An official letter from the society tells what is known of the phase: "The seven seas was used in ancient times... its first appearance probably was in India, where the reference was to seven mythical seas... later the expression occurred in the writings of other peoples, and among the Romans the term referred to a group of salt water lagoons near Venice... In the best usage today 'the seven seas' is merely a figurative term to denote the far-flung waters of all the world's oceans... it does not mean traversing ocean Nos. 1, 2, 3, etc., but, instead, it means very extensive travel by water."

Educators Set Up 10 Goals for U. S.

Since 1931 the National Education Association has had a committee working on social-economic goals for America. Their effort is one of many to define answers to the questions "What do we want for America?"

Now the association and its committee have capsuled the whole program in simple form for school discussion. The ten goals, which the teachers believe "thoughtful Americans desire for themselves and their posterity," may be summarized as follows:

1. Hereditary strength—that everyone shall be well-born under conditions that will conserve his innate strengths and capacities.
2. Physical security—that everyone shall be protected against accident and disease.
3. Culture-skills and knowledges—that every individual shall master those skills and knowledges that will enable him to use and enjoy the culture of the group.
4. Culture-values and outlooks—that everyone shall be put in possession of the values, standards, and outlooks that reflect the experience of the race.
5. An active, flexible personality—that everyone shall have such opportunities as will foster initiative, ability to meet new problems, weigh facts, resist prejudice, and act co-operatively.
6. Suitable occupation—that everyone shall enjoy the sense of being useful that honest labor brings, shall be enabled to use his skill where it will mean most to himself and society.
7. Economic security—that everyone shall enjoy a minimum income that will provide a reasonable standard of living.
8. Mental security—that everyone, especially in childhood and adolescence, shall have affection, toleration, and understanding of life needs that will foster the best-development of personality.
9. Freedom—that everyone shall enjoy the widest freedom that is compatible with the equal freedom of others.
10. Fair play and equal opportunity—that everyone shall act and expect others to act in conformity with the highest good of all.

This is an effort to provide a yardstick by which we may measure any specific proposal. Does a proposed plan tend to bring to reality any of the lofty ideals noted above? Does it tend to hinder the development of any?

By such a standard one may well gauge the multitude of panaceas which swirl about in a confused world. It is good to see that America's teachers are active in offering so bright and so precise a yardstick.

Now that Rheims cathedral has been restored and Germany has signed a new treaty guaranteeing Belgium's neutrality, Europe is right back where it was in 1914—except, of course, for the 8,000,000 dead who haven't yet been brought back to life.

Clinic Reveals The 'Why' Behind Erring Drivers

BY CORRINE HARDESTY
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 CHICAGO. — If you drive through a red light, park on the wrong side of the street or exceed the speed limit you may be suffering from "speeder personality," melancholy, or the effects of a family quarrel.

Judge J. M. Braude of Chicago's traffic court, outlined his theory that traffic law violators are "mentally sick," not wanton law-breakers, and pronounced successful his six-months experiment in "curing" violators at the municipal court behavior clinic.

Dr. David Rotman, head of the clinic, studied 47 of Judge Braude's traffic violators and on the basis of his findings of "emotionally unstable," "unsatisfactory home condition," "severe melancholy," "borderline intelligence" and "stutter type," 14 had their

From This Wreckage May Come New Air La

While Congress started action on new aviation legislation and investigations of recent crashes—one in Montana and the other in the South Seas—rescuers brought the bodies of the charred, twisted wreckage of a Northwest Airlines plane, pictured above, to a mountain peak near Bozeman, Mont. En route to this snowbound scene of northern horses, wooded mountainside and rescuers, members of a special investigating team by Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper. driving privilege suspended for periods varying from one to six months.

"We know there are definite personality types which have no business driving an automobile," Judge Braude said. "With the aid of clinical examinations and the psycho-polygraph—which records the personality like a stethoscope indicates the heart condition—we hope to weed them out and correct their faults before they become involved in more serious accidents."

One traffic violator, brought to Judge Braude's court for parking on the wrong side of the street, was found to have a "manic-depressive attitude," and was placed on six months' probation.

A speeder who had a "stilted, paranoid personality"—meaning his fundamental attitude was that the world had a grudge against him—was deprived of his driving privilege for three months and through the efforts of the behavior clinic induced to give up his "chip on the shoulder" complex which was considered partly responsible for his disposition to exceed traffic limits.

