U. S. NAVY MAY USE 'SUICIDE TORPEDO' BOATS

Although Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, told the House Naval Affairs Committee that it would be "unwise" to reveal details of navy plans to spend $15,000,000 for small naval craft, many observers expect possible experimental work with "suicide torpedo boats" similar to those already developed by European nations, notably Italy.

The "suicide" warboats are small, high-powered craft, mounting a machine gun and carrying one or more torpedoes. They are believed capable of becoming an effective arm of war fleets for making quick attacks and escaping enemy gunfire by sheer speed. Most of the boats carry a crew of five or six.

Typical of the small warboats are the two shown at the right. The vessel in the top photo is a veritable battleship in miniature, privately built after the World War by the Italian poet and naval hero, the late Gabrielle D'Annunzio. Note the two torpedoes it carries on deck.

The lower picture shows one of the small warboats built by Great Britain, cutting through the water at a tremendous speed.

Operation of these "suicide" boats calls for extreme daring on the part of the crew.

themselves, without any taxation whatsoever, without any Federal contribution whatsoever, have placed upon the highways 29,610,000 automobiles and trucks. It is a modest figure to estimate the value of these automobiles and trucks at $190 each. At this figure it is then seen that the people have invested $5,633,550,000 in this method of transportation, which in time of war, could be commandeered by the Federal government.

"It is clear that highways built to meet the needs of national defense will be of untold value to nations' road users, and as one observer stated to the House committee, other countries will weigh our highway transportation system along with our other means of defense."

The home owner who is struggling along day by day, saving his money, using the family budget, and paying out his home, is entitled to be listed on anybody's Who's Who.

Have you seen a few of those nice homes we have for sale this week? If not, look at 320 North Lamar; 1310 West Commerce; 1206 South Seaman 903 South Halbryan; or 509 South Mulberry.

For Love of Polly

By RACHEL MACK

CAST OF CHARACTERS
POLLY CHELSEY, heroine, stranded in London when war breaks out.
JERRY WHITFIELD, hero, the Yankee who sees her through.
CABE L. HANKS, privateer captain.

Yesterday: Awakening after his blow in the alley, Jerry finds himself prisoner aboard a British ship.

CHAPTER X

POLLY awakened at dawn and immediately set about dressing and packing. She was pleased to think that Jerry would find her awake and profitably engaged when he came to knock on her door.

It puzzled her when morning came in earnest and he had not arrived to summon her. She thought, "I must have misunderstood. Could he have told her to call him when my trunk was ready?"

She went through the long narrow tavern halls and down the stairs into the public room. There was a good deal of stir there, for guests were paying their bills and getting ready to be picked up by one coach or another in the stable yard.

She drew the tavern keeper aside and said, "Where is Jerry Whitfield, Mr. Toby? Where is my cousin?"

"Why, I couldn't say, Miss Chelsey. Come to think of it, I've not seen him this morning."

"Then he's overslept, Mr. Toby?" Polly exclaimed. "Send a boy to his room! Quick! We're catching the Dover coach!"

Mr. Toby made haste to comply, for he was a kindly man and always concerned for his guests. He liked young Mr. Whitfield, for all that he had discovered him to be an American, and he thought Miss Polly Chelsey very appealing and mannerly.

When the boy returned to say that Mr. Whitfield was not in his room and that his bed had not been slept in, Mr. Toby and Polly looked quickly at each other. The innkeeper's expression promptly became evasive, but Polly's remained blank with surprise. "But I don't understand," she said.

"Nor I, Miss." The man felt a wave of pity for the girl before him. "Mr. Whitfield paid the bill last night, as I well recall, and drank an ale at that table near the door. . . . Wait! I'll send the porter's boy to the stable yard. He's likely out there, looking after your trunk."

"Why, yes! Polly exclaimed.

"That's where he is, I reckon." She clung desperately to this hope until the boy returned. The dog was there, he said, as lively as could be, but not Mr. Whitfield. He'd not been there since last night. The stable boy knew, because Mr. Whitfield paid him to look after the dog. He'd given him a coin last night with orders to feed and water the dog early.

Mr. Toby said kindly, "Go to your room and wait, Miss Chelsey. This is a busy time for me, as you can see. I'll send breakfast up to you. There's no knowing when something unexpected will change a man's plans."

