How to Get the Most From the Day's News

A wondrous variety of items, recording the events of the day as they happen in China or on Main street, make up the daily newspaper which nearly every American family reads.

The newspaper is thus recording history as it happens. But history isn't complete until its basic facts are blended by the interpretation of the people. That's where the newspaper reader comes in. His is the privilege of clothing the facts with significance.

Instead of skipping through the paper and tossing it away for consignment to service on the pantry shelf, try this interesting game of jigsawing its separate items into a meaningful pattern.

For instance, on one recent day there appeared three stories which, together, form a better commentary on the state of the nation than does any one of them individually.

The first tells how Allegheny county, Pa., in which Pittsburgh is located, is spending two and a half times as much for relief now as in the worst month of the depression, although employment levels now are equal to those of the boom year of 1929. More than two and a half million dollars was spent on direct and work relief in the area in July, 1937, whereas only a little more than a million was spent for the same purposes in March, 1933.

Another story tells of congressional alarm that new demands by World War veterans may saddle the nation with a system of pensions that would cost an estimated 20 billion dollars by 1996. This, on top of the 12-billion-dollar share already allotted to veterans out of the 60-billion-dollar total cost of the war to the nation to date.

The third item recorded the statement, by an official of the National Economy League, that for the last seven years the government has been spending two dollars for every dollar of income. It was predicted that unless the spending pace is greatly reduced, the future will bring even greater deficits.

Taken altogether, these items stimulate some vital questions. Why, if employment conditions are back to normal, must relief be more expensive? Why, if veterans just last year were given millions in a bonus, should they need more now? And just how do these first two situations bear on the disastrous two-to-one public spending policy?

By taking these problems through and forming an opinion, one way or another, the newspaper reader not only is getting the most out of the news, but he is also performing one of his important duties as a citizen—that of And, simple though it sounds, that is making history, taking a healthy interest in what is going on around him.

Florida's Democratic Senate approved a bill to prevent the death of the state G. O. P., but it is doubtful whether Maine will make it reciprocal.

Comparatively Unknown Rising Star Team Nearly Trips Hanlon Group In District ASAA Eastland Tournament

BASEBALL CALENDAR

The seemingly invincible Hanlon Gasoline team of Breckenridge won narrowly Monday night in opening of the district Amateur Softball Association of America tournament at Eastland when the comparatively unknown Rising Star group was defeated 1 to 0.

Hanlon only collected two hits from Rising Star's pitcher Jenkins while Rising Star got five from Puryear.

Hanlon won the game when Hart, roving short, got what would have probably been only a single, but Rising Star's left fielder, Roach, let the ball go uncaught and Hart proceeded to net the run.

Rising Star got four shut outs in the game while the Hanlon pitcher netted 10.

Rising Star came close to getting a run when Vernon was struck out, then Adams came in with a third hit, filling bases and with one man out. Hanlon then shut out two.

In the second game of the evening Eliasville Marathons won over Killingsworth, Cox of Ranger, 8 to 5.

Umpires were Owens, Garrison and Parrack.

Games tonight are against Carbon and Iron Metal of Eastland and Hi-Y against Throckmorton, Hi-Y of Eastland.

In Tangled N. Y. Mayoralty Race

"I ask no quarter," declared former Supreme Court Justice Jeremiah T. Mahoney, as the above picture was taken immediately after he had announced his candidacy for mayor of New York under the New Deal Democratic banner. Mahoney's prediction that Senator Royal S. Copeland, his Tammany opponent, would withdraw, brought a quick denial.

Divers Locate Oil Pools In Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS — Deep sea divers are prospectors in the latest oil rush.
Equipped with gigantic drilling barges developed especially for underwater exploration, operators are tapping pools of black gold lying thousands of feet beneath the ocean bottom. Nine of Louisiana's great oil-producing fields are now situated in marshes skirting the open gulf and in the gulf itself.
Leaseholds in land covered with hundreds of feet of water are at a premium. The newest salt dome believed to harbor oil lies 18 miles out in the Gulf.
Louisiana is particularly fortunate, since public domain over water bottoms has made the state probably the largest owner of oil lands in the South, according to Gov. Richard W. Leche.
In developing new drilling techniques for the underwater work, operators have mounted derricks, boiler houses and other necessary equipment on specially constructed barges, air- and water-tight, which may be sunk and raised at will.

