Hickok Producing and Development company No. 1 Donovan, a mile and a half southeast of the discovery well, was marked off as a "duster." Depth at which the well was abandoned was reported 4,320 feet.

Drilling at 4,760 feet, still in the Ellenburger lime topped at 3,404 feet, was reported from Gallagher-Lawson at No. 1 Terry, Comanche county.

Speaking of Illusions About the Next War

If the Japanese invasion of China and the Spanish civil war have left you any illusions about humanitarian rules in war, let recent, casually spoken remarks from Russia blow those illusions sky-high.

Said Commissar of War Klementi E. Voroshilov, explaining that the Red army was ready to use poison gas:

"Because Fascist countries violated the 1925 convention on the use of gas in warfare, we were forced to train chemical troops.

"If the enemy spreads gas behind our frontiers, we will pour bucketsful of poison gas on the heads of those gentlemen."

The commissar didn't raise his voice. He might have been talking about pouring paris green on potato bugs.

And that is the way war will be. Army flyers with fine accuracy will bomb munition stations and shipyards. Recruited army flyers with less accuracy will bomb munition stations and shipyards—but will hit apartments and hospitals and schools three blocks away, for three blocks is a short distance when you're bombing from 10,000 feet.

There will be cries of "atrocious" and then there will be retaliation. And then there will be gas by the bucketful.

War isn't a simple contest between the strength of men and armies any more; it's a complex, jumbled puzzle where propaganda is as important as bullets and the front is anywhere that life exists.

Have no doubt that gas will be used in the next widespread war, for gas is a weapon, one of the deadliest, and gas is demoralizing, and that is reason enough.

Gas will be used with cause, for cause can be found. It will be as simple as false propaganda, as simple as touching a lever in an airplane 10,000 feet up, as simple as the wind which carries rolling clouds of death through city streets and country lanes. Gas will be used.

Q. Who presided at the Texas convention that voted to withdraw from the Union?

A. O. M. Roberts, then associate justice of the supreme court and afterward governor of Texas, lovingly known to Texans as "The Old Akaide," who was one of the 70 who issued the call.

Q. When was the secession vote taken, what was the result and when did withdrawal become effective?

A. By order of the convention, the vote on secession was taken Feb. 23, 1861, and became effective March 2, exactly a quarter of a century after the declaration of independence from Mexico and on Houston's 68th birthday. The vote has been variously reported, but it believed to have been 46,129 for withdrawal and 14,697 against, about 10,000 of the electorate not voting.

Q. What was the "Committee of Public Safety?"

A. It was a committee of 19 members appointed by the secession convention of January-February, 1861, and given extensive powers to carry out the secession plans, one of its first undertakings being to get possession of the United States war stores then in Texas.

Q. How did Houston attempt to offset any possible action of the secession convention, and with what results?

A. He convened the legislature and sent in a message that the convention was without authority of law, represented a minority, and that the rights of the people could best be maintained in the Union, and urged deliberate action. The legislature, however, recognized the authority of the convention to act for the people, but provided that its action should be submitted to the electorate for approval or rejection.

Q. What reasons did the secession convention give for its action?

A. The secession ordinance recited two principal reasons for withdrawal from the Union: Failure of the government to protect the frontier of Texas, and recent evidence of its intention to destroy the interest and prosperity of Texas and its sister slave-holding states.

NYA Farm Project For Boys Planned

AUSTIN.—Another NYA student training project, on 12 farm boys from Caldwell, Texas and Guadalupe counties, will be given an opportunity to learn agricultural methods at the Foundation Farm, near Kellam, state youth director announced.

The boys will live on the farm during part of each year under the direction of farm staff. During the hours they will be given classroom and laboratory instruction in agriculture. The foundation was established by Oilman Edgar Davis for the benefit of farming in Caldwell, Guadalupe and Guadalupe counties.

Mr. Kellam also announced that 6,684 youths were employed in NYA work projects during the month of February. Since all are engaged in part-time work, opportunities for off-job training are provided for as many youths as possible, he said.