POLLY went upstairs to her room. She tried to eat the excellent breakfast that the porter's boy brought up, but she could only look at it, blankly. She could only look at it, blankly. She could only look at it, blankly.

"You can take the tray away now," she told him. He carried out the untouched breakfast, and when he was in the hall he sat on the floor with the tray before him and disposed of sausages and coffee and wheat-bread and honey, very happily. It was a good day for the porter's boy.

An hour passed. Two hours. Polly paced the floor. She knew when the Dover coach came and went. She said to herself at five-minute intervals, "I must do something!"

At noon she went down to the public room and called Mr. Toby aside. She noticed that he seemed loathe to talk to her, for her perceptions were sharpened by anxiety now, and by speculation.

She said, "Mr. Toby, is there anything you know about Jerry Whitfield you've not told me? . . . Because if there is, you must tell me now. He's more than my cousin. He's my sweetheart and we were on the way to getting married."

"We figured it that way, Miss. My wife and me. It's pleasant to see young things in love right under your nose. In this tavern, now, a body sees plenty of crabbled couples disagreeing over the food. Plenty of business men from Liverpool and Bristol and the like. Plenty of young men coming down from Oxford and Cambridge for a fling of fun. Plenty of spinsters traveling with their nieces or their maids. Plenty of—well, of everything but sincere young sweethearts, Miss. I was saying to my wife only yesterday—"

POLLY caught the innkeeper's wandering eye and held it. "Mr. Toby, you're evading. I asked you if you know anything about Jerry Whitfield that I ought to know."

"Well, there's nothing to amount to, Miss Chelsey. Things come up in a man's life, unexpected like. If I was you, now, I'd take off my bonnet and settle down for a couple of days to wait for him. He'll be back, like as not, as apologetic as can be for upsetting you."

"I'm more than upset," Polly said. "I'm frightened. Something's happened to him. Something terrible! Nothing else would make him desert me just when we're getting out of England. . . . You're a good man, Mr. Toby, though you ARE an Englishman, and I'm not afraid to trust you. We're Americans—"

"My wife and me knew that too, though we've not told it. Are you bound for France?"

"Yes. We expected to slip across the Channel in a smuggler's boat. Jerry arranged it. That's why I say he'd not have deserted me unless he'd met foul treatment."

"No, Miss," said Mr. Toby deliberately, for he believed he saw his duty now. "You can put your mind at rest on that score. It's not that. It's something else. There was—there was a young lady came into the public room and talked to him last night at the table where he was sitting, near the door. I take it they were old friends. They had coffee together—they and another man that had on hackney clothes. Mr. Whitfield asked the barmaid to fetch three cups of strong coffee from the kitchen, and they all drank together. After that they went out together."

Polly's face was still and white. "Did she have on a sky-blue bonnet? And a sky-blue dress, cut in the neck?"

"Yes, Miss Chelsey. That was fair complexioned. . . . I'd not be too hard on him, Miss. I've seen men and women come and go under my roof and I know human nature. It's weak. Human nature's weak, Miss Chelsey. You wait here till he comes back. He'll come. Decent men don't desert their own."

"Thank you for your information, Mr. Toby," Polly said in a voice that was much too quiet. "But never mind the advice. I'll take the next coach for Dover."

CHEANEY

The nice sunshine that we are having is greatly appreciated, as most all the farmers are preparing their land for another crop, and gardening time with the ladies is causing them all to put out plants and try for a good garden, as it's a great help to the farmer's home.

Some spring oats are now being sowed. Winter grain does not look as good as it should, owing to too much rain. A few days of clear sunshine will be a great help to pastures, and is greatly needed. Fruit in general is being considered, and a good lot is being put out.

Our school is progressing fine on the second semester. Much interest is being shown, both by the students and faculty.

A rabbit drive last week at Cheaney was well attended and many rabbits were killed. A nice dinner was served at the church for all. Thanks for the assistance from Ranger and other towns and come again, as we will make a drive each first and third Fridays. All are asked to come and bring lunch, and let's thin out the rabbits before they ruin our gardens and crops.

Oscar Strickler, J. P. and Mrs. Strickler, and Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Browning were at Eastland on business Tuesday.

R. E. Harper of Ranger was around Cheaney Friday, meeting his friends. He lived here before the boom and has many friends here who were glad to have him come back for a visit.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Powers and son, Jack, of Desdemona, visited around Cheaney last Sunday.

Messrs. Eugene Ferrell, Lin Gentry and others are doing some fencing for Oscar Scott in the Cook canyon.

