U. S. Sacrifices May Revive 'Real' Japan

What makes up a nation, anyway? The government, the military forces, or the plain people who do the hard work and pay the bills?

The answer isn't as obvious as it may seem. And because it is so easy to get mixed up on it, what has happened in Japan since the sinking of the Panay is worth a little thought.

There can be no mistaking the fact that the ordinary people of Japan were deeply and profoundly shocked by the sinking of the American gunboat. The evidences of popular feeling have been too widespread and plain to be attributed to mere propaganda. Every cable from Tokio has brought word of genuine national sorrow over the tragedy.

Ordinary Japanese have stopped Americans on the streets to tell them that the Japanese nation would undo the damage if it could. School children have contributed to funds for care of the American wounded—and Japanese school children are not exactly overburdened with pocket money. A Tokio newspaper has urged the collection of money to buy a new gunboat and present it to the American people. Expressions of regret poured into the American embassy in an amazing flood.

Contrast all of that, now, with the official acts of Japanese statesmen and military men.

The bombing may have been a blunder, in the sense that the Tokio government did not explicitly order it; but how can any man suppose that it was not done with the full approval of the men on the spot? Amply identified by its flags, the Panay was bombed by airplanes that could not conceivably have supposed it to be other than an American ship. It was machine-gunned by surface craft; its lifeboats were attacked after the sinking. A Japanese naval detachment boarded it before it went down.

On the heels of that came glib and facile apologies. The Japanese government was broadcasting apologies almost before the Panay was below the surface. The Japanese navy issued a formal, blanket apology. And all of these apologies sounded exactly like part of an act. The ring of sincerity was not in them.

All right, then—which is "Japan": warmad statesmen and military leaders, or honest, conciliatory rank-and-file back home?

The truth seems to be that Japan has been suffering from a case of split personality. To an extent that is hard for us to understand, government and armed forces do not reflect the will of the people. They have made the people reflect their will instead; until the Panay went down, there was not a hint that the people might prefer to go in another direction.

That is why these public expressions of regret at Tokio are so important. They indicate that "Japan" may not, after all, be a bellicose and high-handed nation, but a friendly, well-intentioned folk with whom we could get along very well indeed.

And the ray of hope in the present situation is that the sinking of the Panay may be the means through which the Japanese masses may once again get control over their own country.

JESUS' LIFE OF SERVICE

Text: Mark 1:14-28

BY WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of Advance

"JESUS came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of God." What immensity of life and movement are bound up in spiritual and world history with that simple announcement in our lesson!

The ministry of Jesus began when John the Baptist had been delivered up, and was awaiting his martyrdom.

That is the way that the gospel of God and of His truth has progressed in life. The saints and prophets have been persecuted and killed, but the proclamation of the good news of truth and righteousness and love has gone on. John had done his work of preparation.

He had said concerning Jesus, "I must decrease, but He must increase"; and these words were now fulfilled.

The ministry of Jesus was something more than preaching in words. The Christian movement did not begin simply in devotion and in worship. The Christian movement began with the preaching of the truth, the telling of the good news concerning God, and the Kingdom of Heaven that was at hand.

But the ministry of Jesus was one of contacts as well as of preaching. When He found men who were capable of responding to the truth, He called them to Him and invited them to become His disciples.

In the calling of Simon and Andrew, his brother, there is symbolism as well as fact. These men were fishers, and Jesus would make them fishers of men. We do not know what may have preceded the call of Jesus to Andrew and Simon, but we are told that "straightway they left their nets, and followed Him." Then He found two other brothers, James and John, who also were fishermen. They were evidently men of some prosperity, because they were with their father in the boat, and there is reference to hired servants. Nevertheless, they left their father and their nets and their business, and joined themselves to the Master's company.

WHILE we have no record of what the Master said in His preaching except in parables, simple stories, and in the Sermon on the Mount, we have some indication of the effect of His presence and His teaching.

When He came to Capernaum and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day, and taught, the people were astonished. We are told that He taught them as "having authority."

That is a strange saying, for the scribes were supposed to be the people with authority. Jesus spoke out of the great authority of truth. He did not stand upon some official status, but His power and authority were in His words.

