Texas University Exhibit Striving Toward Realism

AUSTIN — The University of Texas Centennial, in striving for realism has succeeded in baffling many of the visitors to the exposition. An exhibit which depicts the home life of the early Indian shows and Indian squaw squatting near a camp fire. Although the figure of the squaw, the rabbit she is cooking and the fire over which it is being cooked are all artificial, smoke is created by combining ammonia and hydrochloric acid. The mixture will give off smoke for about two hours. This question settled, the visitors want to know how the stone, which contains the Indian's cave, was ever transported into the building which houses the exposition. There also the answer is simple. The "stone" is made of plaster of paris, accurately moulded to resemble the native Texas rock.

G-Man Hoover Asserts Crime Now Is Definitely Decreasing

WASHINGTON — Crime definitely is on the wane, according to federal bureau of investigation director J. Edgar Hoover. Statistics compiled from reports of police departments of 1,127 cities — whose combined population is 43,920,736 — reflected decreases in all types of crime during 1935 in comparison with previous years except for rape, Hoover said. Hoover added that preliminary figures for the first six months of 1936, although not available in finished form as yet, indicated a continuation of the same trends. Most marked decrease, he reported, was in the number of robberies and automobile thefts. In 1933, he said, 388 autos were stolen each day, while last year the daily number had decreased to 286.1. Also, he said, whereas there was an average of 125.8 robberies each day in 1933, this figure had gone down to 92.5 last year. Totals of the reporting police departments showed 45,923 robberies in 1933, compared with only 33,747 in 1935, a decrease of 26.5 per cent. Automobile thefts in 1935 totalled 104,434, compared with 141,603 in 1933, a 26.2 per cent decrease. Substantial reductions also were shown for homicide, aggravated assault, and burglary. Hoover's report said: "The decrease in larceny was so slight as to be without particular significance. The figures for rape, however, indicate an increase of 15.7 per cent in the number of offenses." Hoover said the statistics indicated a major portion of the decrease in crime from 1933 to 1935 had taken place in large cities, but added that "substantial reductions were also found in many of the smaller communities." "Notwithstanding the substantial decrease reflected by the figures during the past three years," Hoover pointed out, "it is estimated that approximately 1,500,000 serious crimes are committed annually in the United States." "This indicated the tremendous volume of crime still existent in this country and the urgent necessity for active co-operation of law-abiding citizens with law enforcement agencies, so that a further reduction may be obtained." Hoover said a breakdown of figures of specific crimes showed a decrease in the number of murders from 3,131 in 1933 to 2,704 in 1935, representing a 13.6 per cent decrease. Aggravated assaults, he said, fell 8.5 per cent, while the number of burglaries dropped from 157,573 in 1933 to 153,430 in 1935. "In this connection," he concluded, "it may be of interest to note the results of the work of the F. B. I. during the past three fiscal year periods in the investigation of violations of federal laws coming within the primary investigative jurisdiction of this bureau: persons convicted, 11,153; actual sentences imposed, including suspended and probationary sentences, 5 death, 20 life, 30,411 years, 4 months, 18 days; federal fugitives from justice apprehended, 3,047; fugitives from justice located for law enforcement agencies through fingerprint identification, 14,490; number of automobiles recovered, 7,731.

Total pay rolls for the two comparable periods showed an increase of 12.1 per cent and 0.2 per cent respectively. Increases greater than the state average were shown in the following cities: Abilene, Corpus Christi, Dallas, Denison, Galveston, Lubbock, Sherman and Waco. The following industries showed a greater percentage gain over August last year than the state average: Building materials, clothing and textiles, wholesale trade, petroleum refining, printing and publishing, public utilities and hotels.

Texans' Talk Is Slower Than That Of Easterners

DALLAS — It takes more time for a Texan to say "Jack Robinson" than it does a native of New York or Michigan, officials of the Ford exposition building at the Texas Centennial said. The officials determined this by a test. When preliminary plans were made for showing the 15 major exhibits in the Ford building, a cycle of lectures requiring one hour and thirty minutes to deliver was written. Speaking English as it is spoken in Detroit, a lecturer could make the complete conversational tour in exactly ninety minutes. But in Dallas, where the Texas drawl rules supreme, it was discovered that it required one hour and forty-eight minutes to make the cycle. Eighteen minutes had been lost along the vocal highway.

