

MESSAGE ASKS HOUSING BILL BE COMPLETED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—President Roosevelt today submitted a special message to congress calling for revision of present housing legislation to stimulate a $12,000,000,000 construction boom to be financed by private capital over a 5-year period.

The message was accompanied by specific recommendations for changing the national housing act, Sen. Robert Wagner of New York immediately introduced a bill embodying the recommendations.

Mr. Roosevelt, who blamed the lag in building "drag on all industry" said the effectiveness of the stimulus to construction would depend mainly on the cooperation of industry and labor.

To facilitate this cooperation, he said, "it is my intention to initiate a series of conferences with representatives of industry, labor and finance with a view to giving housing construction a fresh start in the coming year and averting a recurrence of the conditions that brought about the reverses of the present year."

Congress, meanwhile, moved forward with crop control legislation. Both Senate and House considered crop control under threats of a veto if they vote additional funds without providing new revenues.

MIAMI, Fla., Nov. 29.—President Roosevelt arrived here today aboard the presidential yacht, the Potomac. He intends to fish for a few days.

Mrs. Phillips failed to report the slaying, she told police, because "it wouldn't bring back Nancy."

Christmas Spending Will Be Freer This Year A Survey Discloses

By T. W. Kienlen United Press Staff Correspondent CHICAGO—Christmas spending will be freer in the Midwest, Southwest and on parts of the West Coast than in the industrial East and most of the South, a United Press Yuletide survey has indicated. The October stock market crash and general business recession were responsible for predictions of less spending in the East. Strikes and factory shutdowns darkened the holiday prospects in some sections of the West coast while in most of the South generally poor prospects are reported. Farm income, reported near a 10-year peak at $10,000,000,000 (B) in 1937, has boosted early Christmas spending sharply in Iowa, Minnesota and parts of Nebraska. Increased agricultural income was at least partly responsible for a brighter Christmas spending outlook in Texas and other Southwestern states. Philadelphia reported business should be only slightly better, if changed at all, while Harrisburg, Pa., looked for an increase. Despite a moderate "Baying Slump" at present, Birmingham, Ala., looked to increased steel, coal and iron industry wages and employment to give that community and surrounding territory its greatest shopping year. Throughout the East, however, the stock market crash has been responsible for what one Pittsburgh retailer called the "show-ow" across what had been "a very optimistic picture." Boston storekeepers looked for no increase over last year and possibly a smaller income. New York tradesmen expected to do less business. Cleveland, Brightest spot in the Eastern section reported prospects were "distinctly better" than in 1936. The October stock market crash and general business recession were responsible for predictions of less spending in the East. Strikes and factory shutdowns darkened the holiday prospects in some sections of the West coast while in most of the South generally poor prospects are reported.

A report published today in Greenwich, Conn., that Elliott might be teamed as a running mate for Gov. Allred if the latter seeks a third term, revived a similar report, current in Austin several months ago, but was dropped when it appeared he would be ineligible. Friends of Gov. Allred said today they knew of no such plan being considered.

Rewards for Being a Glorious Failure

Musing on Herbert Hoover's visit to the campus of Colby College, where he presided over services celebrating the 100th anniversary of the death of Elijah Lovejoy, one is forced to suspect that we spend too much time telling our youngsters how to become successes and not enough time enlarging on the virtues of failure.

For this Elijah Lovejoy was a flat failure if there ever was one, and he paid for his failure with his life. But there was something in his failure which, a full century after his death, was strong enough to draw a former President of the United States to his grave and to provoke the utterance of wise and noble words about his example.

So complete a flop was Elijah Lovejoy, indeed, that you may not be able to remember who he was or what he did. So here are a few words of explanation.

Lovejoy, then, was an idealistic young graduate of Colby College who headed out to the Illinois prairie country away back in the 1820's and became a newspaper editor in the town of Alton. He became an anti-slavery agitator, spoke his mind freely in his paper, aroused intense antagonism among the townspeople, and was finally mobbed by a gang of toughs who wrecked his presses, burned his office and beat him to death.

Which, as you must admit, was a fairly ignominious end for an ambitious young editor to come to. An industrious newspaper owner in a rising frontier city should grow rich and influential, if he plays his cards right; why all this fuss about the centennial of one who got himself lynched, instead?

Obviously, there must be cases in which failure is better than success. It is pretty certain that if Lovejoy had kept a civil tongue in his head, had offended no one and had grown to a peaceful and prosperous old age, no ex-presidents would be making speeches at his gravestone. He would simply be one of the long list of forgotten and undistinguished successes; instead, he is immortalized as one of the smaller group of glorious failures.

Which may mean, perhaps, that our ideas of what constitutes success and failure are cockeyed. The visible tangible rewards usually go to the man who can keep his righteous indignation in check, who can suppress his anger at injustice when to express it might do him harm, who can trim his sails to meet the prevailing wind. But it is often the other kind of man who is worth remembering.

For we are not really such dollar-worshippers as we are supposed to be. There is something in us which always responds to the man who can sacrifice himself on the pyre of an ideal. We know that such a man has not lost anything worth keeping—not even if he has lost life itself. In a way that defies the ordinary rules of common sense, he has turned failure into a lasting success.