"The stutter type," Dr. Rotman said, "may not stutter in his talk. He stutters mentally—that is, in crowded traffic, faced with the necessity of making a decision, he stands still and usually gets hit on both sides by drivers who could not anticipate his action."

Two of the offenders brought to the behavior clinic were found to be mentally unsound and were committed to institutions.

One traffic violator's reckless driving, which consisted mostly of weaving in and out of traffic in an erratic manner, was found to be suffering from a home situation which included a nagging wife and an intruding mother-in-law.

"The definite speeder personality," Judge Braude said, "is the young man or woman who buys through the efforts of the behavior clinic induced to give up his

Women's Clubs to Hold Bride Schools

CENTERVILLE, Iowa.—A series of "schools" to give tips to prospective brides is being sponsored here.

The purpose of the series, sponsored by the Appanoose county unit of the Iowa Federation of Women's clubs, is to promote successful marriages. The club hopes to see the idea spread.

At the first "school" two young women served as the bride and groom. The bride, Georgia Hart, who soon is to become an actual bride, was given advice by Mrs. J. S. Caylor, a widow who was married 65 years. She said: "It's harder to have successful marriages today; don't quarrel, be loyal companions."

A minister, doctor and a club-woman also presented marital advice. A housewife displayed a hope chest and told brides how to fill it.

The Centerville club women plan to start a "bride's club," to give counsel under auspices of the federation.

Mrs. W. M. Speers, Centerville club leader, said the goal of the unit is to establish statewide "bride schools."

CLEVELAND.—Steve O'Neill, shufflin' off to Buffalo, talks about young Robert Feller.

Everybody connected with the Cleveland club—past or present—speaks of the Iowa schoolboy who stands major league hitters on their heads.

O'Neill reveals something about Feller which never before has been stressed. It is that next to his stuff, the position of his head while delivering the ball is Bullet Bob's biggest asset.

"You will recall that I caught Feller, July 6, 1935, the afternoon on which he made his bow against the St. Louis Cardinals in an exhibition game," beams O'Neill, who has handled the lad's every pitching.

"And I'll never forget Leo Durocher jumping clear out of the batter's box, with the remark 'Another Jeff Pfeffer. Looks at third base and throws to the plate.'

"Feller has everything, but I actually believe that the fact the batter sees only one of his eyes until he is all the way around gives him that extra touch of mystery that spells genuine greatness.

"I recall Eddie Rose, a New Orleans outfielder, saying last spring that to him it looked like Feller was going to throw the ball straight up in the air."

Up, Tommie, I'd doubt about that. They shot the boy for days.

"It was nothing more than Feller's youth and his eagerness to make good that caused him to press and hurt his arm. Asking a kid not yet out of his teens to pitch Sunday after Sunday before crowds of 60,000 was a bit too much. I told Cy Slapnicka so, and Feller was vastly more at ease on weekdays."

O'Neill declares that Feller has more baseball sense than any boy with whom he ever came in contact.

"He listens and learns and has an elephant's memory," continues Steve. "For example, he was holding the ball in back of him, where coaches could see the position of his fingers. We only had to tell him once to hold it at his side and hide it."

O'Neill believes that Feller will win 20 or more games for the Indians in 1938, and advises Oscar Vitt to give him four full days' rest between starts.

"His arm injury last season made him a little afraid to snap off the hook he is capable of throwing," concludes O'Neill. "He'll really let go next season, and then you'll really see something."

O'Neill does not consider Feller as fast as Johnson, but points out that the Van Meter wonder chucks a livelier ball.

"Johnson threw more of a side-arm ball and the ball came into the hitter," he concludes. "Feller's rapid one hops upward as did Eddie Cicotte's shine ball. Hitters everlastingly swing a couple of inches under it."

Young Bob Feller has all of the old magicians' stuff without having to resort to any of their tricks.

THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON.—New Deal victories in the Supreme Court in the power front strengthen previous predictions that conversations between the President and executive would be without result.

This fact and the aftermath of Roosevelt's message to Congress emphasize one of the points which might have made the situation clearer in the last two or three months if it had been more commonly recognized: The President has been and is unwilling to make any noteworthy concessions in response to vociferous business demand which would mean any retreat from administration positions previously taken.

