Let Us Protect U. S. From Crackpot Isms

Whatever else the last few years may have been, they certainly have constituted a great field day for the royal order of crackpots.

It is doubtful if this country ever before saw such a huge number of panaceas and isms being advocated at one time. You can look over the field and take your choice. If you can't find at least one booth that offers the wares you like, you are at liberty to go out and set up one of your own.

Now the spectacle of all these panacea salesmen crawling out from under planks and urging us to save our country by doing this, that, or the other unusual and peculiar thing, is disturbing to a great number of sensible citizens.

But what these sensible citizens usually overlook is the fact that they themselves have cleared the road for the procession of crackpots, by failing to make an effective protest against the ills which the last few years have brought upon us.

This point was admirably brought out recently by Msgr. Michael J. Ready of Washington, assistant general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, in a speech in Cleveland.

Msgr. Ready's argument was simple and direct. The country, he said, simply cannot and will not put up forever with unemployment, hunger, injustice, and greed. If the ordinary, God-fearing citizen fails to make an effective protest against these things—through his church, his civic groups, his use of the ballot, or whatnot—someone else is going to.

If that someone else turns out to be a bushy-haired individual with an idea that all our ills will be solved if we confiscate all bank accounts larger than $75, the ordinary citizen has only himself to blame.

"In a word," says Msgr. Ready, "we must hunger and thirst after justice to save the soul of society. For, I say boldly, the preservation of Christian society depends upon our courage in making it really Christian.

"Do we wish to take the leadership in this task of reconstruction and perfect a society on the specifications of Christian social teaching, or shall we leave the task to crackpot reformers?"

Stupid and selfish as we often seem to be, the number of intelligent and level-headed citizens, nevertheless, is greater than the number of those who can be taken in by the honeyed words of the panacea salesman.

If some ism or other finally does overwhelm the country, it will be simply because the great mass of the people waited too long before letting their hearts and their consciences drive their brains to the task of putting the national house in order.

There can be no extenuating circumstance in that dastardly mailing of bombs, since it appears they did not accompany income tax payments.

The life of a westerner was saved when a bullet was deflected by a cigar lighter, which would seem to justify its existence.

POET'S CORNER

WEST TEXAS

(By Mrs. E. E. Crow, formerly of Ranger and now of Odessa) Texas, West Texas, the land of no trees; Where when a cyclone comes they call it a breeze; Where there's sand in your biscuits, Sand in your hair, sand in your bed, Sand everywhere.

Texas, West Texas, where even the elements lie; Where big, black clouds fly across the sky; Where the thunder roars and lightning flash, And it threatens and blusters and threatens, And never rains a splash.

Texas, West Texas, where the rain never falls; Where the flowers never bloom And birds sing not at all; Where the days are lonely and the nights are long, And at night you listen to the coyote's song.

Texas, West Texas, the land of cactus and thorns; Where the sand burs flourish; Where even the toads have thorns; Where the rattlesnake crawls And the scorpions sting, Hell can't be worse than West Texas in the spring.

J. Edgar Hoover—

(Continued from page 1) trial High school in 1913. He got his first job as a clerk in the Congressional library. One of the most rigid requirements which Hoover has set up for men aspiring to join the Bureau of Investigation as special agents is that they must be lawyers. Many people wonder why a man must be a lawyer to be a detective. Hoover cites the answer from his own experience. He gives credit for many of his innovations in the bureau to the fact he was trained as a lawyer. He won his law degree in 1916, by studying nights at George Washington University law school while he worked days in the library. He holds that law training invaluable. In 1924, with the bureau still a minor unit engaged solely in investigating work, famed William J. Burns resigned as director. The then-attorney-general, John G. Sargent, chose Hoover to take over the reins of the bureau. Visions of the day when the bureau would be a powerful, crime-fighting authority, capable of coping successfully with organized gangsters, early took shape in his mind. Hoover took over the task with enthusiasm. Since then he has served under three administrations—confounded politicians who firmly believed that the job should be a political plum. Hoover's acquaintanceships are innumerable but those who could be classified as intimate or close friends probably could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Privately he admits that his position, with hundreds of criminals ever on the alert to "get" him on any pretext, keeps him ever on guard.

He lives in a small, unpretentious frame house at 413 Seward Square in Southeast Washington. He spends his evenings there with his mother on the rare occasions when he is not out in the field inspecting FBI offices or leading raids, or directing—via telephone from his office—the closing in of a network of federal agents on some criminal wanted for violating federal statutes. Next installment: How Hoover Works.

SCULLER ATTACKED BY A SHARK BRISBANE.—A 10-foot shark attacked C. E. Slaughter, Queensland sculling champion, while he was sculling in the Brisbane river and he had to make a hurried dash for shore and safety. When a few yards from the bank the shark sank in five feet of water.