A Ray Of Light Shines Over Western Pacific

Like a tiny ray of sunlight in a gloomy and darkening world comes word that Japanese delegates to the Institute of Pacific Relations session at Yosemite, Calif., definitely indicated that Japan would be willing to sign a treaty with the United States and Great Britain to guarantee permanently the independence and neutrality of the Philippines. These delegates do not officially represent the Japanese government, but there is reason to believe they are not backing an idea that is repellent to the Japanese powers-that-be.

Up jumps the gentleman with the cynical eye and says "Yeah—just the kind of treaty Belgium had in 1914!"

Yet when the present period of madness passes, the world must return to treaties and mutual arrangements that are more than "scraps of paper" to nations that are as true to their word as are honest men.

The fact that supposedly honorable nations have been tossing treaties into the wastebasket with sickening regularity of late does not mean this will always be true.

A treaty guaranteeing Philippine independence and neutrality would be of definite advantage to all three countries involved. To the United States and Britain it would mean freedom from concern about that particular corner of the Far East.

Japan has her hands full at the moment and for some time to come in Asia, meeting increased resistance from Soviet Russia and a reviving Chinese nationalism, and with huge chunks of Manchuria swallowed but still undigested.

Further, General MacArthur has perfected a defense plan for the Philippines that would make Japanese attempt at conquest a bloody and costly job.

So it is possible that Japan may be entirely "on the level" about a desire to stabilize the southwestern Pacific by making a reality of the dream of an independent Philippine Island group.

Certainly that is infinitely desirable to the United States, which looks with increasing distaste on continuing responsibilities in one of the hottest corners of the earth.

Just how hot it is may be seen from the fact that the chief importer of American munitions in recent months has been the Dutch East Indies. Dutch East Indies? What need have they of armament?

Well, it happens that in the Dutch East Indies are the vast oil reserves and storage tanks of the Dutch Shell Co., to a large extent British controlled.

Surely the Dutch East Indies are not increasing their naval air coast patrols because they think everything is quiet on the Far Eastern front.

Perhaps it is not too much to hope that the little ray of sunlight which shone through the institute meeting may sunlight which shone through the institute meeting may broaden out into genuine sunshine in the western Pacific.

As a result of poor crops resulting from the drouth, the real corn-fed girl ought to be worth her weight in gold.

If Spain insists on keeping it up, it would seem poetic justice to give all its bulls box seats.

Wonder How Our Yard Looks to the Neighbors?

Life of the Saint Of the Day

By REV. S. E. BYRNE

St. Raymond Nonnatus was born in Catalonia in the year 1204, and was the son of a family which was well fixed. In his youth he seemed to find pleasure only in his devotions and serious duties. His father, perceiving in him an inclination to a religious state, took him from school and sent him to take care of a farm he had in the country. Raymond readily obeyed and, in order to enjoy the opportunity of holy servitude kept the sheep himself and spent his time in the mountains and forests in holy meditation and prayer. Some time after, he joined the new Order of Our Lady of Mercy for the redemption of captives, and he converted and baptized some Mohammedans. For this the governor condemned him to be put to death by thrusting a stake into his body, but his punishment was commuted. So long as he saw souls in danger of perishing eternally, he thought he had yet done nothing. St. Raymond had no more money to employ in releasing poor captives, and to speak to a Mohammedan upon the subject of religion was death. He could, however, still exert his endeavors with hopes of some success, or of dying a martyr of charity. He therefore resumed his former method of instructing and exhorting both the Christians and the infidels. The governor, who was enraged, ordered our saint to be barbarously tortured and imprisoned till his ransom was brought by some religious men of his Order, who were sent with it by St. Peter.

Business Men In Forties Warned Not to Overplay

NEW YORK—The average American business man of two score years or more who works at high speed five days of the week and then plays at the same speed on his week-end vacation in the summer is endangering his health and becoming a weak insurance risk. Such is the opinion of four nationally known figures of the sports world. Dr. George Moore, trainer of athletes of the University of Pittsburgh; Mickey Cochrane, manager of the Detroit Tigers; Charles Atlas, noted American physical culturist, and Paul Runyan, the country's conscientious physical training golf pro and winner of numerous American titles. Citing his reasons why the "flabby at forty" should "watch his step" in his endeavor to crowd in all the recreation he can in a single day, Dr. Moore said, "He should not keep late hours and should not overeat. Exercising regularly is as much a necessity as sun and fresh air." Overeating, over-exercising and lack of sufficient sleep are doubly dangerous in the summer to the average man in the opinion of Atlas, who says, "Over-exertion should be watched closely. In participating in sports under the hot rays of the sun the failure to observe these three rules of health can prove appalling to the body and prostration from heat can result." Cochrane said, "If the business man is going to tax his body with strenuous action only once a week then he should endeavor to take some other regular exercise as well." "Take it easy," says Runyan.