WPA Has Rebuilt Original Settlement

Today the historic tragedy is being revived in this cradle of civilization in America. Facsimiles of the settlement's huts, its chapel, its governor's house—reel-roofed with sides of unpeeled split juniper logs—have been built by WPA workers within a 16-acre stockade. MANTEO, N. C.—Commemoration of the first Anglo-Saxon attempt at a permanent settlement in the New World, 350 years ago, will culminate on August 18 with an address by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.
He will stand in a reproduction of the original stockade at Fort Raleigh on the northern tip of Roanoke Island, North Carolina, built by 121 settlers, men and women sent out from England by the great adventurer, Sir Walter Raleigh, in the summer of 1587. His speech will be in memory of Virginia Dare, the first white child of Anglo-Saxon stock born on the American continent, on the 350th anniversary of her birthday.

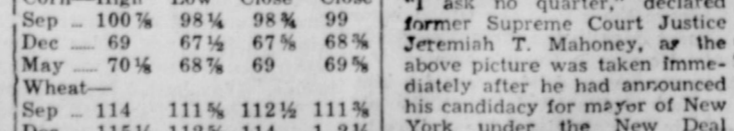

Record Lost When She Was 9 Days Old

ROANOKE ISLAND RELIVES 350-YEAR-OLD TRAGEDY OF "THE LOST COLONY", FIRST ANGLO-SAXON SETTLEMENT IN AMERICA

History is being revived this summer on that narrow strip of wooded sand-dune and fragrant pine thickets which rims North Carolina off Albemarle Sound. The commemoration will continue until September 6 with a series of celebrations, of which the President's speech will be the most important.
There is enough to commemorate. The John White expedition was one of three—the two others unaccompanied by women— which chose this teeming region for English settlements. The Fort Raleigh venture was 21 years behind. They were there to establish homes.

How the Old Fort Raleigh Stockade, behind which the small first English colony in America sheltered itself on Roanoke Island, looked, as restored from contemporary maps and sketches, at right. The original stockade was found razed to the ground when English supply ships arrived, four years after the settlement was founded in 1587. At this summer's 350th anniversary commemoration, President Roosevelt is to speak.

CAPT OF CHARACTERS
KATHLEEN O'SHAN—heroine, writer of greeting card verse.
BOB McTAVISH—hero, detective story writer.
PAT—the junior who played cupid.
THE DUCHESS—patron of surrealist art.
PROFESSOR BRACEY—Egyptologist.

Yesterday, Bob's professors are around when he meets Professor Bracey. He feels he has seen the fellow before.

CHAPTER V
THE next Sunday Pat came tramping down the stairs, muttering under his breath. The Duchess was giving a cocktail party in her studio that afternoon and he had shifted every piece of furniture she owned not once but several times.

Kathleen's door opening just then put an end to his grumblings. "Good morning, Pat, going to be a nice day, isn't it?" she said. Then she added with an excited gleam in her eyes, "I'm awfully glad, because I'm actually going to a party. The Duchess asked me. Wasn't that nice of her? The first real party I will have attended since I came."

For a minute the little Irishman's ready tongue seemed tied and absentmindedly he tamped down the lighted tobacco in his pipe. Rubbing his burned finger on his pants, he began, "Now, Miss Kathy, you ain't lost a thing up here, Mr. McTavish ain't going to—" "But he is, Pat. She invited him too. Told him to bring Schmatz. She said her friends would love him because they aren't a bit formal or stiff."

"Right she is," Pat retorted. "It's me will be stiff now, sweat-pit after they get through. Better think again, Miss Kathy, before you go takin' up with them artists." Kathleen looked at him with a smile. "Pat, did you ever try to make rhymes all day long? Well, if you did, you'd be glad of something to break the monotony, too."

Pat couldn't think of any more arguments, so sent a sudden puff of smoke up from his pipe as though expressing his opinion of all artists and their goings-on.

BUT Kathleen did not let Pat's ideas about the party worry her. She was too much excited at the prospect. Thrilling new people, in interesting surroundings, and Bob among the guests, were quite enough to give her eyes an eager brightness and make her low with anticipation as she put on her prettiest dress.

The Duchess' big studio was well filled with people when Kathleen timidly knocked at the door. Immediately she was swept into a gay laughing group, as the Duchess told them here was one of her dear little friends from a studio downstairs. A tall glass was thrust into her hands, and almost at once she found herself sitting on a love seat between the dark mysterious-looking Professor Bracey, and a pale, anemic-looking poet, who called her "darling" because the Duchess had failed to mention her name.

