Machines and Music—Discord on the Air

The average radio listener, sitting sleepily before his loud-speaker, is only barely conscious (if he notices it at all) of those often-repeated words "We will not listen to a recording by electrical transcription..."

Every time those words come over the air, the listener is getting not only music by a phonograph record but also, right along with it, he is getting a concrete example of technological unemployment. It is an example that means a living to musicians.

The American Federation of Musicians considers the playing over the air of recordings so serious a threat to employment of its members that it has threatened a strike on Sept. 16 unless a working arrangement with broadcasting stations is concluded. It asks such control over the broadcasting of recordings as will make certain the employment of many more musicians than are now at work.

The musicians' union would allow no radio station to play records or electrical transcriptions unless that station was hiring a number of musicians satisfactory to the union. Union members would not be allowed to play for stations transmitting to other stations which do not hire enough musicians to satisfy the union. They could play for stations using recordings only if they were used under a set of stringent regulations laid down by the union. The AFM also insists on a number of stringent regulations enforced on recording companies, or it will not allow its members to make any recordings.

This is a fair example of the jam into which technological progress is leading industry after industry, and an equally good example of how necessary it is that workable compromises be made in all such cases. For there is much justice on both sides of this controversy.

A musician who plays a piece sees it recorded. And then throughout the rest of his musical life he hears that same recording popping up and taking his place in spots where he would otherwise have another job. You can't hate the musicians for wanting some restrictions on a mechanical competitor which uses their own music to take away their jobs.

A small broadcasting station finds recordings generally as satisfactory as live musicians for much of its program, and much cheaper. Along comes the union and insists that it hire 10 musicians to sit and twiddle their thumbs while the recording of a good band is played on the air. You can't hate the radio stations for wanting just as little of that as they have to take, either.

Between these points of view a compromise must be worked out, and undoubtedly it will be. These conflicts between man and his machines are going to require the application of every last ounce of the common sense of all of us, unless we are to see our own mechanical ingenuity furred from a blessing into a curse.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
KAY DEARBORN—heroine who inherits a yacht for vacation.
MELITA HOWARD—Kay's roommate and co-adventurer.
PRISCILLA DUNN—the third adventurer.
FORREST BROTHERS and GRANT HARPER—young scientists whose expedition turned out to be a rare experience.

Yesterday: Well along on their cruise, the girls anchor on their first night out, are invited to come aboard the huge white yacht by a good-looking young skipper. But they resist.

CHAPTER VI

"WELL," mentioned Kay to Priscilla, "there was your chance to give the man a piece of your mind. And you never opened your mouth."

"How could I?" asked the blond member of the trio. "After Melita had pulled the boner with the folding anchor and he was so nice about it I couldn't very well be unpleasant, could I?"

"Not possibly," said Melita. "He was too good-looking." She hurried forward to have another try at anchoring the "Chinook." This time, following the advice of the young man from the "Mistral," she was successful. Soon the little cruiser was riding pleasantly, and the three girls busied themselves with the preparation of a belated dinner.

"I wonder who our friend was," mused Kay as they sat down to the table. "Do you suppose we should have accepted his invitation to breakfast?"

"And run the chance of being shanghaied?" exclaimed Melita cautiously. "Not on your life! We've got our own little cruise to take care of." She peered out of the window toward the white yacht which could still be seen in the gathering dusk. "I'll admit it would be pretty nice riding in that battleship."

"Be satisfied with what you have," suggested Priscilla complacently. "Didn't our friend say that we'd probably see him again? What more do you want?"

"They were washing dishes in the galley when a hall drifted across the water, obviously from a megaphone."

"Aho, 'Chinook!'"

"The girls looked at each other. 'I'll bet,' said Melita, 'my want to play bridge.'"

"Don't flatter yourself," Kay told her. "I'll go aft and see what they want." She went to the cockpit and yelled across the water.

"Better not forget your anchor light," a pleasant voice called.

"Oh . . . thanks," Kay yelled back.

She returned to the galley somewhat subdued. "I forgot about the white light forward when at anchor."

Priscilla's face was a comic study. "Is that all he wanted? I wish he was longer on sociability and shorter on advice."

"That was good advice," Kay defended. "And don't forget we turned down his breakfast invitation."

"You did," Priscilla pointed out.

TRUE to their plans, they were moving out of Fairweather Cove at dawn the next morning. To their utter astonishment, the "Mistral" had already gone!

"That's darned funny," said Melita. "They must have had that breakfast of theirs pretty early."