The scene at Capernaum was made even more dramatic by the outburst of a man who was evidently nervously unbalanced or insane. He cried out against Jesus, but Jesus brought him health and sanity.

Was it any wonder that the people were astonished with the new teaching, and with the power of a man who had control over "unclean spirits"? The fame of Jesus spread throughout that densely populated province of Galilee.

Earl Conner, Jr., to Seek Second Term

This paper has been authorized to announce Earl Conner, Jr., as a candidate to succeed himself as criminal district attorney for his second term.

This candidate needs no introduction to the voters of Eastland county, as he is a home product, having been born and reared in Eastland, and coming from a family of attorneys and jurists it is natural that he has chosen the law as his life's vocation. He is making the race on the record he has had as prosecutor, as this record reveals that he has never lost a felony case he has prosecuted, and the time honored democratic custom of re-electing an official for the second term when he has well filled the office still stands.

Later a formal statement of his administration of the office will be given to the public. In the meantime, he asks your consideration of his candidacy. Up to the present no one has announced an intention to oppose him, and he may not have opposition.

President Roosevelt's advisers are hoping the Christmas holiday will put Congress in a more "giving" mood toward his legislative requests.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The secret New Deal program for dealing with the monopoly problem and curbing great concentrations of financial-economic power calls for action along these lines:

1. Rewriting the anti-trust laws in the light of Supreme Court decisions which have made those laws unenforceable.
  2. Revision of the Federal Trade Commission statutes in such manner that the Supreme Court will be compelled by law to respect the FTC's findings of fact in monopoly cases.
  3. Disqualification of all identical bids by companies seeking government business.
  4. A tax program which will ease or remove the corporation surplus profits tax as it applies to small corporations, but keep it operative for big corporations.
  5. A general policy of heavy taxation of "over-sized" corporations, possibly with the aim of making it impossible for holding companies to operate in interstate commerce.
  6. Requirement that individual corporations doing interstate business be required to have a certain number of competitors. A large industrial corporation, for instance, might by prohibitive taxation or some other method, be prevented from doing more than 25 per cent, or some other arbitrary percentage, of the business in its industry.
- So there it is. You will notice that the program gets more radical with each point. Roosevelt is in sympathy with and may fight for part or all of this formula. It is espoused by Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, and other officials on the inside group—for which Jackson has been talking in his recent speeches.
- The administration's past sins of omission and commission as to monopoly suggest the possibility that the President may not go through with the program, although there is a strong political incentive to do so, and the recent Jackson-Ickes speeches were made in full awareness of their political value.
- Furthermore, Congress has lately shown a disposition to ditch anything Roosevelt wants badly. And, finally, there is no assurance that the program, even if passed in full, would be any more effective than previous anti-trust statutes.
- Summing up motives behind the current official outcry against "big business," you have:
- First—Obvious 1938 and 1940 political potentialities of a trust-busting crusade;
- Second—Roosevelt's belief that government must regulate business and not let business control government, plus his belief that business cannot run itself—into anything except disaster;
- Third—Hope that public ballyhoo against high prices will drive high prices down.
- Although critics hark back to NRA and its encouragement of monopolistic practices, current administration attitude completely repudiates the old NRA theory that industry could regulate itself from within. NRA broke down. Anti-trust laws broke down long before the Supreme Court took to itself the function of deciding in individual cases whether combinations in restraint of trade were "reasonable."

others. Staff heart with a savory bread stuffing and brown it, then add a little liquid and cook slowly in a covered kettle. The use of bread dressing increases the size of the servings.

Tongue
Beef, calf, lamb and pork tongues are all used, but beef and calf tongues are larger. Tongue is cooked in water at a simmering temperature until tender, then removed, trimmed and skinned. Spices may be added to the simmering water.

Kidneys
Kidneys should be cut to remove white tubes and the fat and then soaked in cold water for half an hour before cooking.

Oxtails
Oxtails have a high content of bone, but are very rich in flavor. Oxtail soup is hearty and can be used as a main dish because the meat is served with it. Oxtail is used also in stews and braised with vegetables.

For making stews, use the cheaper but just as nourishing cuts as listed here: beef neck, shank, flank and short ribs; lamb shoulder, breast and flank; veal shoulder, breast and flank. Pork is not used in stews.

