Breathless Moment of Suspense

BOY MEETS GROUND—HARD

Lady Luck rode as a passenger with Chester Nephew, 17, of Batavia, N. Y., when he made his first parachute jump. The leap almost ended in tragedy when he let go at 1500 feet and the chute fouled in the shrouds of his borrowed balloon, as pictured above. But it worked loose in time to land him safely, if pretty heavily. He had planned to jump from his home-made hot air balloon, but it burned while being inflated. Warren Allen, noted balloonist, lent him the professional balloon seen here.

The Perpetual Zero Hour

A new word ought to be invented. Somebody ought to think up a good, realistic word that would mean peace, but not the state of affairs that has been going by that label for so many generations now.

There might be a use for a word like that sometime. You never can tell.

Paul C. Smith, San Francisco editor who toured Europe recently with Herbert Hoover, writes that there will be no new war, that the question is simply how long it will take for the old World War to return to the trenches.

Language of the same kind might have been used before 1914. Smith emphasizes that no country wants war today. Every participant in the World War, just before participation became a fact, declared that war was being forced upon it.

Afterwards, there was no new peace. The world returned to that old peace that has made its name meaningless, that delusion of every war's making that is merely a hysterical truce whose new conditions force upon it the needs of its own destruction.

This present war-without-trenches can scarcely be blamed wholly on the World War. The deeper cause is to be found in those primitive concepts of international relations which make every "peace" simply a little soft music before the curtain goes up on the next murderous act.

During the next war-in-the-trenches men will be wondering, with reasonable fear, how long it will take that comparatively brief period of active warfare to resolve itself into the perilous stalemate we now have.

A man in California was kicked by a dying mule, and St. Louis votes that the most annoying noise is a rooster's crow, and there certainly ought to be material for a Republican cartoonist in that pair of items.

Child marriages, according to a recent news dispatch, are increasing in England. Oh, do they have exemptions for dependents there, too?

This Man, Joe Murray

BY WILLIAM CORCORAN Copyright, 1938, by William Corcoran; NEA Service, Inc.

CHAPTER I

I WANT to tell this story. It is a love story, but is not about a girl and a man and the conflict between them until they finally give up and try to pull together, which is most love stories are. This is about love itself, and that makes it an unusual story.

What is love? You'd think anybody would know, with all the talk there is about it. They don't. I think I have an idea, and that is why I tell this story.

It begins with Joe Murray, a young man, a very young man just starting to work and spending his first earned money on the girls. I guess that was the main reason why Joe went to work as soon as he could; and the simple fact that every young man in Joe's walk of life does the same. Joe was born on Simpson street on the south side of the city in a fourth-floor railroad tenement flat that gave shelter to the elder Murrys and seven children for many years. As a little fellow Joe played with the little girls on the playground; as a boy he tormented the waspish young girls on the block; as a young buck after his voice changed and he began to have investigated the possibilities in the next block and the one beyond. So when he became a young man, rather handsome with his 19 years, a lithe, smooth canter and a smart, glib talker, with all of the self-confidence that comes from bringing down a pay

Illustration by E. H. Gunder.

There were plenty of girls. The difference in Sparksburg was Helen. Joe apart, setting her family against him or having him get in bad with the police quite innuenvelope almost equal to the old man's—it was logic enough that Joe should blow it and try his luck around the country wherever there were plenty of jobs and money and people . . . and girls.

This may sound as if Joe were a mere brainless gam chase, out for what he could get, and no regard for where or how. That isn't true. Joe had brains, and he wasn't mean or underhanded. It is true that he was out for what he could get; so to speak, but he was not the kind to think twice about what he gave in return, and he gave a good deal, all he had at the time, you might say. He was never cunning or insinuating, and he could forget a lot. If a girl chose to be insulted by his advances, which had in them all the nerve and gray humor in the world . . . why tan she knew where the road, at least, and nobody was putting anything over on her! Joe never cared. There'd be another along in a moment, and she would choose not to be insulted, laughing with him at his audacity instead, and she and Joe would play together and have times a swell time and no harm done. And meantime the first one would sit at home thinking bitterly about Joe and all the young men insulting girls, and she'd have herself a perfectly terrible time, lonesome as the very devil, and nobody to care about it but herself.