By HARRY GRAYSON

CHICAGO.—The Stuhldreher influence beat the new Wisconsin athletic director-coach to the punch. There were nearly 50 candidates out for spring football practice at Madison before the key man of Notre Dame's immortal Four Horsemen arrived from Villanova to straighten out the mix-up created by the comic opera row between the departed Walter Meanwell and Tubby Spears. It was largely anticipation that brought out the boys. Harry Stuhldreher, blocker and pilot of what perhaps was the most famous backfield that ever played the game, was presented to all University of Wisconsin department heads by President Glenn Frank. This was an innovation at Wisconsin, and should break down any existing barriers between faculty members and the new chief of athletics. If it fails in this, Stuhldreher will break them down on his own. He's that kind of chap—a diplomat as well as an able gridiron guide and tactician.

Ed Koltun, a guard who did not report last season, due to heavy schedule in the school engineering, may be of some help as he has shown speed and a desire to get in the thick of things. The sound of Capt. John Golemeske's name made Stuhldreher, of Notre Dame, feel perfectly at home. Captain John Golemeske, a former member of the Notre Dame football team, had been in time for him to be met when the new coach first met the Badger squad. HOWE WEISS tops the new backfield candidates by a considerable margin. Tom Kurth, a homegrown warrior, and Petrakis, of Racine, are backs who should fit in well with the Notre Dame system. This year, incidentally, is adhered to more faithfully by Stuhldreher and Elmer Layden, who has been late Knecke's post at Soule piercing Bend, than by any other pupil of the old master. Petrakis, another with a Notre Dame name, is small, but goes back in places with a football tucked under his arm. Page, a back from Shelbyville, Ind., is a fine blocker, but a ball handler. That doesn't matter to Stuhldreher mad. He's looked for men capable of clearing a path for carriers. Light Horse Hanna without his will solve Page's problem. Stuhldreher can be depended upon to get the maximum out of what he has, and henceforth isn't likely to be any internal or external in Madison. Badger varsity men will be plenty of football as they do for Wisconsin.

Soon she is a celebrity, and gets into films as an actress.

Linda tries to help him. To please him, she invites BASIL THORNE, director, to her home, though she dislikes and distrusts Thorne.

Peter Gardner writes a successful play and later comes to Hollywood. Linda sees Peter and goes to see him. She promises to marry him, but he gets a job in New York.

HOW GOES WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XIX

SOMETIMES at night, with the din of carpenters' hammers still in her ears, the incessant whoop of orchestral rehearsals, post at some piercing darts of light from other pupillated studio lights still hurting her eyes, Linda lay in the cool with a Not a word of her bed and wished all tucked up when a girl was engaged to be married back there, being engaged in Shelbyville on a business all by itself.

Linda's engagement was an engagement, and she had days of her life that had to be devoted clearing a path for her work. There were strange Horse Hairs without number and no intrusion. Plates to share her all-important day. When her wedding day came, she would have to be sandwiched in between her job and her hours at the studio. When internal got a job!

There again Thorne came into the picture. He had told Dix he might possibly—give him a chance to play in the re-takes his last picture. If only he could, Linda felt assured that Dix would have his great chance and Co., Oldsmobile, would be made easy for them to marry.

She must see Thorne again. She had been putting him off—pleading figure, over-work, anything she could think of. But now she must see him, hurry him into a decision.

On Thursday he asked her to have a cocktail with him the next morning. She accepted quickly and gratefully, and then had to break the engagement because she couldn't get away from Commonwealth City. She hated having to ask it, and feared she would not get from him again.

HE need not have worried. Thorne also was in the picture. He was persistent. He telephoned on Saturday, and asked her to dine with him at his home on Monday.

Linda had to think quickly this time. Remembering her last visit to his home, she didn't want to permit such a thing to happen again. She tried tactfully to suggest that he dine with her, reminding him of the arts of her cook. With tact that equalled hers, Thorne reminded her that she had completely forgiven him for his lapse on that first occasion, and that this was her opportunity to prove her forgiveness was sincere.

"By the way," he said at that point, "I'm going to use that young friend of yours—Carter. I'm taking him largely on your suggestion."

After that there was only one thing for Linda to say. She accepted his invitation.

Thorne telephoned Monday morning to remind her that she was dining with him that night. As though she needed that reminder! Linda selected a frock that was not too attractive and broke her usual date to have her hair done. She knew that she would look weary by 8. The company was hoping to finish shooting the last of a city sequence in the picture they were working on. In another week they would be out on location, but she would have that week between if they finished the picture that day.

SHE was deep in her manuscripts at noon when her secretary, putting aside the telephone, said, "Miss Bourne, Mr. Forman's office is calling."

"Take the message, Sylvia," Linda answered, without looking up.