"Probably they're going to catch a favorable tide," Kay told her. "In that fast boat they could catch a tide we couldn't hope to hit in the 'Chinook' with its slow speed."

"We'll have to make use of the charts today, hearties! Me, will you get out the chart Jim Pike marked 'Number One'—Fairweather Cove to Denton's Point?"

Bolstered with the confidence yesterday's cruising had given them, and alert after a dreamless sleep in Fairweather Cove, the skipper and crew of the little "Chinook" got along famously. Late that afternoon they stopped at a small fuel and supply dock. Jim Pike had recommended that they refuel there, as fuel on the way was a wilder country where fuel stations would be fewer and towns not at all.

While Kay stayed with the ship to oversee the refueling, Melita and Priscilla could not resist an intriguing path winding up through the woods. They had their first slight experience with "sea legs" for after the launching on the little boat the earth beneath them seemed oddly insecure. Forgetting the passage of time, they followed the path further than they knew—then suddenly Melita looked at her wrist. "We'd better get back. Kay'll be wild."

She was. "You've been gone an hour. I was just about to start out after you."

"We're sorry," said Priscilla gaily. "We didn't think you'd worry."

"Worry? I want worrying about anything except getting to Larramore Island by nightfall. Now we won't make it without running at night!"

The gas station attendant grinned helpfully. "You won't have any trouble. Use your searchlight on the shoreline. On this end of Larramore there's a blinker."

"I didn't plan to run at night!" Kay explained. "Isn't there a good anchorage this side of Larramore Island?"

"Well, there's one or two," the attendant said. "But you can make Larramore without any trouble."

PERVENTLY hoping he was correct, the three girls climbed aboard. Darkness appeared somehow to fall earlier that day. It seemed no time at all before Kay was forced to turn on the "Chinook's" running lights.

Taking their inexperience into account, Jim Pike had planned their cruise for day running. Now Kay became confused and a little frightened, and wasn't at all certain she could find Larramore Island. A blinker light, the marine station attendant had assured her would guide her right. But suppose the light was out of commission?

"I'm afraid we've run past it," Kay said at last. She and Melita and Priscilla in the pilot house. Over the binnacle light her face was strained and queer. Melita was operating the searchlight which was mounted atop the pilot house and controlled by a lever inside.

Suddenly she cried out, "There! That looks like an island. Do you suppose that's it?"

"I don't know," Kay confessed helplessly. "If we were on our course we should have reached it three quarters of an hour ago. But maybe the engine isn't up to its speed . . . Anyhow, let's take a chance and anchor here. It's not well protected, but there's no wind."

"Look!" exclaimed Priscilla. "There's a cabin back in the trees. And it looks as if there's a light—or a fire in the fireplace."

"Good . . ." Kay turned the ignition switch. "Let's drop anchor and go ashore in the dinghy. At least they can't see us where we are, and if we can find a safer anchorage near here."

Soon they were rowing ashore in the dinghy and Kay was out with a flashlight the moment the little boat nosed into the sand. Melita and Priscilla followed her up the weed-grown path to where the cabin was set among the trees. They passed by a stand dead still as she passed the window. Then she stepped closer, looked inside. The two girls behind her saw Kay's shoulder stiffen—and then she screamed wildly.

McAdoo Says There'll Be Split in Democratic Party

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., Sept. 1. (SPL)—There will be no split in the Democratic party and no major third party will be formed, Senator McAdoo declared in an interview here today after returning from Washington by plane to spend several weeks at his home.

"Despite the talk of a split in the Democratic party and of a third party, neither will materialize," he said. "The court fight divided the Democratic majority on that issue, but it did not destroy party cohesion. This is not the first time in our political history when decided differences of opinion have arisen over particular issues within the party organization without serious results. Some needed legislation concerning the inferior federal courts has been enacted, all of which is in the direction of better administration of justice. "What is of far more concern to the nation now is the Asiatic situation. It has ominous aspects. I hope sincerely that the United States may escape involvement. Our recently enacted neutrality law was a concession to the peace sentiment of the country. The test to which it may be subjected in the near future will determine whether it is possible by mere legislative enactment to insure peace. "As a strong advocate of peace, I have always believed, and still

Ways of Killing Rabbits Explained

Fifty six rabbits were killed in three weeks by Albert Simmons, who farms four miles south of Eastland, by using strychnine on quartered apples, which were placed in peanuts being damaged by the rabbits. Some farmers are using poisoned salt placed in 2 x 4 blocks along rabbit runs to control them, according to County Agent Elmo Cook. The salt is made by mixing an ounce of strychnine with one and one-half pounds of salt. One inch holes are bored almost through the blocks of wood and holes filled with the salt. The salt is dampened to cause it to cake so the wind will not blow it out and the prepared blocks are placed a few inches to the sides of the runs.

