $455,346 to pay for the first fiscal year's operation and $437,696 for 1936-1937.

Number of special rangers is limited to 300 under the bill. They will be available for duty in emergencies, and be under $2,500 bond.

Huge Stone Placed In School Museum

CANYON, Texas.—A 3,500-pound block of semi-solid sandstone containing miscellaneous bones of the lower Pliocene period has been placed in the Pioneer Hall museum here.

The stone contains remains of horses, tigers, dogs, cats, camels and mastodons, authorities say, which lived five million years ago.

The variety found in the single deposit of fossilized remnants is most unusual, paleontologists say, and it will make one of the best exhibits of this kind in the country, they claim.

Killer Strolls Out of Prison

In an escape that rivaled in audacity John Dillinger's "wooden gun" getaway, Henry "Midget" Fernekes, above, murderer of five men and notorious bank robber, strolled out of Joliet, Ill., state prison. Wearing civilian clothes and dark glasses that had been smuggled in, he posed as a visitor and calmly walked to freedom as guards opened doors for him.

Hidalgo Refinancing Will Save Millions

EDINBURG, Texas.—Hidalgo county taxpayers will save nearly two million dollars as a result of a new proposal for refinancing about $8,000,000 in outstanding bonds, according to county officials.

The commissioners' court has signed a contract with a refunding agency whereby the county is pledged to participation in the refunding proposal if the agency is successful in obtaining 65 per cent of the total outstanding bonds for participation.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE

It's fun to have guests at the summer cottage and plenty of guests are always on tap to have—but camp make-shift equipment generally chooses the week-end to act up and spoil the hostess' good time.

The way to get round a stove that goes on strike every once in awhile is to make concessions. You can do even company cooking on a balky two-burner kerosene stove with a portable oven if only you plan ahead.

Don't try to have elaborate cakes and pies; serve as many as possible of your vegetables and fruits raw, and keep a shelf full of canned foods that can be opened in a hurry and served without heating if necessary.

Electric Stove Helps

If your cottage is equipped with electricity you'll find a portable table stove a great help. There are several types. If your family likes broiled foods you can find a splendid electric broiler in connection with the top-stove units. If you prefer baked dishes and casseroles, you'll be more interested in one featuring an adequate oven.

Of course you'll serve all your meals out doors whenever possible and use paper plates and napkins. Gay Japanese lanterns are grand for lighting.

Here's the menu for a fried chicken luncheon that is easy to get on a two-burner stove:

Melon Ball Cocktail

Fried Spring Chicken

Corn on the Cob Potato Salad Cherry Blossom Cakes

Milk Tea

The potatoes are cooked for the salad early in the morning or the day before. This leaves both burners for the chicken and corn. The melon balls are laced in a port-

Second Birthday Is Celebrated

Mrs. Neil Day was hostess to a number of little people honoring the second birthday of her daughter, Janell.

Merry games were enjoyed by the little folks, and then they drew their favors from a big rose, centering the lovely appointed table in pink and blue ware.

The favors were tied on streamers and when drawn were found attached to lovely place cards.

Refreshments of ice cream and animal cookies were served to the merry little ones.

The little honoree received many handsome and appropriate gifts from her small friends.

Guests were Ann Day, Janice Wood, Stanley Joe Stephen, Mary Ann McRae, Rodney Stephen, Jackie Harris, Billy Sikes, and Shirley Ann Hightower, and the honoree, Janell Day.

Mmes. Walter I. Clark, Carl Angstadt, and Miss Ann Clark, assisted throughout the afternoon.

Others present were Mmes. W. M. Wood, Frank Hightower, Tom Harris, Joe C. Stephen, R. E. Sikes, Eugene Day, and Mrs. Neil Day.

Womens Missionary Society Baptist Church

The circles of the Womens Missionary Society of the Baptist church met in regular session at 3:30 o'clock Monday afternoon in the church for a short business session, during which the subject of fixing the parking was discussed.

At 3:45 p. m., the meeting was resolved into the regular Bible study, opening with a song service, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," with Mrs. D. L. Kinnaird at the piano.

A prayer was offered by Mrs. L. J. Lambert, preceding the Bible study, conducted by Rev. Charles T. Alexander, from the first epistle general of John, presented in a very interesting manner.