The message has been widely interpreted as a "demand" for business co-operation. Instead of promising "concessions," its chief new proposition was one for more business regulation. This has the same flavor as the real facts of the widely babyhood White House utility conversations, in which demands for changes in New Deal power policy were met by presidential requests for lower rates and a large private expansion program.

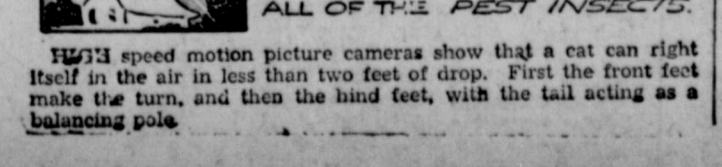

Roosevelt's confidence in his own position at that time was fortified by a serene faith that the Supreme Court would uphold the government in the PWA power, TVA and holding company act test cases. The court has now approved PWA loan-grants to municipalities for public power plants after a three-year court fight. It has suggested possibility of an overturn in its conservative theory of "reproduction cost" in valuations and agreed to an early hearing on the holding company act test.

Q. How long and why did Houston remain at Beason's Ferry?
A. The Texas Army remained there until March 28 to await the crossing of the river of all fugitives from the west that might take up the flight for the Brazos at San Felipe, and at the same time to endeavor to bring about a more orderly retreat.

Q. What steps were taken to carry out Austin's suggestion as to a general consultation?
A. Austin addressed another mass meeting at San Felipe, Sept. 12, again urging a general consultation. His program was adopted there and a committee on "correspondence and vigilance" was appointed composed of Wiley Martin, Randall Jones, William Pettus and Gail Borden, Jr., tentative steps being taken for a consultation at San Felipe, Oct. 15.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

Connie said she wished she could. But she did not mean it. His bride had become as important to her as to him. According to the contract it must be finished within another month. With luck, it would be. Just as with luck again—she might have that much longer as Katie Blyn.

She told him, laughingly, that she wouldn't give him his answer until that time. "When your bride is finished," she said, "then I'll be sensible and make up my mind. We'll decide about being married."

That made postponement easier, more acceptable. When Bret's bride was done Connie must tell him who she was, as well as when she would marry him.

She was not to be allowed that postponement, however. Perhaps Fate, if there is such a lady, had decided that she had been kind enough.

That following Saturday Eloise and Connie, in Bret's car, went shopping together. They had driven over to a nearby town, a larger one where the stores could more satisfactorily meet their demands. Their purchases had been completed, they had even indulged in a fancy sundae at the elegant marble soda fountain, when Eloise stopped suddenly in the street.

"Oh," she exclaimed, "I forgot—I'll have to go back. I promised I'd bring home a Charleston paper. Bret will be disappointed, and Mother will never forgive me, unless I do. You go on to the car, Katie, and I'll be with you in a minute."

"Take your time," Connie laughed. Eloise had appeared as distressed as though she had committed a sizeable offense. Connie and Eloise were close friends now. They had had many happy hours together, chatting as only two young girls can of everything under the sun and above it; they had, indeed become like "sisters."

They chatted now, driving home again, of the latest fashions, as predicted in the store windows, now ridiculous the spring millinery was going to be with its tower-like crowns, profusion of feminine flowers and feathers and bows—made a hill-billy of you, told her jokingly. He was by these days, was Bret, and masterful and tender.

When you are going to make a man your mind to marry me, like the girl?" This was another rebuke that Bret said, more than she could stand. "I can't see why we shouldn't get married right away. Except for the fact that it might be better to wait until the bridge is built, you see," he adopted his usual tone, "I don't want to take my mind completely work."

conceded the belief that, with such backing, whatever governmental faction might secure control in Mexico would give its approval to Austin's plans.

Q. Whom did Austin leave in charge of Texas colony affairs while he was in Mexico City to get his colonization petition approved?
A. Josiah H. Bell was appointed aide at Austin's request and had supervision of the settlement, and Baron de Bastrop looked after Austin's interests at San Antonio, the seat of government for Texas. Josiah Bell came from Kentucky among Austin's first colonists, settling first near Washington-on-the-Brazos, and later in Brazoria County at Bell's Landing near Brazoria.
