ing effect on Jan. 1, 1936.

The announcement is being made today that effective on the first of the new year all mail subscriptions will be $3 per year for the Eastland Telegram and $1.50 a year for the Weekly Chronicle.

This increase was made imperative because of increased postal rates, the management announced, and because of increases in the cost of white

The announcement is being made at this time in order to allow ample time for those receiving their papers through the mail to renew their subscriptions before the increased rates take effect.

The Chronicle and Telegram have consistently decreased subscription rates from year to year during the period of low publication costs, passing on to the reader the small decreases in the price of paper stock, and now that increases in the cost of publishing the paper have come up from time to time it has become necessary to make a small increase in the subscription rates. The new rates and increases do not effect the subscribers who receive their papers from the route boys, the price for their subscriptions remaining the same.

Long, Constant Work Gains Its Rewards

It is easy enough to do a great deal of hard, uphill work if the populace keeps standing around telling you what a great man you are while you are doing it. It is ever so much harder to keep plugging away without recognition, stocking on a thankless job whose importance hardly anyone but yourself ever realizes.

But some of the most important work in the world is done in precisely that way. And once in a while the chap who is doing it does come through, at last, to the recognition and the broadened opportunity which he deserves.

First there is the case of Hugh Hammond Bennett. Mr. Bennett has been in the U.S. Department of Agriculture since 1905, or thereabouts. Away back in the early, years of the present century he awoke to the menace of soil erosion and discovered that we were using our soil so carelessly that we would ultimately ruin the rich farm areas which have helped to make us a great and powerful nation.

So Mr. Bennett undertook a campaign to remedy matters. For many long years he toiled unheeded in the Department of Agriculture, striving to bring about a saner any recognition, that he must have felt sometimes as if his work were utterly useless.

But finally the government and the nation awoke and installed a soil erosion service with 21,000 employes and ample funds and publicity to carry the fight to victory. And the man who was put in charge of this vast job was Hugh Hammond Bennett.

Another case. Dr. William Hallock Park has been head of the laboratories of the New York City Health Department for something like 40 years. During that time he has saved heaven only knows how many human lives, kept epidemics from striking down children, and done more than a thousand ordinary men to extend the sum total of human happiness.

He has had the fearlessness characteristic of medical scientists; when a new infantile paralysis vaccine was devised, for instance, he boldly tested it on himself, to make sure that it had no ill effects.

All this time Dr. Park went practically unheard-of by the public at large. But the other day recognition came at last, with the award to him of the Roosevelt Medal for Service, tributes from distinguished citizens, and columns of eulogy in the newspapers. He had to wait until he was

The warm air throughout the home during winter should be just as pure and contain just as much oxygen as the fresh, pure air of summer. Rooms that are poorly ventilated, even though sufficiently warm for comfort, can be injurious to health. Stale or stagnant air is depressing, and fails to produce the pleasant and stimulating effect of pure air in motion. . . . No matter what kind of fuel you use to heat your home during winter, it is important to have proper ventilation and circulation of pure air. This is especially important if the flame from the fuel comes in contact with the air you breathe. The reason is simple.

Fuel does not burn unless mixed with oxygen. Prove this to yourself by the simple test of dropping a lighted match into a bottle. Place your hand on top of the bottle and you will note that the match stick will NOT continue to burn after the oxygen inside the bottle has been used up by the burning fuel. Likewise, the oxygen content of the air inside your home is gradually reduced by the occupants of the household through the processes of breathing and by the fuel burning in your heating equipment.

Without proper ventilation the air becomes stale. Sooner or later the tender air passages of the body become inflamed, leaving them an easy prey to vicious attacks of "colds" and serious respiratory diseases. Guard your health this winter with proper ventilation as well as adequate heat in every room in your home.