Members present were Mmes. Ida Harris, L. J. Lambert, Marvin Hood, R. L. Young, James Drake, W. J. Herrington, J. B. Overton, H. A. McCannies, G. W. Daken, Ed T. Cox Sr., Joe Neal, D. L. Kinnaird, Frank Lovett, Miss Sallie Morris, and Rev. Alexander.

Honored With Picnic and Swim

Robert W. Phelps of Wellington, Kan., who is visiting his father, W. A. Phelps of this city, was honored with a picnic and swim at Olden.

After an invigorating dip in the pool, a picnic spread with everything good to eat was enjoyed by the merry group.

Those enjoying the outing were Mrs. G. Tucker, Mrs. Howard McDonald and little daughters, Martha and Nancy Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Halkias and children, John, Estes and Mary, W. A. Phelps and honor guest, Robert W. Phelps.

Womens Missionary Society Methodist Church

The Womens Missionary Society of the Methodist church held their regular business session in the church Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The session was presided over by Mrs. I. N. Griffin, their president, and the program was in charge of Mrs. Fred L. Drago, who also gave the devotional.

The subject of the program, "1935 Minutes of the Annual Conference at Breckenridge," was discussed by Mmes. A. F. Taylor, Wayne Jones and Bert McGlamery.

The next meeting of the society will be on Aug. 26, which will be a session of the circles of the organization.

Swim Enjoyed

The intermediate girls of the Methodist church enjoyed a swim and picnic at Lake Cisco Monday night. They met in front of the church at 6:30 o'clock for the start.

Those in the party included Charlotte Ball, Mary Nell Crowell, Anne Jane Taylor, Maxine O'Neil, Willie Jane Amos, Elizabeth Jones, Ida Lee Foster, and chaperones, Mmes. Martin and O'Neil and Miss Loraine Taylor.

Guests for the occasion were Frances Ann Crowell and Johnnie Hazel Reese.

Eastland Personals

Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Bittle and Mmes. Grady Pipkin and R. J. Cox Jr. attended the funeral of Rev. F. E. Singleton, former Eastland pastor, at Dublin Monday.

Miss Dorothy Redus of Mineral Wells is visiting in the home of Miss Jamie Stever.

Luther Belew, former resident of Abilene, was an Eastland visitor Wednesday.

Edwin and Miss Maydelle Sikes of Wayland have been visiting in homes of Eastland friends this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Hart of Kermit visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. V. W. Hart, Tuesday.

Mrs. F. E. Mauldin of Clarksville, Texas, is a guest for two weeks at the home of Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Griffin.

Zoo Installs A "Hot Seat" For The Commo nHouse Fly

PHILADELPHIA—Muses Domestica, World's Public Enemy No. 1, will occupy a seat of Applied Electricity in the Philadelphia Zoo.

For those unfamiliar with Musca Domestica, it is the house fly. And the seat of Applied Electricity is more commonly known as the "hot seat."

Dr. Roderick MacDonald, managing director of the Philadelphia Zoo, has devised a death screen for flies that instantly kills the pests as they alight.

The "hot seat" is made up of wires charged with static electricity from a transformer connected to ordinary house current. The charge is deadly enough to electrocute the flies and mosquitoes, but of sufficiently low voltage to be harmless to a person coming in contact with the screens. As the insects are killed, they fall into a trough below the screen.

Traps, devised for the feed rooms, are box-like and have an open side. Stretched across the open side are the charged wires. Inside is a burning light. The insects are attracted to the light and in gaining the inside of the box they meet their doom.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE

SUPPOSE more tea room and small restaurant owners have made money out of chicken well and specially prepared than from any other dish; yet on the other hand, no food is more stinned against.

Few butchers understand how to clean a chicken properly, or take the trouble to do it anyway, and housekeepers are too prone to take the whole thing on faith to avoid troublesome work.

Be sure your chicken is thoroughly cleaned inside and out and the dish will be good whether it is mousses, timbales, roll, loaf, Hawaiian chicken, chicken supreme, croquettes or the French mixture of chicken and noodles. These are all company ways for chicken incidentally.

Broiled Style Is Least Economical

Broiled chicken and old-fashioned country fried chicken are suitable, too, for dinners or formal luncheons. These are really the most expensive ways to serve chicken because the smallness of the birds and the large amount of bone waste. But you can't beat them. Chicken broiled directly over the fire has a nutty flavor that cannot be imitated. Dip each half in melted butter or rub with softened butter and broil in a very hot oven in dripping pans or under the flame in the broiling oven for thirty minutes.