Joe was not very long alone if he could help it, any time, anywhere. The Murrys at home heard from Joe all over the nation, usually from some town where the smokestacks were thick and jobs plentiful. Not until he reached Sparksburg did he settle. He explained only that he had a job, liked the town, lived in a clean boarding house where most of the people were Poles, and thought he'd stave a while; he was tired of traveling. The old man mumbled over that; section hand on the railroad didn't seem much of a job to him, who was an expert on a lathe and a good boxer above a sported and said, "It's happened. I've been waiting for it. He's just the one! They've been chasing him since he could walk; you'd think he'd know enough."

"Enough what?" growled the old man. "What do you think's keeping him in that outlandish part of the country but some girl?" The old woman stared at her man, and a grim satisfaction came to her. "Well, anyway, whoever she is, she won't have him long. The Murray strain is strong in him. He'll blow, as he calls it, soon enough." But the grim satisfaction was short-lived. "I only hope she's old enough so that the police don't have to pick up and go after him."

The old man quietly gathered up his pipe and newspaper and walked to another part of the house. Joe and the girls were a sore subject with the old woman . . . and yet he knew she got a lot of satisfaction out of it, like any vain mother at all. The last he heard was her indignant snort that gave it all away. "A Polack! Now wouldn't he?"

IT WAS much to his own surprise that Joe was settled down in Sparksburg, which had no particular appeal after the first few days. It was a town of factories and mills and railroads with a lively Main Street and downtown district and a lake where everybody went summer days not far in the mountains. There were plenty of girls in those factories, gay, independent girls who willingly rode out to the lake to dance and come home when they felt like it . . . which was late when they were with Joe, for they were usually no more anxious to go home than he was. Still, there were other towns with plenty of girls. The difference in Sparksburg was Helen. Now don't think this is an after all. I could turn it that way if I wanted, keeping Helen and cently, and correcting everything in the end and marrying them off. But that would be distorting the facts, because all this actually once happened. I'll even tell in advance that Joe never married Helen. He never even "touched" her, as he would put it himself. Not that it didn't occur to him; quite the contrary. But for once he only dreamed, waiting, and the dream was astonishingly sweet. Joe, you see, was head over heels in love.

Helen was the only daughter in Joe's boarding house. She was, as the Irish and Germans and Yankees put it, a Polack. That is a condescending word, but you couldn't condescend to Helen. The Poles are a clean and thrifty and genteel people, with remarkable beauty in their breed, and Helen at 17 was all of that beauty in flower. But these are only words, you'd have to know, to have seen the flowering of Polish beauty in a drab, bleached, colorless mill town setting to know what I'm talking about.

I don't want to go too deeply into the subject of Helen. I don't care to think too much about it. But this is life I am talking about not something in a love story. They must have made a picture when they were together: Joe tall and dark and straightly handsome with a crisp sort of jaw and mouth and quick brown eyes, half way between a rake and a gallant in his hardboiled, likeable way and Helen, tall and slender and at the same time round and blooming of breast, beautifully curved of body, fair and clean of skin and hair and so clear and blue of eye. Neither was a fashion plate but they were healthy and handsome and young. Clothes, an jewels and fashionable polish as in the way if you have those things, as all the great painters have made plain. Then besides all that, there was this: the two of them were in love for the first time in their lives (To Be Continued)

Snake Coils Under a Bed In a Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO — Lee H. Juarna, 28, hotel bellhop, still believes the habit of looking under the bed to see if there is a burglar (or a man, if the looper happens to be a woman) is a good one. On the occasion of one of his recent peeps he discovered a snake snugly wrapped up in the springs of his bed. An officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals dislodged the reptile with a pole and loop. It was a gopher snake which had found its way to the fourth floor of the hotel, without taking the elevator.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS - By Blosser

By HARRY GRAYSON

BY HARRY GRAYSON Sports Editor, NEA Service

RACING history's pages are filled with familiar, and sometimes unfamiliar, names of men who spent years and years in efforts to improve the breed. Just such a man is Harry A. Miller, the grand old-young man of automobile racing. What the Wideners, Woodward, Whitney, Riddies, and Vanierbilts are to the oats and bluegrass, such is Miller in the land of supercharger fliers, and piston displacement. Miller, whose shop is situated in Los Angeles, spends time and money in improving the design of the racing automobile just as those who fancy running horses spend time and money breeding fine thoroughbreds. May 30 finds War Admiral and Seabiscuit, the two outstanding thoroughbreds, meeting in a special mile and a quarter match race at Belmont Park to determine a championship. The same day finds America's lead-footed car pilots starting around the Indianapolis Motor Speedway in a grueling 500-mile race to determine a racing cham, onship.