Upon his return to Spain he was nominated Cardinal by Pope Gregory IX, and the Pope, being desirous to have so holy a man about his person, sent for him to come to Rome. The saint obeyed, but went no further than Cardona, when he was seized with a violent fever which proved mortal. He died on the 31st of August, in the year 1240, being at that time thirty-seven years of age.

Author's Note: Owing to other pressing duties at the present time, this will be the last of the series on the lives of the Saint of the Day. However, I do wish to thank those who have been interested enough to encourage me in this work, and hope that soon I may find my way clear to again resume this most worthy and educational endeavor. REV. S. E. BYRNE.

THE lamprey is a most unusual fish. Its mouth is a tube-shaped suction cup, armed around the edge with horn-like teeth. The creature attaches itself to other fish, and rasps away their flesh with the sharp teeth. After a hole is made, it enters the victim's body and continues to feed unmolested.

Now three years later, these same mild ripe tobaccos are being made into Chesterfield Cigarettes.

Mild, ripe tobaccos make a milder better-tasting cigarette. When you smoke a Chesterfield you'll notice they have a different aroma... a more pleasing taste... they're better!

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JUDITH HOWARD has been engaged to STEPHEN FOWLER for four years. She wants to be married and keep her job in a business office but Steve will not hear to this.

Judith meets Steve for lunch and they go over the familiar arguments. Judith points out that her friends, VIRGINIA and BOB BENT, are happily married, though both have jobs. Steve refuses to be convinced. Finally Judith threatens to break the engagement.

Steve, suddenly realizing she is in earnest, asks to come to her apartment that evening to talk the matter over. He comes and a short time later Bob and Virginia Bent arrive with their friend, TOBY LYNCH.

While the girls are preparing sandwiches Steve and Toby get into an argument and Steve strikes Toby.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER IV

STEVE stood towering, still white with rage, while Toby Lynch rubbed the side of his face with a trembling palm.

Bob rushed forward, grabbing Steve's half-raised arm. "Good Lord, Steve! Hang onto yourself! Toby didn't mean anything."

Slowly Lynch got to his feet, partly angered and partly frightened. "What's the idea, Steve? Looks to me as if three fellows ought to be able to get into a discussion without a brawl."

"I didn't mind your generalities," mentioned Steve icily. "But when you applied them to Judith and me, you were going a little too far."

"I didn't mean anything," said Toby, still rubbing his cheek.

Bob looked at Steve Fowler. "There you are, Toby's apologized for a loose tongue. Looks to me like you'd better apologize for a loose temper, Steve."

There was a moment of tense silence; and then, slowly, Steve said, "All right. Let's forget it. I'm sorry, Lynch."

"Better go in and wash up," Bob advised Toby. "We mustn't let the girls know about this."

Toby nodded and left for the bathroom. When the door had shut behind him, and they could hear the cold water running into the bowl, Bob said, "He was wrong, Steve. I'll grant you that. But so are you." He held out a package of cigars toward Steve, held a light in nervous fingers. "I still think Virgie and I are right."

Steve shot him a sour glance. "Now don't you start, Bob."

"I'm not starting anything, Steve. I've a right to defend my position, haven't I?" Bent grinned up at the other. "Even at the risk of a poke in the nose?"

Despite himself, Steve had to smile. "I guess my nerves have been jittery lately. Go ahead, Bob."

"If a man can't support a girl on his own earnings—and the girl has a job of her own—then I think it's okay for them to marry, if it happens to be agreeable to both of them."

"I know," said Steve, gazing at the glowing end of his cigarette. "That's the modern idea. But I'm just old-fashioned enough to believe—"

"Modern!" exclaimed Bob in disgust. "Listen, Steve. My grandfather and grandmother were married at the ages of 19 and 16, respectively. The old boy had a farm, and when my grandmother married him it was with the understanding that she'd have cows to milk and butter to churn... harvest crews to cook for and wash dishes after... fruit to put up and quilts to make. Work? Say, my grandmother did more work in a day than Virgie has to do in a month at the office!"