Young chickens are so tender that the minute they are reheated the meat becomes cottony and tasteless. So select fowl when you want to re-heat. Fowl is chicken from eight to twelve months old. Chicken over a year old can be used for soups and stews. Always put an elderly bird on to cook for thirty minutes.

Chicken cutlet, Hawaiian, is served with grilled tomatoes filled with buttered peas for luncheon or dinner. Choose a hearty dessert to make up the calories.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Chilled cantaloupe, French omelet, Graham muffins, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON: Tuna fish salad in tomato cups, rye bread and butter sandwiches, composite of mixed fruits, cookies, milk, tea.

DINNER: Fruit juice cocktail, chicken cutlet Hawaiian, grilled tomatoes stuffed with buttered peas, stuffed pepper salad, peach souffle, milk, coffee.

Three and one-half cups pineapple juice, 4 tablespoons butter, 1 cup rice, 1 small onion, 1-2 cup grated cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, 1-4 teaspoon pepper, 2 cups finely chopped cooked chicken.

Wash rice through many waters. Combine pineapple juice, minced onion salt, pepper and butter and bring to the boiling point. Add rice and cook over hot water until rice is tender. Add cheese, mix well, and cool. Add chicken and shape into cutlets or croquettes.

Roll in fine cracker crumbs, dip in egg slightly beaten with 1 tablespoon milk and roll again in crumbs. Fry in deep hot fat heated to 375 degrees F. or hot enough to brown an inch cube of bread in forty seconds. Since the croquettes are cooked before frying, as soon as they brown they should be removed from the fat and drained. Serve with a rich cream sauce to which 1 tablespoon minced parsley, 1 tablespoon minced green pepper, 1-2 teaspoon minced chives and 1 chopped hard cooked egg has been added.

Legions Memorial Coins May Be Last Issued in the U. S.

AUSTIN—In view of the fact that President Franklin D. Roosevelt recently sent a message to the congress urging that it approve no more memorial coin issues, the American Legion's Centennial coin sale to raise funds for the construction of a Texas Memorial Museum on the campus of the University of Texas may provide one of the last opportunities for collectors to secure memorial coins, it is stated by A. Garland Adair, chairman of the American Legion Centennial committee. President Roosevelt, however, not only approved the purpose for which the Texas Centennial coin was issued, but has given the Legion the pen with which he signed the bill authorizing the issue, to be placed in the museum.

Governor James V. Allred also gave the pen used in signing the Texas Centennial bill to the museum to be placed alongside the president's pen.

Congress has authorized minting of 1,500,000 of the 50-cent memorial coins, which will sell for $1. In designing the coin, the Legion marked it "1836-1836" to enhance its sale value and to advertise Texas as regardless of what year in which it is sold.

Additional funds for the museum are expected to be provided by the federal government. The state's Centennial appropriation bill set aside $250,000 for the structure. Following the 1936 celebration, the museum will be maintained under the administration of the University's board of regents. J. Frank Dobie, professor of English at the university, predicts that the museum very likely will prove to be the most popular building on the campus, among both students and visitors.

Old Dunce Cap Bows to Derby

MADISON, Wis.—Dr. William S. Middleton, newly appointed dean of the University of Wisconsin medical school, has a collection of brown derbies which he has worn in the classroom.

As professor of medicine here, he was almost as well known to his classes for his brown derbies as he was for his important research into diseases of the blood and its circulation.

For the last several years each incoming junior class of the medical school has purchased a brown derby and presented it to "Dr. Billy" with appropriate ceremonies. He has worn it in class until some other student earned it by a poor recitation. Each inscribed his name upon the hat before he passed it on. At the end of the year it returned to the professor with a practically complete roster of the class upon it.

The 45-year-old dean was born in Norristown, Pa., received his medical degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1911, and came to the University of Wisconsin as a member of the staff of the department of student health in 1912 after service in Philadelphia hospitals.

University regents selected Dr. Middleton to succeed the late Dr. Charles R. Bardeen, dean of the medical school since its foundation, after the latter's death last June.

Thanks Await Home Burglar For Alarm

DARTMOUTH, Mass.—If the burglar who ransacked J. Cornell Brown's home will return, he will receive a check for his thoughtfulness.