"I haven't seen you here before, my dear," the professor was saying in a purring voice. "No," she answered. "You see I haven't known our hostess so very long. I don't go out much. It was so nice of her to ask me today."

HE turned so he could look directly at her. "Not at all—not at all. The Duchess is always looking for new sensations, and you must be a very new one to her. You can see for yourself you're totally different from the others here. You have youth and beauty. You're like a lotus bud on a quiet lake, a high priestess of the Nile."

Kathleen jumped to her feet. She had just caught sight of Bob coming in, Schmatz at his heels. Murmuring something about seeing a friend, she made her way to them, glad to escape the professor and his outlandish comparisons.

"Hello there!" he cried as he took her hand. "I'm surely glad you're here. I was hoping you'd come. Let's find some place where we can sit down."

The Duchess came rushing up and took Bob's arm. "I do want you to see my latest picture," she told him. "It's over here." She did not include Kathleen, as she drew him away toward a secluded corner.

"But Miss O'Shan," Bob began. "Oh, she'll find plenty of people to visit," said his hostess. "I'll be back in a minute," Bob called over his shoulder, not knowing that he would not have a chance to talk to Kathleen for the rest of the afternoon.

see my work doesn't make me exactly appreciate all this. Hey, what's the matter?" The terrier had given a low growl. "You must excuse the pup if he says he isn't used to this kind of art either."

"It isn't your picture, Duchess, but it's me the pesky little brute doesn't like," said Professor Bracey behind them. "Why do some people have to drag their snapping canines along with them everywhere they go?"

"Meaning just what, Professor?" Bob asked, jerking around and looking him squarely in the eye. His tone held a challenge.

The Duchess shrugged. "Now stop growching about the dog and go on and tell Mr. McTavish about your old Egypt. If you must break up our tete-a-tete this way, I'll discuss—well, art, perhaps, with you some other time, Bob dear." She pouted up at him coquettishly and with a toss of her head walked away.

FOR a moment the two men eyed each other as though they were measuring swords, then Professor Bracey's glance fell, and Bob asked perfunctorily: "You have been to Egypt then?" "I am an Egyptologist," the professor answered, then added in a bored tone, "An authority, some people are kind enough to think."

Bob's eyes brightened with interest. "Then you must be interested in Dr. Gabra's work at Hermapolis?" "It was fair," replied the professor evasively. Bob looked at him in amazement.

"You've been there yourself?" Bracey asked. "Yes, I've always been kept up about the work Peyron, Schwartz, and some of those men have done, so I could go take a look-see myself. We worked near the Temple of Set. Uncovered an exceptional electromagnet of the eighth and ninth dynasties, and a gold seal amulet of butron form, very rare."

"Um," answered the professor. He glanced out over the room. "Sometime we must have a talk about it, though I don't usually discuss my work with amateurs. They can't appreciate it." He strolled away.

Bob looked after him with a sardonic grin. "Says you! Schmatz, that guy didn't even know what I was talking about, and I'll bet my last dollar on it. He wasn't sure whether an electromagnet was a pyramid or a buried temple. But if he's not a professor, what is he?"

Q. Will you give a brief sketch of Capt. James B. Gillett, ex-ranger who died at Temple, June 11, 1937?

A. He was born in Austin, Nov. 4, 1856, son of James S. and Elizabeth Harper Gillett. His boyhood dream was for service as a Texas ranger, for which his outdoor training especially fitted him. In 1875 he joined Company D at Menardville under Capt. Dan W. Roberts and in 1879 went to Ysleta with Capt. G. W. Baylor with whom he served six and a half years, after which he held the offices of marshal and chief of police at El Paso. Later he engaged in ranching and in business, with his home at Marfa. His book, "Six Years With the Texas Rangers," is an authoritative record of the ranger service of the period.

Q. What noted organization did Rebecca Jane Fisher establish and in what way was she honored by it?

A. After years spent with her husband in his ministerial work in Texas, Oregon and California, and following his death, she organized the Daughters of the Republic of Texas and was its honored president for 30 years. She was also the only woman elected to membership in the Texas Veterans' Association and the first woman whose picture was hung in the Texas Senate chamber.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON — Republicans may enter Democratic primaries next year to help renominating anti-New Deal Democrats, but they will do so only as individuals.