NEW YORK—Gustave Kilian and Heinz Vopel, greatest team in the history of six-day bicycle racing, present a study in contrast. The German flyers are twins, yet opposites. They were born 25 miles apart, and there is only five months' variance in their ages, Kilian being on the shady side of 30. They look somewhat alike, are of the same size, and ride identical bikes. The latter is very unusual, for the same seat, handlebars, gear, etc., rarely suit two pumpers of the iron steed.

Once bitter enemies in road and track races in the Fatherland, Kilian and Vopel now are inseparable. Kilian is the American type, witty and full of fun and practical jokes. He keeps little during the full morning hours of a six-day grind, preferring to rub up races between the trainers, etc.

Vopel is serious-minded, quiet, and reserved, and speaks only when addressed. The big difference in their dispositions is stressed on the track.

KILIAN is one of the more spectacular performers as well as one of the foremost sprinters. No other rider leans so completely over the handlebars. Kilian gets so much of his weight into his work that he frequently skins his nose and chin on his front tire while traveling 55 miles an hour on a banked track.

Vopel is the type that can go on forever—perpetual motion of the pine boards. When you know that no other team in all the history of six-day marathons ever won more than six or seven races, you grasp the magnitude of Kilian and Vopel bagging 17 of their last 19.

The inspired Nazis have made the members of all other leading combinations of the past—Alfred Gozliel and Al Grenda, Reggie McNamara and Franco Georgetti, Charley Winter and Freddie Spencer, and Alfred Letourneur and Gerard DeBaets, to name only a small share of them—appear miscast.

KILIAN and Vopel established another world and all-time record by grabbing nine consecutive races on this and the other side.

What is more, they made it eight straight for 1937 in a brand-new series in closing the year in Buffalo, and go after their ninth victory in Cleveland, starting Jan. 9. In the Cleveland field they will face added competition from Pietie Van Kempen, the renowned Hollander, who will pair with DeBaets.

When Kilian and Vopel finally agreed to split in Pittsburgh last spring, in order to even the competition, they and their respective partners fought it out all the way along the route, holding down the top two positions from the start until one hour and 20 minutes from the finish.

Naturally, one of the combinations of Kilian and Vopel had to prevail, so it was Vopel, who rode with Jules Audy. Kilian and Vopel since have refused to split up, and as they ride on to new and greater conquests they dispel much of the doubt which existed in regard to the rugged honesty of six-day bicycle racing.

At Tombstone, Ariz.

By United Press
TOMBSTONE, Ariz. — Large bodies of undiscovered ore some day again may put historic Tombstone among gold producing centers of the world, the Arizona bureau of mines says.

An exhaustive survey made by Eldred Wilson, geologist of the mines body, and Dr. B. S. Butler, head of the University of Arizona geology department, revealed as yet undiscovered ore beds may restore the "ghost town" to its former level.

The mining town, almost deserted now, produced more than $37,000,000 in mineral wealth between 1879 and 1937.

Richest Girl in the World

BY ADELAIDE HUMPHRIES

Copyright, 1932, NEA Service, Inc.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
CONSTANCE CORBY—heroine; richest girl in the world.
BRET HARDESTY—hero; bridge builder.
HONEY BRANDON—Connie's fiance.
KATIE BLYN—Connie's "double."

Yesterday, Bret and Katie arrive at the construction camp and immediately Katie realizes the reason for the coldness in Eloise's welcome.

CHAPTER X

SEVERAL weeks had passed, the snow had long since melted, the men were back once more at work on Bret's bridge, and Connie was now an integral part of her surroundings.

Each morning Bret called for her to drive the three miles to the camp; each evening drove her back. Connie loved the excitement and bustle, the mule teams with their burly drivers, the husky mountaineers with their sturdy muscles and soft drawing talk, the whistle of the freight train, unloading steel and materials, the log-cabin office with its old-fashioned wood stove, Pop Walters with his shining gray hair and invariable package of snuff. Most of all she loved the sense of being a part of the job, the feeling that she, too, was helping to "build things," to create. She could understand Bret's enthusiasm, why he felt that this was his work.