MILLER, recognized as the world's greatest builder and designer of racing cars, has four six-cylinder, rear-engine, four-wheel drive, streamlined all-aluminum speedsters entered in this year's Indianapolis event. He is shooting for his 10th straight victory in the classic, and such is his record that he probably will be more surprised if he doesn't win than if he does. Being first is no novelty to Miller. Records show that the first car to get the checkered flag in Indianapolis usually are Millers. If not Miller cars, a peek under the hood will disclose they were powered, with Miller engines. Among his engineering developments in the field of automobile racing are front-drive, four-wheel drive, aluminum alloy pistons, superchargers, and downdraft carburetors. Miller's 1938 cars are designed to serve three distinct types of racing: (a) the 500-mile race in Indianapolis, (b) road racing, and (c) improvement of speed records on the dry lake at Bonneville, Utah.

NEW features this year include four-wheel hydraulic disk brakes, in which the drums are stationary, and rear-engine, four-wheel drives, the latter an innovation in this country. Bodies, the radiating system, and the transmission are departures from conventional racing design. The bodies practically lift off the cars when work is being done on the engine, thus making adjustments much easier. Radiators have been placed on the sides of the cars rather than at the front. This has been done to prevent the radiators from filling with dirt in dirt track racing. The device by which the cars are started is new to racers, although it has been used in aviation engines. The Miller Specials are started by the explosion of a cartridge, which is slipped into a gun, the barrel of which leads into the compression chamber of the starter.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The shipbuilding and shipoperating industries have had the largest aggregation of lobbyists in Washington that has appeared during their long history of successful lobbying. Not only have all the old familiar faces been present, many new ones were recruited. Reasons: 1. The $1,156,000,000 naval expansion program, recently passed. 2. The 1936 Merchant Marine Act designed to stimulate a $1,200,000,000 construction program and stabilize maritime labor conditions. The fight still goes on to persuade Roosevelt and Congress to lift the embargo on arms in Spain. But it has been virtually a lost cause since Roosevelt and Secretary Hull decided to tell the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to lay off. Hull formally warned that removal of the embargo might endanger peace. Administration insiders privately confess that the real reason the White House hasn't acted favorably is a fear of losing the votes of many American Catholics. Some leaders in the movement think they can stir up sufficient counter-pressure from Protestant groups. They probably can't. "Say anything except that I'm unmarried," Slattery told Interior's publicity man who was writing up his appointment. "Or they'll think I'm an eligible bachelor." Mr. Slattery is unmarried and an eligible bachelor. Factual material for Senator "Young Bob" LaFollette's recent third party speech was supplied by Economist Leon Henderson, outstanding New Deal broadcaster. (Copyright, 1938, NEA Service, Inc.)

SYMBOL OF ETERNAL PEACE BETWEEN THE STATES--

The Eternal Light Peace Memorial pictured above, is now being raised at Gettysburg, Pa., site of the greatest battle of the Civil War, and will be dedicated by President Roosevelt as a symbol of eternal peace between the states. The inset at left shows the Wills Mansion where Abraham Lincoln wrote his famous Gettysburg Address. It now is being used as a commercial building, but bears a sign (indicated by circle) showing the room which Lincoln used. The inset at right shows an artist's conception of the repulse of Pickett's charge during the great battle.

GETTYSBURG, Pa. — Memorial Day means just a bit more to the townspeople of Gettysburg this year. Early in June many of the surviving veterans of the Confederate and Union armies are coming back for a reunion at the site of the Civil War's most historic battlefield.

President Roosevelt, who has called Gettysburg the "greatest battle ever fought on the American continent," is coming too. He will make the dedication address as the Eternal Light Peace Memorial is unveiled on Oak Ridge. The light on the crest of the memorial will never go out. It is the symbol of eternal peace between the states . . . and of the peace that has finally come for those aged men who fought here so many years ago.