Steve paused. "You really meant it when you said we were through?" he asked. "I—yes, Steve," Judith told him. "I really meant it."

In his excitement, Bob Bent paced across the room. At the other end he turned suddenly and poked his cigarette toward Steve. "There's nothing modern or revolutionary about what Virginia and I are doing, Steve. It's old as the hills."

STEVE grinned. But it was a stubborn, sober grin; and it was a grin at Bob's enthusiasm rather than an agreement with his principles. "Sure, Bob. But girls were different in your grandmother's day. The whole world was different."

"All right. You're entitled to your opinion, and I'm entitled to mine. My idea is that the world isn't so much different now from what it was then. Certainly people aren't any different."

The argument might have gone on, but just then Toby emerged from the bathroom looking quite recovered—but none the less sheepish. He walked straight toward Steve.

"One of my many failings," he said slowly, extending his hand, "is that I shoot off my face too much."

With genuine sincerity Steve Fowler took Lynch's hand. "Forget it, Toby. I've been overly touchy on the subject lately. I'm the one who should apologize."

There was an awkward silence, broken fortunately by the return of Judith Howard and Virginia Bent, the latter bearing a huge plate stacked high with sand-glance for Judith. Steve noticed it, and stubbornly put down his hat to wait until Lynch and the Bents were gone.

"I thought they'd never leave," he told Judith.

Nervously she glanced at the clock. "It is late. And I'm dead tired."

"Judith..." Steve made no move from his spot by the table.

"Yes, Steve?"

"I want to apologize now for something that happened here tonight."

Puzzled, Judith looked up at him. "What do you mean, Steve?"

"I well, Toby Lynch said something I didn't like, and I..." His voice trailed into silence.

"Yes, Steve?"

"I guess I lost my temper."

Judith turned, facing him squarely. "You didn't fool me, Steve. And I don't think you fooled Virginia, either. I'd be willing to bet that right now she's cross-questioning Bob about what happened in here while we were making the sandwiches. You got into an argument with Toby, didn't you?"

Steve colored. "I'm afraid it was worse than—that an argument, Judith."

"Was it about... you and me?"

"Yes."

Judith lowered her eyes. "Steve! That was so foolish."

He walked across the room to face her. "Foolish? Maybe it was foolish to you, Judith. But it wasn't to me. Lynch made the suggestion that you and I follow his own philosophy."

"Well," she met his eyes squarely. "It was Toby's privilege to make the suggestion, wasn't it?"

Steve looked instantly horrified. "Judith! You don't mean that. You—you can't have any idea of what—of why I got sore at Lynch."

"No!" asked Judith. "I have a pretty fair idea of what Toby Lynch suggested. I know the story that's been going around about him."

Steve stepped back as if from a blow. "You mean to say you've known it—and yet you let him come here?"

"He comes here with Virginia and Bob," Judith reminded him quietly, "and Virginia and Bob are my friends."

"Then you approve of what he's doing?"

Judith shook her head. "I don't approve of it, Steve. But I consider it Toby Lynch's business—and nobody else's. Even if it's true, and I don't know that it is, it's none of my affair."

"I suppose," Steve said, "that you'd consider it nobody's affair if you and I..."

"No," Judith interrupted quickly, the ghost of a bitter smile on her face. "You assume too much, Steve. If you think that I love you enough to want you outside of marriage..."

She looked down at her, nonplussed and bitter. "I can't figure you out at all, Judith."

She watched him take up his hat, start toward the door, and paused in the hallway to ask "You really meant it when you said we were through?"

"I... yes, Steve. I really meant it."

The door opened and closed. Through filmed eyes Judith saw the knob turn as he released it.

said. "According to the 46-year hypothesis, the region should have been getting dryer ever since. It has. If the cycle continues true to form, the low point should be reached some time between 1938 and 1940, followed by a rapid upswing. Most encouraging is the hope held out by the cycle pattern that there will not be another major drought, after this one is overcome, until 1980."

More Drought Is Ahead for Midwest A Survey Shows

WASHINGTON.—The North Central States probably will have several more years of drought before the weather pendulum again swings toward increased precipitation, according to studies made by the Smithsonian Institution. But after 1940 there should not be about 1980.