She marveled now at that girl who had laid in the big Marie Antoinette bed, missing all the fresh loveliness of early morning, not caring enough about anything to want to get up, bored with life, sick of the endless round of social activity. That girl, this new Katie Blyn felt had been a "softie"; she had never really lived at all. There had been so little justification for her existence.

CONNIE was not sure just when she had fallen in love with Bret Hardesty. It might have been that first moment when he had handed her her glasses and she had looked into his dark eyes. Or perhaps it had happened when he had tackled the bandit in the bus, and she had been afraid for him. Again this miracle may have taken place during that long night, driving over the mountains, sharing its beauty and silence.

It did not matter. All she knew was that he was the man she loved. The only one she ever had loved. The only one she would ever love. She was glad that she had met him while she was Katie Blyn. Bret would never have looked at her, let alone offered to help her, brought her into his own country, given her work, accepted her as a companion and friend, had she been the beautiful, spoiled heiress to $70,000,000.

If he fell in love with her, he would find time to think of romance, too. She saw the first signs, already. A new look in his dark eyes when they met hers, the way he helped her over rough places, as though she were something fragile and precious. The grim set of his nice mouth that day when one of the men had spoken roughly to her over a difference as to the number of loads he had checked in. The flush of deep crimson stealing up into his face at sight of Tim Randy, the state policeman, pompous and important in his handsome uniform, hanging about Connie's desk and trying to make a "date."

Oh, yes, Connie saw all the signs—and her heart quickened, her own blue eyes grew brighter, her pulses raced.

THERE was only one flaw in this happiness, one person who had refused to accept Connie as one of them, make her "at home": Eloise with her flaming hair, worn in a coronet of thick braids, her reticent manner, her eyes watchful and wounded. For Eloise, too, saw these signs in Bret, recognized them.

She, alone, recognized other things as well. She saw that Connie's black dress, which she wore on special occasions, was entirely different from the navy suit that had been Katie Blyn's. The black dress had an air, it shouted Paris, even though Connie had ripped the label out. It made her look like a princess.

Eloise, cleaning Connie's room one day, came across something else. The dinner ring and the emerald brooch and the strand of matched pearls.

She gave a gasp of amazement, examined them more carefully, slipped them back under the fine hand-sewn linen undergarments where they had been hidden. That night when she had a moment alone with Bret in the big cheerful kitchen, where they often gathered, suddenly she asked an abrupt question:

"Do you know who Katie Blyn really is, Bret?"

"Do I know who she is?" Bret looked up from the stove at which he had been poking. "Why of course. At least I know all that's necessary. Why do you ask?"

"It doesn't matter," Eloise said in her quiet way. "I just wondered."

"You must have had some reason for asking," Bret looked puzzled. "See here, Eloise," he got to his feet, stood in front of her. "You don't like Katie, do you? You haven't made friends with her."

ELOISE'S eyes would not meet his. "I don't make friends easily. You know that, Bret. You are perhaps the only real friend I have."

"But you need a friend like Katie, a girl. She's tried to be friends with you; she likes you, Eloise. She's told me so."

The girl did not say anything; she was looking into the fire, rocking back and forth slowly. Then, "Why did you bring her here?" she asked. "I don't believe she's what she pretends to be. She'll never be one of us. I wish she'd go back where she belongs. I hate her!"

"Eloise!" His face was distressed, he dropped on one knee beside her chair, took both her hands in his. "You shouldn't say that. . . . You must have some reason. You must tell me what it is."

"I haven't anything to tell you." She withdrew her hands from his, her underlip trembled painfully; she would not meet his eyes. "I just know that I wish she'd never come here. And that there is something about her that is secret, something she does not want us to find out."

"But that's ridiculous!" Bret declared. His tone was almost angry. Perhaps he realized that, for the next moment he put an arm around her shoulders. "You mustn't feel that way," he murmured against the shining crown of her coppery hair. "You have no right. . . ."

Eloise wrenched herself free, pushed him fiercely away. She realized now—too late—that she had done the last thing she had wished to do; awakened Bret to his true feeling toward this girl he had brought home with him. "I suppose I have no right," she said bitterly. "But just the same I'm going to tell you my reasons now. I think your fine young friend is masquerading, maybe under an assumed name. I think she's hiding more than the jewels I came across, accidentally, in her room. I think she's a pretender—worse—a thief. . . ."