Among recently approved projects are these: Carthage, Panola county, consisting in construction of a room addition to brick high school building. Youths work on and as helpers to skilled workmen. Center Point school, Freestone, Texas: Youths work on construction of co-operative mitory on school grounds which 30 negro youths recently will be housed in NYA resident training center. Community Center for Waco: Youths are assisting in modeling and enlarging which will be used as Center, to be operated by Ringgold Park, Brown Park will be cleared and ed. Undeveloped sections opened to the public.

Workers to Lose Federal Aid On Highways Is Cut

WASHINGTON.—"One of the helpful steps the Federal Government can take for employment is to continue Federal aid on the present basis, and, conversely, one of the best ways to increase the number of jobs would be to withdraw or reduce Federal aid," declared C. M. Edgerly, president of the American Association of State Highway Officials and California state highway engineer.

But a small fraction of the $100 million goes to labor, and only 85 per cent to 85 per cent of road workers are from the unemployed," explained Edgerly.

The value of Federal road aid is being reduced, and the reduction of employment would result if Federal road aid were withdrawn or reduced, points out outlined to the committee of Congress at the recent hearings. The hearings have awakened widespread interest in the building of highways is an essential business, and is as important as other industries, such as the manufacturing of automobiles, which is dependent upon improv-

To Entertain

Tad Lucas, formerly known as the champion all-around cowgirl of the world, who will be in Eastland Wednesday afternoon at 2:45 with boosters for the Southwest Exposition and Fat Stock show, March 11-20 at Fort Worth.

At least a half-million workers are dependent upon highway improvement. These are mostly men who would have a difficult time finding other means of livelihood.

"Federal aid has been made the backbone of state highway construction. The state highway construction programs depend upon it, and so do the workers.

"To materially reduce Federal road aid in any way would be to directly reduce employment. The country is not ready to re-employ these men in other activities. Money saved to the Federal Government through cutting or withdrawing Federal aid, quite likely would have to be expended through some form of relief, and in greater amount.

"As pointed out at the hearings we start out with materials of no intrinsic value and build them into roads.

"And so, in road building the nation's raw materials are converted into highways that serve all the people, and into highway systems that are entirely self-liquidating. The raw materials as such are worth little or nothing. It is the hand of labor that makes them useful, and it is to labor the money goes almost entirely.

"A reduction in the building of safer highways not only would affect thousands and thousands of road workers, but it would immediately reach out to workers in many, many industries, large and small, sand and gravel plants, factories, mills, mines, quarries, railroads, contractors, equipment manufacturers, distributors and dealers. No national recovery can be made if this widespread industry is thrown for a loss.

"Farm groups, labor, road user departments, railroads, state highway departments, contractors, and many others all have joined in urging Congress to take speedy and favorable action on the Federal aid bills now in committee, which call for continuing Federal aid on the present basis," Mr. Purcell concluded.

Woman Says House Trailer Is Place to Raise a Family

By United Press
FORT WORTH—A house trailer, believes Mrs. D. M. Purcell, is the place to raise your family—son, dog and all.

Mrs. Purcell, wife of an airline dispatcher, was plagued as are many other women with keeping a six-room house and moving from place to place as her husband was transferred. Now, their mode of life is simplified. She keeps one room instead of six and moves on a moment's notice.

A six-year old son, Donnie, lives with his parents in the trailer home and keeps a pet cocker spaniel dog.

The Purcells moved into a trailer when a doctor advised him to stay out of doors. Now, Mrs. Purcell said, she wouldn't exchange trailer living "for anything." Her son stays out of doors also and has never been ill. Moreover, she is well satisfied with his playmates and her neighbors, whom she describes as "the most interesting people in the world."

"Best of all," Mrs. Purcell said, "we've been healthier and happier than we were before in years."