"Company will be finished by 2 and leaving immediately for the mountains. Mr. Forman says you must be on location early tomorrow morning, and wants to know if you'll drive over with him," her secretary reported.

Then Linda remembered that this was the night she was to dine with Basil Thorne. She'd have to break her engagement again! Would Thorne understand this time? Linda chewed her pencil pensively.

"Tell him I'll call him back," she said.

When she was alone Linda telephoned Basil Thorne.

"I don't expect you to believe me, Basil," she said. "But here it is; we're in a terrific rush to finish the Laurel story—you know I've been doing the script—and the company has got to report at the San Jacinto location tomorrow morning. I had expected—and wanted—to dine with you, but how can I do it and get there on time?"

Linda had counted on his understanding and once more postponing their engagement.

"I'm crushed," he answered, "but not thwarted. We will dine and I'll drive you down in the Mercedes. It shouldn't take more than four hours. We can dine at 8 and arrive by 1. I'll expect you."

There are times when a lady has no choice. Linda had none; she went back to her work. It was nearly 7 when she realized the time. There was a pile of notes on her desk. She ran through them quickly; extracting the motor route to the scene of location in the San Jacinto mountains southeast of San Bernardino. She stuffed it in her bag and ran for her car.

"I'm not wearing the dinner dress," she told her maid. "I'll wear a crepe and want a warm coat. Pack a bag to last a week. I'm driving out to location tonight and won't be back in that time. Quickly!"

LINDA took a taxi to Basil Thorne's home in Brentwood. She found him in dinner clothes, suave and charming, a perfect host presiding over a perfect dinner. Her nervousness over what attitude of behavior she might have expected was dissolved by her sudden haste and anxiety over their coming trip.

Dinner was one of those falsely bright things. When it was over, they sat before the hearth fire and sipped a liqueur. And, quite without anything personal, as Linda had expected, Thorne proposed that they start their long drive.

The drive to Pasadena and thence on the road to San Bernardino was a drive meant for lovers. The night grew colder and more fragrant. They sped over ribbons of smooth roads.

At Hemet, they stopped in the one small garage. The motor was behaving badly. "Gas-feed trouble," Thorne said. They resumed their journey after a half hour. The yucca trees with their white points like gleaming candles against the dark sky marked their swift journey over the mountain roads. There were fewer houses now. There were houses widely separated. There were no houses. In the dash-board light they studied the directions Linda had brought from her office.

And now they were on the last lonely, bleak road that marked the end of their journey. Signposts, the only mark of civilization, marked the way to location of the Commonwealth company.

And there they were. The engine coughed and sputtered. They were there, but they were alone! There were cabins, but no light came from them.

"But I don't understand. The company was to be here!" Linda cried to Thorne, bent over the open hood of the motor.

"Probably couldn't get out. That's picture business," he answered from the motor depths.

Linda looked at the cabins, shivered and looked at Thorne.

Underwriter", insurance newspaper.

This is a slight increase over the total of 1934, meaning that during the past year more people have found that they were too late to secure more life insurance protection and had developed medical impairments that will prevent further purchases for some time at least.

In addition to those actually declined, there was an even greater number who could not qualify for standard life insurance at standard rates, because of medical impairments, could secure insurance protection only on the substandard basis, which is at higher premium rates.

This is particularly important the "Weekly Underwriter" points out, when it is realized that most of these 330,000 persons did not know they were in poor health or they would have applied for the life insurance. One-third of a million were suddenly faced with a realization that they were too late to secure the needed protection.

As the man said when paying the bill for his wife's new hat, "Anything for a laugh."

Judges and Mayors Endorse State WPA Projects On Streets

SAN ANTONIO. — County judges and mayors of Texas overwhelmingly endorse a work program in preference to relief and idleness, according to a poll recently reported to State Works Progress Administrator H. P. Drought.

Of 402 answers to questionnaires distributed to every county judge and mayor in Texas, only two expressed opposition toward work relief. Commented Drought: "The surprising similarity of answers from these local officials who have been closely in touch with our projects offers vast encouragement to Works Progress officials. Almost without exception, mayors and county judges from every section of Texas have emphatically declared that our policy of public works to care for the unemployed of this state is far superior to any system of doling out the necessities of life."

"The theme of 'work, not charity' runs through the entire list of answers to the questionnaire. A predominant majority of the answers indicate that workers on WPA project are more content, their physical well-being improved, and their morale much higher than was that displayed by the same people when they were receiving direct relief."

Questionnaires to determine the attitude of sponsors toward the program were distributed by WPA officials. In addition to the question concerning the value of work relief as opposed to the dole, city and county officials were requested to evaluate the type of work being done and were asked if additional work needed in their communities would justify an extension of the WPA program.