This theory of weather cycles, based on observations extending over a century, indicates that droughts in the Middle West occur every 23 years and become very intense, like the present one, each 46 years. The theory was propounded by Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Institution, after a detailed study of the water level of the Great Lakes from 1937 to date.

Thus, if Abbot is correct, it appears that fears of the north Middle West becoming a permanent desert are groundless, except so far as the "dust bowl" may be caused by plowing up land. The region has experienced alternate periods of dryness and adequate rainfall for centuries.

"Temperature and precipitation variations at any particular place on the earth's surface have a marked tendency to repeat themselves every 23 years, which is double the 11 1/2-year sunspot cycle well known to astronomers," the Institution said.

"This actually has happened in the north central United States, the water level records show, in the four 23-year periods since 1937. The general contours of the curves of the water-level variations for each of the 23-year intervals are very similar.

"It so happens that the most extreme variations repeat at 46-year intervals, or double the 23-year cycle, in that particular area."

Detailed studies made by Abbot of Lake Huron showed that in 1837-38 its level was very high, indicating heavy rainfall. Then it declined steadily until the 1848 drought. Rainfall then increased steadily for five years. Then there was a minor decline, followed by another upward swing until the end of the 23-year period.

The next cycle came between 1860 and 1822. It followed the same course as the previous ones, but its extremes of wetness and dryness were less marked. Serious drought came in 1898-99.

"The present 23-year interval started in 1929," the Institution

Congressman-Lady-Elect

By Elvie H. Jackson

Mrs. Clyde L. Garrett, wife of the incoming new congressman, for the 17th district, was very modest about her self, her plans, and her objectives when approached on this subject.

The congressman's family occupies a big country home, roomy and comfortable and that thru the twenty-three years of their married life, has sheltered a happy family of children who have been made close companions of their parents.

Carl Garrett, their married son, who is with the Texas Electric Company, and his wife, will remain in Eastland.

Miss Katharine Garrett will stay with her grand-mother, Mrs. Anne Day, thru this high school year, when she will graduate in May, and join her parents in Washington, D. C.

Clyde Garrett, Jr., Virginia, about fourteen years of age, and Sarah, the four year old baby of the family, will be with the congressman and his wife at a new home in Washington.

Mrs. Garrett is not only a practical farmer, who has managed the interests of their dairy and home products most successfully during the frequent absences of her husband, but she is a cultured club-woman, an ardent church woman and an ideal mother.

Mrs. Garrett regretted that she would have to give up her Sunday school classes. She has been teaching in Sunday schools for twenty five continuous years.

As Sallie Day, daughter of pioneer settlers Mr. and Mrs. Sam Day, she joined the Methodist church at the age of ten. After marrying Mr. Garrett in Eastland, she went with him into the Baptist church. Her parents lived in Eastland always, her father passing away twelve years ago.

Mrs. Sam Day came here as a child at six years of age, and has lived here sixty years.

Mrs. Garrett stated her husband had also been teaching a Sunday school class for a quarter of a century, and at present is teacher of the Bachelors Class of the Baptist church.

They will affiliate themselves with some Baptist church in Washington as soon as possible after their arrival there in middle of January. Mrs. Garrett has been a valued member of the Thursday Afternoon club for several years and helped materially in the building up, thru her influence, the Eastland Public Library, owned and operated by the club.

She has been a valued member of the Civic League, and in her public spirited way has done much to aid its ventures, and is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star, expressing admiration for the work of this order.

Mrs. Garrett is very winning in her personality and easily approachable. She has an intelligent face, framed in naturally wavy, dark hair, and has that best thing of all, the real human interest in those with whom she comes in contact.

Mrs. Bula B. Connellee, her sister Miss Imogene Whitehurst of San Angelo, with Jim Whittington Connellee and Miss Helen Butler, formed a motor party from Eastland to Austin today where they will attend the graduation of Miss Jane Whittington, daughter of Mrs. Connellee, from the Texas University tonight.

J. D. Whitehurst, son of Mrs. Whitehurst, and his wife of Conroe, will meet the party in Austin. The Connellee party will return to Eastland accompanied by Miss Whittington tomorrow, Tuesday.

Mrs. H. O. Satterwhite

Improving Steadily

Friends will be happy to learn that Mrs. H. O. Satterwhite has made sufficient improvement in condition that she was moved Friday from the Cook Memorial hospital in Fort Worth to the home of an intimate friend in that city, Mrs. S. S. Noblett, 4915 El Campo.