Secret Bands of Terrorists Organize To Fight in China

By United Press
SHANGHAI—Chinese secret societies, underworld organizations and ex-army guerrilla units are united in a campaign of terrorism against both the Japanese authorities and Chinese whom they designate as "Japanese running dogs."

The campaign was said to be part of the new Chinese strategy of harassing the Japanese behind their own lines. Several recent incidents of hand-grenading Japanese soldiers and assassinating Chinese leaders suspected of cooperating with the Japanese were laid to these organizations.

Police of the International Settlement and French Concession declared war on terrorists and some Chinese patriotic groups have repudiated them. Many arrests have been made but police admit that it will be well-nigh impossible to reach the directors of the campaign due to the manner in which the groups are organized.

Li Hsi-min, a grenade-tosser captured after the attack on a Japanese army launch on Soochow Creek, said he was a member of an army "Dare-To-Die Corps" detailed by the "Ironside Commander," Chang Fa-kyei, to harass Japanese behind the lines. They were divided into cells of three persons each and received their orders from secret runners, so that one cell knew nothing of the next cell and therefore could reveal nothing of importance in case of capture.

Another line of action was the organization of "alley-way societies" to ferret out and destroy Japanese spies and traitors. These secret societies have members placed in every alley in Shanghai, and suspicious movements of any residents there immediately comes to the attention of the leaders, who "put the finger" on the suspect.

Chinese patriotic organizations, student groups and similar agencies here were genuinely distressed over these terroristic activities, believing that violence in that form would bring meager results toward the desired objective but would restrict their own work on a broader scale, and eventually make it impossible for them to use the Shanghai foreign areas as a base to conduct worldwide anti-Japanese agitation.

The viewpoint of the advocates of violence against the Japanese and Chinese traitors was explained by one member of a secret society to a Chinese student organizer.

"We are not terrorists; we are patriots," he was quoted as saying. "The name 'terrorists' as applied to us is Japanese propaganda; but if they give us that name, we will live up to it. The Japanese terror stalks abroad in open daylight here. We will meet terror with terror."

FLYING BLIND

In thick weather, it is often necessary for airplanes to "fly blind" . . . to depend on instruments rather than vision and charted landmarks. Almost uncanny in their accuracy, such instruments are nevertheless second choice in the navigation of the air.

Shoppers who trot off down-town to the stores without first consulting the advertisements of those same stores are likewise flying blind. And needlessly so. The advertisements in this paper are put here for your guidance, for your safe landing in the Ports of Value.

Study them in comfort of your home . . . map your course before you put on your hat and drop the latch-key into your handbag. Compare the products offered, their prices, their general advantages. Then set out on your shopping-trip prepared for what you will see, what you will wish to have sent home.

Let the advertisements serve as guiding beacons of buying. It's the smart thing to do.

SHARP-TONGUED Amanda Pell, who was the village's most influential "oman, knocked determinedly at the Chelsey door, observing the while that the little house with the overhanging second story was badly in need of paint.

Mrs. Pell, admitted, went quickly up the narrow winding stairs and entered the neat low-ceilinged room that was Polly's chamber.

"You've come to see the baby," Polly said. She thought in a flash Mrs. Pell resembled Oliver Dart's Mrs. Broggs, only she was not so kind and amiable.

"The baby's in the cradle, Mrs. Pell," said the blanket and look at him."

Mrs. Pell lifted and looked. She saw a sleeping infant with well-formed head and sturdy body.

"Hm-m," she said, and sighed gustily.

Mrs. Taylor, the midwife, entered on some errand and spoke deferentially to the caller. Mrs. Pell's husband owned a thriving lumber mill and a large local store, and Mrs. Taylor had an overdue account at the latter.

So many people in the village. The past year had been a hard one, with the war and all. Firewood had gone up scandalously and food was dear. If a woman dared to buy a pattern of dress goods or a new bonnet she generally had to charge it and save silver coins against the day of paying for it.

"You're looking well, Mrs. Pell," said Mrs. Taylor. "That maroon color becomes you."