Aunt Vick Blackwell of Ranger is visiting her son, Joe, and family here.

The Cheaney girls defeated the Olden girls 17 to 12 in a closely contested basketball game Tuesday.

The high school boys and girls played basketball at Oliver Springs last week. The scores, 23 to 5 in favor of Cheaney boys, and a 24 to 6 victory for the Cheaney girls. They are now practicing baseball.

Mrs. J. R. Blackwell, who has been under the care of a doctor for some time, is reported improving and will soon be out again.

Dick Weekes and Obie Elrod were transacting business in Ranger Monday.

Eugene Ferrell's mother, Mrs. Milton of Duster, is visiting in the Ferrell home.

Charley Rogers let his team run away Tuesday, but fortunately no harm was done.

Mrs. Ritter McMurphy and children of Breckenridge visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Elrod, last Sunday.

MOTHER'S VACANT CHAIR
By Albin Fleming

There is a chair that's vacant,
A chair that's worn and old.
To me it is more precious
Than though it was of gold.
I neeled by it in childhood,
To say my evening prayer,
But then it was not vacant
For mother dear was there.
And when the prayer was ended
Her lips caressed my brow,
My heart is filled with longing
For her caresses now.

Turn backward, oh, turn backward,
Time, in your hasty flight,
Turn back, turn back and change me
Into a child tonight.
Bring back my darling mother,
And place her in her chair,
And let me kneel beside her
To say my evening prayer.
And when the prayer is ended,
I'll linger to be kissed;
To feel those sweet caresses
That these long years I've missed.

Though time cannot bring loved ones
Back from that peaceful shore,
But time can lead us to them
To live forever more.
Time can't bring darling mother
Back to her old worn chair,
But time can take me to her,
There in that city fair.
Some time I shall cross o'er,
Across the mystic sea;
And I shall find dear mother,
Waiting there for me.

CONSERVING THE SABBATH

Text: Mark 2:23-3:6

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

CUSTOMS and even sound principles tend to lose their reality when obedience to them becomes formal and conventional. They tend also in the same way to become matters of bigotry and prejudice rather than of vital and intelligent conviction.

A distinctive institution of Judaism in the days of Jesus was the Sabbath. It was a noble institution based upon a fine conception and a sense of human need. It was the precursor of the Christian Sunday, which many Christians prefer to call the Sabbath, linking it with the Jewish institution rather than with the pagan derivation from which the word "Sunday" comes. There is no doubt whatever that Jesus, as a sincere and devout Jew, highly regarded the Sabbath; but he found this noble institution given over in the minds of many people to purely formal observance, and to mere disregard of all sense of deeper human need and of higher human values.

When he healed a man upon the Sabbath Day, instead of rejoicing that a fellow mortal had found health, the narrow people for whom observance of the Sabbath had become a matter of prejudice and bigotry found fault because the man had been healed on the Sabbath Day. Our lesson tells how the disciples, as they went through the grain fields on the Sabbath Day and were hungry, plucked the ears and began to eat the wheat, just as many of us, when we were boys, have done. With these disciples it was a matter of sheer hunger.

Why should they not have taken the food that was near at hand and that required no work of preparation other than rubbing it with their hands?

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By Mrs. Gaynor Maddox
NEA Service Staff Writer

To be a modern cook, you need a touch of nonchalance. Season your Jambalayah with a few grains of humor, flavor your Gypsy Casserole with the spirit of adventure. In other words, don't let cooking get you down.

Jambalayah
(Serves 4 to 6)

One cup cold meat, cut in small pieces (veal, lamb or chicken), 1 1/2 cups stewed fresh or canned tomatoes, 3/4 cup steamed rice, 2 small white onions, 1-4 green pepper, 2 stalks celery, salt and pepper, buttered bread crumbs.

Combine rice, tomatoes and cut up meat. Simmer in saucepan for 10 minutes. Then add chopped onions and chopped green peppers, season to taste and place in buttered casserole. Cover top with buttered bread crumbs. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 1 hour.

Such food appears in the unconventional collection written by Helen Train Hillis. She calls it rightly, "To the Queen's Taste." Miss Hillis insists that a spot of unorthodox methods in cooking helps brighten the dinner table. Here's her suggestion for the maid's night out—a casserole built for two. It doesn't have to cook for hours, as so many casseroles do.