The suggestion has been made by Mark Sullivan and others that G. O. P. voters enter the opposition primaries in order to assure renomination of various Democratic senators who have opposed the Roosevelt program, especially the court plan.

But the Republicans as a party will discourage such tactics, believing that they could practically be guaranteed to break up party machinery. Candidates for governor, county commissioner, sheriff and other posts must also run in the primaries and each of these small fry will be hollering at top pitch for votes in his own party's primary. To have all these minor candidates find the votes they were counting on, cast in the Democratic primary, would create some rather bad reactions.

You may be sure, one is told, that nearly all Republican state nominating conventions will be held after the Democratic convention in the same state, just in case a coalition seems feasible between dissatisfied anti-administration Democrats and the Republicans.

It is just possible that some anti-Roosevelt members will be fooled by such talk and, after being defeated for Democratic nomination, turn to the Republicans for renomination only to find that there are too many Republicans themselves eager for their party's nomination.

SUGGESTIONS have popped up from time to time for taxation of union dues and funds. They have aroused some curiosity as to just what groups and

AROUND the bases of the major leagues, eavesdropping here and there:

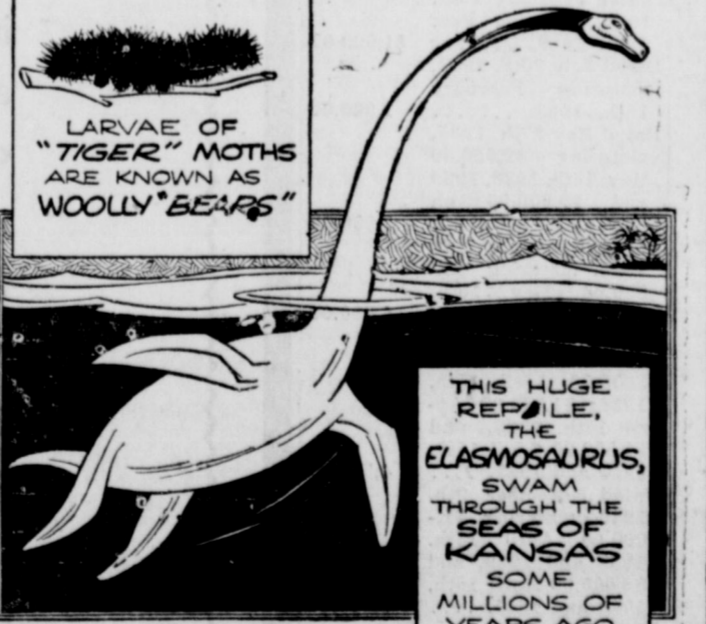

NEW YORK: Joe McCarthy, boss man of the boss team, thinks the owners should increase the player limit from 23 to 25. . . . "Yes, I've always been kept up about the work Peyron, Schwartz, and some of those men have done, so I could go take a look-see myself. We worked near the Temple of Set. Uncovered an exceptional electromagnet of the eighth and ninth dynasties, and a gold seal amulet of butron form, very rare."

PITTSBURGH: Any day now local journals will carry this Situation Wanted: "Reliable man, wants work; industrious, good worker. Available Oct. 3. Write Pie Traynor, Forbes Field." Mr. Traynor, you see, is about to be Gone With the Wind which was stirred up by those onrushing Chicago Cubs.

WASHINGTON: Speaking of jobs, Bucky Harris has found out that it is possible to send a boy out to a man's job, but vice versa isn't so good. The man, Harris, is quite unable to repeat the wondrous things the boy, Harris, did back in 1925-26. Like as not, Bucky will retire this year. And his good friend, Mr. George Preston Marshall, who cleans everything but politics in the nation's capital, will probably lose him in his laundry.

BOSTON: Joe Cronin grins satisfied and looks to next year. The Red Sox need only pitching and they are going to get it, according to reports, from a couple young men down at Little Rock. Meanwhile, the Beer' Bob Quinn, flushed with the success of Lou Ferrer, was last seen watching a softball game at a nearby home for the aged. He is scouting a couple of ala Fete prospects.

THE Elasmosaurus, giant reptile of the Cretaceous period, had a body similar to a porpoise, and an astonishing snake-like neck. It had a length of 40 feet, and inhabited the area now known as Kansas, which, at that time, was a vast sea, as deposits now indicate.