"The bolt was bought for me," replied Mrs. Pell complacently. "What have you named your baby, Polly?"

"Richard Jeremiah," "Richard Jeremiah Chelsey," repeated Mrs. Pell, as if considering the euphony of the words.

POLLY flushed. "Richard Jeremiah WHITEFIELD, Mrs. Pell."

"Oh, yes. . . . Have you heard from your husband, Polly?"

"No, Mrs. Pell. It's a long time since I had any post lines on the Atlantic Ocean."

"But ships do get into port," Mrs. Pell ruminated. "Charity Parker had a letter from her husband yesterday. He'd posted it when his ship touched Providence."

"Well, everybody can't be so lucky," Polly answered defensively.

Mrs. Pell chewed her under lip thoughtfully. "I was talking to Liza Ann Williams yesterday. She said she'd never heard of Americans getting married in France. . . . Did they make out your marriage paper in English, Polly? We got to wondering."

"No, in French. Do you want Dick to translate it for you?" Polly was quivering with rage.

Mrs. Pell had repeatedly shown herself skeptical of her marital standing but never before had she been so insistently prying. Herebefore she had contented herself with dropping veiled hints at sewing circle and lifting her eyebrows whenever Polly spoke of "my husband."

Yet Amanda Pell's methods had been effective enough. Long before little Richard Jeremiah was born his mother was being spoken of as "poor Polly Chelsey." Some of the townswomen became openly cool, some treated her with ill-concealed disdain; a few snubbed her, not given to boasting. Furthermore, this had at sea doing his duty, which is what more of the men around here ought to be doing, 'stead of criticizin' the President."

It was the longest speech Polly had ever heard her father make. It left her courage.

Dick too gave Polly his trust and support. He pretended an indifference to village gossip that he was far from feeling and he tried to strengthen Polly in the belief that it did not matter. He read aloud to her a great deal—salty tales like Robinson Crusoe and translations from Virgil's Iliad that told of ships and men at sea.

But chiefly Dick helped by letting her talk about Jerry to her heart's content and by agreeing with her that he might come knocking on their door any day now, and surprise them.

As the months passed, Polly withdrew from village life entirely, holding her head in a high, proud way when she walked abroad with her father or brother. Nuisance always followed her. The little dog seemed as attractive to her as he was ridiculous to the villagers. It distressed her that Dick had no money for his medical course, and that soon there would be another mouth to feed. Yet the baby's coming gave her joy too, and a stout comfort against the seeping fear that some misfortune had overtaken Jerry.

This had been Polly's life through the winter and spring when she held her child in her arms today, Jerry's son, she had bravely said that nothing else mattered. . . . Yet she was seething with anger now at smug Mrs. Pell in her fine maroon dress—Mrs. Pell whose three daughters were next married and doing well (two of them in Boston) each with a husband at her side.

She said, "Mrs. Pell, I've learned there's one thing meaner and crueller than the British navy—it's a New England village. One like this—"

When Mrs. Pell had departed in high dudgeon, throwing back the observation that "it hardly pays to be kind to some people," Polly burst into sobs. She could not stop sobbing.

"There now!" Mrs. Taylor said. "You've got a fever and you're tossing! You mustn't get yourself worked up."

"Oh Jerry!" Polly sobbed. "Other men write letters. Why can't you? . . . It's because you're dead, my darling! Dead!"

The nurse finally had to summon old Trepid Chelsey and the lame boy to soothe her.

"That cradle, now," Trepid observed loudly to his son, "has stood up well. I planned and whittled it myself the trip I made to the West Indies a month or so before you were born. . . . Light maple. I took the wood aboard ship with me for the purpose."

"You did a good job of it. It has a graceful design and a good finish. . . . Have you noticed, father, how Nuisance lies between the cradle and the door? The intelligence of some dogs is remarkable. Let me tell you a thing I saw him do this morning—"

Polly listened, noticed that she was listening and smiled wistfully. If Jerry Whitefield never lived to come back to her there was still enough love in this humble room to fill a reasonable woman's life.

knows you personally, knows your problems and is acquainted with the conditions in your county and precinct; one who is in the best position to serve your own welfare and district as well as that of the state as a whole.