"How dare you say that?" Connie asked from the doorway. Her head was flung back, defiant and proud, her tone contemptuous, her blue eyes cold as an icy blue lake. Now they met Bret's:

"And you," she asked, "do you think that about me, too?"

County Traces Its History In Stone

By United Press
OSHKOSH, Wis.—Figures expressing the rugged history of Winnebago county, instead of classical lore, are being carved into the limestone of a new $1,600,000 courthouse.

The sculptor is Alfonso Inanelli, a Chicagoan who studied with Gutzon Borglum and Frank Lloyd Wright. Inanelli, assisted by Ruth Blackwell, has attracted favorable comment from critics of national prominence. Instead of the traditional mallet and chisel, they have employed an air-driven chisel to chip out the figures.

The central figure in the tableau around the courthouse walls is the Lawgiver, benign but of strong countenance. A woman and child stand on one side of this figure. They symbolize the people whom the courthouse was built to serve.

Community Figures Carved
The main figures that compose a court of justice are chiseled into the stone at the main entrance. There also is shown the board of supervisors, chief governing body of Wisconsin counties, a school teacher and class, a recorder of deeds and abstracts, an agricultural agent testing cows, a nurse and doctor engaged in county hygiene work, a sheriff, veterans' officials, a county treasurer and highway department heads.

Indian Theme Prominent
The sculptor goes back to the Indian theme to bring out the spirit of adventure that marked development of the region. An Indian horseman is shown shooting a deer. The early penetration of Christianity is manifested in a Jesuit figure. A covered wagon guarded by a grim pioneer brings out the migration of early settlers. Lumberjacks give way to a care-free vacationist.

The progress of industry is shown from the Indian trapper to the modern agriculturist. Backwoods mythology is expressed in the figure of Paul Bunyan, mighty logger. Early figures of the community are commemorated with head carvings of Webster Stanley, the first white settler and Chief Oshkosh, the Indian whose name the city took. Among them also is the head of Father Nicolet, French Jesuit explorer.

Negro Mammy Says She's 111 Years Old

By United Press
ALAMEDA, Calif.— Sylvia Hoover of Alameda, a colored "mammy" who was born into slavery on a Tennessee cotton plantation, lays claim to being 111 years old. And there seems to be none who can dispute her assertion.

Although none in those days kept an accurate record of a slave's birth date, relatives believe she was born in 1826. Plenty of sleep, plain food and clean living are the secret of long life, according to Sylvia. She retires regularly at 9 o'clock and rises at 7. That is, unless she happens to attend a church social and then sometimes she has been known to stay up as late as 9:30.

For breakfast, Sylvia has toast and coffee, a bit of meat for

Hero Worship of War Lords Ends With Invasion

BY EARL H. LEAF
United Press Staff Correspondent
SHANGHAI, China.—"Glorifying the Chinese general" is an "old Chinese custom" that has gone out of fashion in the present Sino-Japanese conflict, as the entire nation and its scores of war lords fight shoulder-to-shoulder for national existence.

Personalities have been submerged entirely, with the exception of General and Madame Chiang Kai Shek and a few commanders whose names flash across the news pages for a few days and disappear. This unusual situation is the result of government policy and personal preference of the army commanders themselves. Consequently, newspaper correspondents have found it impossible to find any subjects for glorification. The Chinese people, who love to worship heroes, also miss an outstanding hero in this war.

The hostilities in Manchuria during 1931 produced Gen. Ma Chan-Shan, noted for his drooping whiskers as well as military prowess. Gen. Ma was catapulted from obscurity at a small-potato bandit chief to world fame as the defender of Manchuria.

The Sino-Japanese hostilities around Shanghai in the following year were personified by Gen. Tsai Ting-Kai and his 19th Route Army, until his name became synonymous with Chinese resistance to the Japanese.

In the present war, however, not one name has emerged as a great hero to satisfy the whims of the hero worshippers. There have been heroes aplenty in the fighting so far, but every one has sought to hide his light behind a bushel.