The veterans are coming with an attendant for each and they are to be the guests of the state of Pennsylvania and the nation. Only 8000 of them are now alive and many will not be able to attend. The U. S. Army will put on a show for those who come and many additional thousands of visitors.

A rehearsal of modern warfare will be held on the very meadows where 75 years ago 50,000 men and boys in gray surged to the attack in Pickett's charge against the heavy cannonading of the Union forces.

The reunion of the Confederate and Union veterans will last from the first to the seventh of July, with the dedication of the Eternal Light Peace Memorial taking place July 3.

Although this is the first official joint reunion, it is in reality a sequel to an incident of 25 years ago. At that time more than 50,000 veterans of the North and South met at Gettysburg in less formal gathering than that of this year. Governor John K. Tener invited them all to come back again in 1938, and Pennsylvania is now making good on that invitation.

Visitors to Gettysburg will find a town strong with historic atmosphere. The 2500-acre panorama of the battlefield has been carefully preserved; farm houses still proudly display shell scars of the great battle.

Eight miles to the west is the blue and misty South Mountain chain. Nearer to town are the outlying ridges of Oak, Seminary and Cemetery ridges, with two Round Tops crowning Cemetery ridge.

The dignified Wills Mansion where Abraham Lincoln wrote his famous Gettysburg address is still standing but now is occupied by a bustling, blue-front drug store. Above the street floor there is a sign: "In This Room Abraham Lincoln Wrote His Famous Gettysburg Address."

And so another Memorial Day comes to Gettysburg, and the town looks forward to the ceremonies that will make it more than ever the shrine that symbolizes peace between the states.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—"Hoppy" 200-pound porker from the McCarthy farm in Tyringham, has apparently answered Lewis Carroll's question "whether pigs have wings."

Big Job for Such a Little Fellow

Look close and you'll spot the resemblance. The shy-smiling youngster above with the battered hat and old canvas golf bag draped over his shoulder is none other than Slamming Sam Sneed. The picture of the White Sulphur Springs star was taken when he was eight, on the day when, he says, he had to run away from home to try his hand at caddy for the first time.

G-Man Says the Hot Days Spur Violent Crimes

HOUSTON, Texas—Don't provoke your friends during the hot summer months if you think they have homicidal tendencies. R. T. Harbo of Washington, administrative assistant of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, offers this advice.

In an address to a civic group here, Harbo said that people are more likely to commit murder in hot weather than at any other time. Harbo further advises husbands not to taunt or tease wives unnecessarily.

"If you examined the records of 100,000 killers at large," he said "you probably would find that more of them were women."

The G-man said that less than half of the nation's killers ever have served prison sentences for their crimes.

"Last year there were 12,000 murders," he continued. "Police took into custody 9,000 men. Half of this number was not punished at all. Half of them was convicted to serve less than four years in prison."

"Persons who have shown they are going to commit crimes as soon as they get out of prison again, should serve lifetime sentences."

"We have records of 13,600 kidnapers, extortionists and bank robbers in Washington. Of 2,800 who were paroled, 96 per cent were arrested while on parole and 49 per cent were arrested soon after their paroles expired."

"And two-thirds of those re-arrested after being paroled were guilty of rape, murder and other such crimes."

Biggest Events Are Ranked In West's History

By United Press
ALBUQUERQUE, N. M.—Dr. George P. Hammond, head of the history department of the University of New Mexico, attempted to name the most outstanding historical events in the history of the western Americas but had to compromise with a dozen "world shaking" events.

The list, it was explained, was to be used in connection with the 1939 Golden Gate International Exposition to be held in San Francisco.

Dr. Hammond named the following as the 12 most outstanding historical events in the history of the western Americas:

- 1. Discovery of the Pacific by Magellan.
2. Crossing of the Pacific by Cortez.
3. Conquest of Mexico by Cortez.
4. Conquest of Peru by Pizarro.
5. Coronado expedition through New Mexico and Texas to Kansas.
6. Settlement of the California coast by the Portola-Serra Expedition.
7. Louisiana purchase.
8. Revolt of the Latin American countries against Spain.
9. Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo which gave California, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada to the United States.
10. Discovery of gold in California.
11. Acquisition of Oregon Territory by the United States.
12. Annexation of Texas.