"My official record is known to most of you. I am content to base my campaign in both counties of the district on that record, for during my service as commissioner I was a low-tax advocate and as a school teacher I gave the best that was in me and did just as I propose to do in the legislature—give real representative service and a "day's work for a day's pay."

"I want to tell you briefly some of the things that I stand for, first, I am for strict economy in government and low taxes. There are too many bureaus in our state government. There is too little efficiency and too much politics. I propose to work for better government for less money. Needless employees should be weeded out and those that are kept required to be efficient. Necessary appropriations for carrying on the state business must be approved, but all appropriations should be budgeted closely and the budgets made to "stick."

"It is high time that Texas did something besides talk about tax relief. The tax burden must be more fairly distributed, tax rates reduced and no new taxes of any kind levied from any source. Texas has more than enough income. It is criminal to levy high taxes and waste the money in extravagant expenditures. It is wrong for one fund to be going in the red—constantly while other funds have enormous surpluses. It is good business for the state to adopt a "pay as it goes" plan and to curtail any spending that keeps it constantly in debt in spite of constantly increasing taxes. Let's stop hunting for new things to tax and begin hunting for costs that can be cut out. Let's put the burden on the state bureaus and employes to balance the budget and stop putting it on the shoulders of the property owner and the taxpayer."

"I believe that the legislature should authorize the county judge and the commissioners' court to settle delinquent county taxes, thus helping the taxpayer, county and state as well.

"Our statute books are cluttered up with a multitude of useless and duplicating laws. Many laws ought to be repealed outright and others simplified. Instead of passing more laws, I think the legislature ought to repeal a great number of those we now have. The country would get along a lot better."

"Our old people should be amply provided for but not one dime ought to be spent on needless political employes. Our county judges and commissioners can handle the investigation work better and certainly more fairly than outside political employes."

"A drastic nepotism law ought to be substituted for the farce that we now have in Texas thus cutting out another source of graft."

"I favor submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters which would require constitutional amendments to be voted on at general elections only."

"With this brief statement of my principles, I solicit your support. I promise you a day's work for a day's pay and that if I am your representative at Austin you and the state legislature and the rest of the state government are going to know it. I shall be on the job, keep in constant contact with my constituents and advise with them to know at all times just what they want and do not want."

"If what I have stated above meets with your approval, I shall be greatly pleased if you will speak a word in my behalf to your neighbor. I promise to give you in return the kind of service you pay your tax money for."

"Respectfully submitted, "OMAR BURKETT."

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

Text: Mark 6:30-44

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance
OUR lesson presents one of the strangest, and at the same time, one of the most fascinating stories of all history. It is the story of the feeding of the multitude, or as it is sometimes called, "the feeding of the five thousand," because the closing verse of the lesson indicates that that was the number who ate of the loaves and fishes.

Behind the Scenes in Washing

WASHINGTON.—Roosevelt, with more curiosity than confidence, is now sitting back to see whether business gets the cue which he attempted to give it when he beat the drums and asserted that the price level should advance.

He is just as thoroughly aware as anyone else that if business conditions do not improve within the next two or three months the administration will be compelled—or impelled—to promote a large new spending program in order to stimulate consumer purchasing power and achieve the same ends which are now being sought by minor encouragements and such vocal assurances as his own recent statements as to what ought to happen next.

Official but highly confidential figures are showing that since August the number of persons unemployed had increased by about 3,600,000 persons on Feb. 1. There is ample assurance that this number will have been increased by 300,000 to 400,000 by the end of February.

This means a relatively terrific drain on the national purchasing power and in the face of it not many officials see how anyone can expect an improvement in the demand for or the price level of farm products and manufactured consumer goods.