China's most colorful figures are remaining in the background as much as possible. The "Christian General" Feng Yu-Hsiang is reported to be leading the Chinese forces on the Tientsin-Pukow railway front, but it is not possible even to confirm his whereabouts.

Generals Tsai Ting-Kai and Ma Chan-Shan are "somewhere on the front" but nothing more is known. The "Ironides Commander," Chang Fa-K'uei was reported to be in command of the Shanghai sector but it was never officially announced.

Gen. "Hundred Victory" Wei Li-Huang reluctantly talked for a few minutes with the United Press correspondent on the Shansi front. He said every Chinese soldier was a hero, not the commander. The whereabouts of the "Young Marshal" Chang Hsueh-

Liang is a mystery even to his associates.

The "Big Three" of South China, Li Tsung-Jen, Pai Chung-Hsi and Chen Chi-Tang, are scattered widely, nobody known just where. The trio of erstwhile Hopei military leaders, Sung Chen-Yuan, Chang Tse-Chung and Liu Juming, after their debacle in the Peiping-Tientsin-Kalgan area, received additional publicity only when they were sent elsewhere for punishment.

Marshal Yen Hsi-Shan, "Little Tsar of Shansi," had a brief day in the news when he fled the city that had been his headquarters since he raised the banner of revolt against the Dragon Throne in 1911. His whereabouts are not definitely known.

Gen. Han Fu-Chu, "King of Shantung," held the front pages longer than any one by sitting on the fence. Other famous colorful generals, such as Liu Hsiang, Liu Cheh, Tang En-Po, Yu Han-Mo, Yu Hsueh-Chung, Fu Tso-Yi, Sung Yuan-Liang and Chang Chih-Tsung, are avoiding lionization as much as possible.

Much is being heard of Chu Teh, the "Old Warrior," commander-in-chief of the Chinese Red Army, now rechristened the 8th Route Army, but that is due to the fact his name is linked to his famous troops, rather than any desire for personal glorification.

Slang Glossary of Campus Compiled

By United Press
COLUMBIA, Mo. — Dr. R. L. Ramsay, professor of English at the University of Missouri, believes that most slang expressions in use on college campuses can be classified in one of five groups. These groups denote the act, or a person given to; hard study, failure, dishonesty, intoxication and flirtation.

Current slang terms in the various categories:

Hard study — Nuzzle, buffalo, spook, knuckle, soak, grained, crack book, bone.

Failure — Flunk, goose-egg, can, take a ride.

Dishonesty — Crib, ride pony, huddle, system, bootlick, fish, hose, apple polish, shoot bull, swing gate, shoot the breeze.

Intoxication — Lush, spiked, to be far ahead, pie-eyed, looped, binge, tear, tank, load of pig iron, to go circus, booze hoister.

Flirtation — Calico, lounge lizard, heavy cake, tea-hound, prom trotter, cookie pusher, duck, give one a basket.

"A word changes into slang by degenerating into an easier figure of speech," Ramsay said.

"For example, the word 'jelly,' popular on the Missouri campus, meaning a general discussion or 'bull session,' originated here as a term for eating jelly rolls at a campus bakery. Now it can range from a heated discussion to a 'coke and smoke' at one of the several popular campus gathering places.

"However, it must be remembered that a large amount of our slang can be traced to medieval England, old Rome and even ancient Greece."

BOSTONIAN BIRDS IN PROSPECT

By United Press
BOSTON — Offers of winter homes and foods to robins, bluejays and bobolinks by the Federal government are expected to save these birds the wear and tear of annual trips south and encourage them to become full-fledged year-round Bostonians.

Relief Client Pays Dole Back In Full

By United Press
LARAMIE, Wyo. — In what since has been characterized as the "spirit of the old West," Charles H. Trahan, 70, walked into the Albany county welfare office and paid back in full the relief money he had been given.

"I owe this money and I want to pay it back," he told county welfare officers.

He laid $350 on the table—the aggregate amount he had received in small monthly allowances during a year and a half.

Trahan recently sold a ranch for $3,500. His first act afterward was to pay back the relief money "so I can hold up my head again."

"I'm glad to get this relief business off my mind," the aged man said as he stalked out of the office.

Bicycle sales in 1937 were the highest in history. Are the "horse and buggy" days really coming back?