"Most gratifying to us is the wholehearted appreciation expressed for the hundreds of permanent, worthwhile projects operated in the state by WPA workers," said Drought. "Without qualification, 384 of the 402 replies indicated that sponsors are thoroughly satisfied with the type of work being accomplished under this program. Partial satisfaction was indicated in 12 answers, projects being rated from 50 per cent to 90 per cent satisfactory in these instances. One judge and one mayor declared that the expense was too great. Four officials believed that work could have been done better by entrusting entire supervision to the local subdivision."

"In a program of this magnitude," Drought concluded, "eighteen criticisms from a total of 402 reports represents an encouraging minimum of dissatisfaction."

Attention was called to several extracts from letters to the Works Progress administrator, which included the following: "From Rising Star, Eastland county: 'Our city had been using ordinary sandy streets for more than 40 years. Now, every street in town throughout the residential section has been graded and calicheed,'"

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MARY E. DAGUE

"THANK GODNESS, the cult of salad-making is advancing. There was when people did dreadful things to the noble green, but no more.

To be quite perfect, salad greens should be thoroughly chilled and crisped and served without trace of water clinging to the surface. A watery salad is an abomination. Therefore allow plenty of time to take care of the business properly. The wire salad baskets make for quick work but if you tie the greens loosely in a big square of cheesecloth and swing vigorously you will accomplish the same result.

Place on Menu Varies In some parts of the country hostesses like to serve the salad immediately following the soup course, in some, as a first course. In this case the salad acts as an appetizer and whets jaded appetites. Naturally, this type of salad must be piquant and not substantial. However, authorities on just how to do things seem to be agreed that the best place for the salad course is following the meat course in the dinner menu.

Hearty salads are welcome for Sunday night suppers and noon luncheons. The combination of meat and vegetables is excellent and the following salads are nourishing and economical examples of this type of salad.

Ham Salad with frye bread and butter and a fruit dessert.

One and one-half cups diced cold-boiled ham, 1 1/2 cups diced cold-boiled potatoes, 1 cup diced celery, 1 hard-boiled egg, mayonnaise. Combine ham, potatoes and celery, toss lightly with a fork. Add mayonnaise to make

Monday's Menu BREAKFAST: Orange juice, cereal cooked with figs, cream, crisp toast, milk, coffee. LUNCHEON: Tomato bouillon, toasted crackers, ham salad, rye bread, strawberries, milk, tea. DINNER: Broiled liver and bacon, mashed potatoes, creamed onions, head lettuce with French dressing, cherry pie, milk, coffee.

Potato Salad a la Russe Two cups diced potatoes, 1-2 teaspoon grated onion, 1-2 cup diced pickled beets, 4 sardines, 4 hard-boiled eggs, mayonnaise, lettuce.

Use small new potatoes. Scrub and boil in salted water until tender. Peel as soon as cool enough to handle. Cut into neat dice and chill. Remove skin and bones from sardines and separate into flakes. Cut eggs in slices. Combine materials lightly with mayonnaise and serve on crisp lettuce.

Some other good combinations for inexpensive salads are the following: Tuna fish, celery, hard-boiled eggs, mayonnaise and lettuce. Salmon and peas combined with shredded lettuce and served on a bed of romaine with mayonnaise.

Boiled veal, diced carrots, celery and diced pineapple combined with mayonnaise and served on a bed of endive. Equal parts of diced ham, shredded cabbage and pineapple combined with mayonnaise.

Car Registrations In April Drop

AUSTIN.—A sharp decline in new passenger car registrations occurred in Texas during April in comparison with the preceding month but sales were still substantially above 1935, according to the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research.

Reports from 15 representative Texas counties give a total of 6,330 new passenger car registrations, 18.1 per cent below those of March but 15 per cent above those of April last year. For the first quarter aggregate sales were up 15 per cent from the corresponding period last year.

The tendency which has been noted for many months of the greatest sales increase to occur in the higher price groups was again in evidence during April.

Allred is Praised as Good Will Envoy

DALLAS.—Newspapermen who rode the Centennial Special Train on its thundering tour through the east and north enthusiastically praised Gov. James V. Allred as the Ambassador of Goodwill for Texas.

One well known newspaperman said, "Jimmie Allred was the sparkplug of the trip. With 39 speeches, including radio speeches in every city and two or three in some, plus four radio talks over national hookups, he set a terrific pace. The governor literally won friends for Texas by the hundreds of thousands. Whether they were tycoons of industry or the men on the streets, Jimmie sold them on Texas."

W. M. McIntosh, publisher of the San Antonio Light, expressed his opinion that millions of people would visit Texas during the summer and fall.

"Governor Allred rendered a real service to Texas by heading the delegates," he said. "Everywhere he went he made friends for himself and his state. I doubt if any national figure today was more photographed and interviewed in such a short space of time as was the governor."

"In New York, a battery of 14 cameramen were almost constantly on hand on shoot his picture. The parade through the streets of New York was viewed by hundreds of thousands."