It seems that the thief, in some manner, started a fire in Mrs. Brown's automobile. After extinguishing the fire, he departed, empty-handed.

Appreciative, Brown put the following notice on the post office bulletin board: "Now that we have all our money in the bank, if the thief will call during the day at my home, I will gladly give him a check, as his present methods are annoying us. Thanks for not biting the dog Friday night."

Statue Carved 20,000 Years Ago

PARIS.—Exploring the sub-earth and learning how prehistoric man lived, suffered and died 20,000 years ago is the perilous job of Norbert Casteret.

To ascertain the customs of ancestral cave men, whose crude drawings decorate the walls of Pyrenean caverns, Casteret, in a modern scientific sense, has become a cave man, at the risk of his life. Often, to achieve his goal, he has plunged into the ice-cold waters of underground lakes where a false move might mean death.

Casteret's purpose is to learn the daily life of man's earliest ancestors, to wrest from their dwelling places, undisturbed for untold ages, the secrets of their existence, plus their struggles against the animals of that epoch.

While devout pilgrims from every zone and every land pray before the shrine of Lourdes, he is uncovering, many feet below the surface, ancient altars where cave men also prayed, 200 centuries ago, and left curious votive offerings.

In his subterranean explorations, Casteret has found many unusual things. Recently he stumbled across the statue of a bear, carved by some crude, nameless sculptor. Savants of many countries inspected it and declared it the oldest statue in the world. Its age is estimated at some 20,000 years. To reach this statue, Casteret had to plunge into dark streams, crawl through holes and traverse vast halls where stalactites hung down from vaults whose depths he could only guess in the dim light of the candle he had carried with him in his rubber bathing cap.

Besides thoroughly examining all known caves of southwest France, where early man had his dwelling place (there are more than a hundred in the Pyrene region), Casteret has added to the number. He discovered the Grotte Casteret, named after him, in the region of Mont Perdu. He also discovered a gigantic cavern in the region of the Pic de Cagire.

Sisters Meet, Both Unaware They're Kin

GALESBURG, Ill.—Mrs. Arthur Swanson of Galesburg and her sister, Mrs. Theodore Ousbeck of Arlington, Mass., met here for the first time in thirty years recently. Until last October, neither woman knew she had a sister.

Thirty years ago Mrs. Swanson and her parents left Sweden, where she was born. Prior to that time, her father and mother had permitted a second daughter, Mrs. Ousbeck, to be adopted by a neighboring family. The girls were too small to know of the existence of each other when the separation occurred.

It was not until last October, when their mother died in Sweden and left property to both, that either woman knew she had a living relative. When the will

OLD-FASHIONED SIMPLICITY

TELEPHONE SERVICE in this country is modern. It leads the world. Yet there is an old-fashioned simplicity about the Bell System. This applies to capital structure and financial methods as well as to the nation-wide plan of decentralized operation under centralized control.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has only one class of stock and that stock is not watered. It has 675,000 stockholders living in every corner of the land. Their average holding is twenty-eight shares. No individual or organization owns as much as one per cent of the stock. There are no secret reserves or hidden assets. This structure is not of recent origin, but dates back many years to the early days of the telephone. It has lived on because it is right and is the best interest of the public. It has been fundamental in making the Bell System a distinctive American business.

In the Bell System, the American Telephone & Telegraph Company is the parent company, and operates the long distance lines connecting the 24 regional Bell companies. Bell Laboratories carries on the research work; Western Electric manufactures, purchases, and distributes.

Without this specialized organization back of the men and women of the Southwestern Bell, telephone service might be possible. But it could not be service as uniformly good, as quietly accurate, as far reaching, and as inexpensive as the service you know today.

A "bargain" is sometimes a bargain

A good many people look on August as their lucky month—and we don't mean those who spend it lying on the sand and taking in salt air.

We mean those people who have formed the habit of buying things when other people aren't... porch rugs and luggage and towels and lamps and all sorts of things, for use now and for use next season.

Of course they have learned that "bargains" are not always bargains. They know how to recognize quality and style and worth, how to find the strong points and how to avoid weakness. And much of their knowledge has come from the advertisements in this newspaper.

All of us follow advertising, but some people study it so thoroughly that they know exactly what they want and where to get it. They are the ones who find the real bargains. Their money buys more things and better things—in August and all through the year.