Introducing REDDY KILOWATT

Your Electrical Servant

- Reddy KILOWATT the genial little chap shown above, is the personification of your economical, tireless dependable electric service—a genius of accomplishment and a most capable, powerful servant.
- Reddy KILOWATT is stronger than a horse and he never gets tired, never wants a day off or hesitates an instant when you call on him to do something for you. There are millions of him behind every switch.
- Reddy KILOWATT will bring you the story of your electric service—what it can and will do for you every hour of the day, every day of the year, in the home, office, store and factory.
- Reddy KILOWATT will bring you leisure, comfort, good health, convenience and money savings if you put him to work. No job is too small or too difficult for him to do and do well.
- Reddy KILOWATT wants to go to work for you today—he'll do the work of ten hired hands for only a few cents a day. And he does a better job at most things than any other servant you can hire.
- Keep an eye on Reddy—he's going to be around from now on and will have a lot of suggestions on how he can help you do whatever job you have in mind easier, quicker, better and more economically, and of course ELECTRICALLY!

Improvement Seen In WJC's Report

B. E. McGlamery of Eastland, member of the board of trustees, has received from G. C. Boswell, president, excerpts from the annual audit of Wetherford Junior College which reflect improvement in the financial condition. The Eastland trustee of the board was informed by President Boswell that prospects are especially bright for an exceptional school year. The audit covered from July 1 last year through May this year. An increase of $5,821.87 was noted in the matriculation and tuition funds. In 1936 the amount was $8,511.81 and this year $14,343.68. National Youth Administration funds increased $752.10 from $2,285.40 to $3,037.50 for this year. Also reported was a net gain of $198.60 in student activities and

Bucks Drill Practice Tougher Each Day

The Breckenridge Buckaroos opened their second week of practice yesterday with the drills becoming noticeably tougher. Only two and a half more weeks remain before the season opener with Paschal of Fort Worth. The morning practice lasted only about an hour and consisted mainly of passing and dummy scrimmage. In the afternoon more attention was paid to blocking, with the linemen in one corner under the instruction of Geeber Morris and Curtis taking the wings and backs over to another corner. The practice ended with about an hour and a half dummy scrimmage, (no tackling) over on the turf of the playing field. A gross operating gain for the school year of $40,011.46.

"ELEPHANT BOY"

Sabu and Iravatha, co-stars of "Elephant Boy," the Alexander Korda film based on Rudyard Kipling's "Tomal of the Elephants," as seen by Artist Gene Aiello. The picture, which took two years to make in the heart of the Indian jungles, was directed by Robert Flaherty and Zoltan Korda starting today at the New Lyric Theatre.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By Mrs. Gaynor Maddox
DEARS hang ripe on the trees and the purple grapes give luxury to the vine. Make the most of this season. Can them and make jellies and jam, put up grape juice for winter breakfasts and preserved pears for cold weather suppers.
DINNER: Sliced tomatoes with sliced, curried lamb, chopped green peppers, chopped salad peanuts, fried egg plant, steamed rice, vanilla ice cream, grape sauce, coffee, milk.

Poultry and Egg Shipments Are Up

AUSTIN, Texas—Shipments of poultry and eggs from Texas to interstate points during July, although approaching their seasonal low, were well above those of the corresponding month last year, the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research has announced.

Woman, 83, Believes Walking Age Secret

NEWPORT, O.—Mrs. Eliza Armstrong, at the age of 83, thinks nothing of walking along hot country roads.
"The young people of today ride too much in autos," she says. "Early to bed and early to rise and hard work, are the secrets of good health."

Sport Glances. By Grayson

BY HARRY GRAYSON
Sports Editor, NEA Service
NEW YORK—Shirley Hanover won the Hambletonian Stake in record time, duplicating a situation of last year which is not altogether odd in turf annals.
A year ago, another filly, Rosalind, bagged the Hambletonian, but she was not the best of her age in the sulky set, nor even the finest of her sex.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD

By William Ferguson
IF THERE WERE NO BACTERIA, ALL PLANT AND ANIMAL LIFE ON OUR EARTH WOULD DIE! THE CHEMICAL ELEMENTS UPON WHICH ALL LIFE DEPENDS WOULD BE LOCKED UP INSIDE DEAD PLANTS AND ANIMALS, SINCE THERE WOULD BE NO DECAY.