Mrs. Satterwhite will be there about a week, when she, it is thought, will be strong enough to be brought to Eastland.

Mrs. Art H. Johnson, her sister, who was with her when moved, returned home Saturday.

Eastland remembers Mrs. Noblett who formerly lived here several years and who was at one time president of Eastland Music Study club.

Junior G. A. Meet

The Junior Girls Auxiliary, one of the younger organizations of the Young Peoples department of the Baptist church, resumed their sessions with that of Saturday afternoon at 4:30 in assembly room of church.

Mrs. S. A. Green, director, is endeavoring to build the group up to its full quota, and the this meeting was slim in attendance, hopes it will lead to better things.

Mrs. Green read the story of a high school girl and her troubles—a character sketch; a song service closed the program.

The group will meet next Saturday at 4:30 p. m. Present: Merle Bishop, Estelle Williams, Lillian Bishop, Verne Ella Allison, Margaret Blythe, and Mrs. Green, director.

Miss Joan Johnson

The founder was grand master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky and poet laureate of Masonry.

If Government Workers Were Segregated

A state and local B old federal agencies C new and emergency federal D WPA E relief

If all employees of federal, state and local governments in the United States lived in one section, together with their dependents, and the private employees and their dependents lived in the rest, then the people would soon grasp the tremendous load of taxes that is bearing down on business and individuals.

The governmental employees, their dependents and those on relief, are equal to the population of the whole country west of a line at the west of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas and through the eastern tip of Texas.

Government employees equal in number the total gainfully employed in the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and part of Nebraska.

Those on relief, according to the official figures, equal the total population of the remainder of Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma and most of Texas.

No prejudice is intended in superimposing these figures on the sparse settled western states. Among them is California which is fifth in number of gainfully employed and Texas is sixth.

California is sixth. The government employees, disregarding those on relief, are greater in number than the total gainfully employed in any group of states, as the Census Bureau classifies them, except the Middle Atlantic and East North Central, and South Atlantic—and they are within about 400,000 of equalling the nine South Atlantic States—from Delaware to Florida. Those on relief number more than the population of any state except New York and Pennsylvania.

If any error has been made in this chart, it has been on the side of conservatism. The number of civil employees was obtained in the monthly reports of the Civil Service Commission, Army and Navy figures were obtained from the headquarters of those two arms. The legislative and judiciary establishments' figures were from the monthly Labor Review of the Department of Labor. WPA project workers were from the latest report of that organization. Relief figures were from the latest report of FERA. State and local government employees are from the report of the Commission on Inquiry on Public Service Personnel for 1935, but this report refers to the number of employees in 1932 and hence is, as of now, certainly an understatement. Veterans' benefits, AAA benefits, and the like have been totally excluded.

The statement of Representative Sam C. Massingale, Democrat of Oklahoma, shows how conservative this compilation is. He said: "According to Harry Hopkins, there are 21,000,000 people on the dole. There are on the federal pay rolls 3,000,000; on other government pay rolls 6,000,000; on CCC pay rolls, 500,000; on WPA pay rolls, estimated, 3,000,000; those receiving AAA benefits, 15,000,000. Thus we see nearly 50,000,000 people are drawing salaries from the Government, receiving government benefits, and on the dole."

The verifiable figures give 3,327,259 on the direct federal government pay roll; 2,544,500 on state and local government pay rolls; total 5,871,759, or 11.6 per cent of the country's gainfully employed. In addition, 8,508,000 individuals are on relief—seven per cent of the country's population. Then, as a minimum, 18 1/2 per cent of the country's population is living off the governments, and in addition uncounted benefits are going to groups ranging from agriculture to veterans.

"Where Did You Get It?"

Sometimes, in a friend's house, you see a particularly handsome rug or lamp, a new vacuum cleaner, an attractive chair or table. Or perhaps it's a new coat or dress, or some delicious new food-product.

You ask: "Where did you get it?"

Your friend says: "I got it at Blanks."

You don't ask: "How did you know Blanks had it?"

There is no need to ask; there is no mystery about that. You know your friend reads the advertisements in this paper. You merely sight enviously, and think: "I must have missed reading the ads that day."

Make it a habit to read the advertising pages of this newspaper regularly, carefully.