CAST OF CHARACTERS
ROBERT HARRY—hero, explorer.
MELISSA LANE—heroine, Harry's partner.
HONEY BEE GIRL—Indian member of Harry's party.
HADES JONES—pioneer member of Harry's party.

Yesterday, having failed to win Bob, Honey Bee turns against him with deep bitterness and the party faces a new complication.

CHAPTER X
MARY MELISSA had already gone horseback riding. And both Holliman and Hades Jones were away, Bob knew.

Bob hastened back to the camp tents and called Honey Bee. "We will go alone," he told her. "Miss Lane is off somewhere. If you're right, there'll be plenty of time for all of us to see it."

This perhaps was a stroke of luck for Dr. Robert Wilson Barry, even though he never realized it. His first thought to take Mary Melissa with them had so hurt and infuriated the Indian girl that she might have done anything. She might have frozen up, in stolid Indian fashion, and never revealed any secret she knew about Defiance Castle.

But the red maiden was so infuriated, so thoroughly smitten by the unconscious charm of her employer, that she forgave him when he couldn't find Melissa. After all, she would go up with him alone! "I am ready, Bawb," she said simply.

He made her climb the ladders ahead of him. He held her arm frequently, showing her the gallant courtesy which any refined white American man would show any woman. But they were courtesies which no one had ever shown Honey Bee. Bob's manner caused her whole being to tingle.

He headed the ladders at the bottom, while she climbed up. They would quickly follow and hold the next ladder. She climbed nimbly. They reached the rock lip of the great cliff mouth in very few minutes.

"Now!" breathed Bob, still excited. "Where, Honey Bee?" She smiled and led him through a low door of the castle, through two dim rooms into a larger room.

This latter must have been a clan leader's or chieftain's place. She pointed low on a wall.

SCRAM! There was the design of two rectangles, or "long squares," with other odd markings, and with a long triangle around it all. The triangle pointed upward.

"This points, I think, is the top of big cracks in the back wall," said Honey Bee. "Back in these rocks. It has been filled up. But these doors will be there." They hastened out to look. She pointed to a sort of natural triangle, head high or more, in the strata of the cliff rock itself.

Sure enough, Bob perceived, the rock within the triangle was irregular, not a part of the natural deposit. This had been a fault in the side of the mountain, a natural if small tension of the cave, and it had been filled in, probably by man.

Bob began working feverishly. He had carried his short-handled miner's pick strapped to his belt, and they had left more tools up here the day before.

He swung at the rock in the triangle, a heavy blow with the pick point. Nothing happened.

He swung at the rock again and again, eventually loosening one rock as big as his head. He removed it, but others were behind.

He slaved like a mad man, sweating and panting, for nearly an hour, while Honey Bee looked on. Then all at once his pick point drove through, and black space greeted him beyond.

"Ee-yow!" he shrieked. "We've got it, Honey Bee! Got something, at any rate."

Half an hour later the hole was big enough for them to crawl through. He led the way and— as he would extend his hand for that of a little child—he caught Honey Bee's fingers and escorted her inside the dungeon-like place. She said nothing.

"I'm crazy," he suddenly announced, "in the excitement below I forgot to bring a flashlight. But I have a few matches."

HE struck them, one at a time, surveying the dark inner room as best he could. It appeared at first to be a tunnel mouth. Then a light object on a rock ledge caught his attention.

"Unh-unh!" he grunted, in disappointment, inspecting the find. "Aw-aw, Honey Bee, I'm afraid this place isn't what we hoped it was. Look here."

She went over to him. There before them was the prone body of a human being, in a wall niche, shrunken and apparently petrified with drought and time, but a human body nevertheless.

"Honey Bee, I'm afraid we have just opened a tomb. Think for a moment—this is on the southwest corner of the main cave. The mountain behind here is solid, for over a mile, maybe two miles. See? It couldn't be a stairway, or exit. I might have reasoned that out myself, before coming. I get excited too easily!"

He took the way back out of the darkness, and then he saw Honey Bee's face. It was a study in disappointment. Instantly Bob was contrite. He had injured her feelings, when she had tried loyally to aid the expedition.

He put his arm around her shoulders and patted her. The Indians are a sensitive people, for all their stolidity, he told himself.

"I'm sorry, Honey Bee. I didn't mean to appear ungrateful. This is important as a tomb, even if it isn't an entrance. You are swell, really. You've helped more than anyone else so far. Don't think I won't remember it."

HE moved away from her, the better to survey the walled triangle through which he had dug a hole. Heavy stones had been fitted together there with remarkable skill, with no mortar but by careful chinking and placing. It made a strong wall, and a deceptive one.

Virtually all of the ancients, Bob knew, liked to keep their dead as near as possible to them, often in the very walls or floor of the home itself. In such a place as this cliff dwelling, maybe they had just set aside this anteroom as a tomb. It would surely bear careful investigation.

"Don't feel disappointed, Honey Bee," he begged again. "It's very important, really. We'll come back and look into it thoroughly."

He walked again to the hole he had cut, and leaned for a moment on the rock there, staring into the deep darkness, speculating as to the best method of procedure.

"Sa-a-ay!" he suddenly exclaimed.

He leaned inward, sniffing. He turned his head this way and that. Quickly he struck a match and held the flame there in the opening. It flickered, and leaned outward. The smoke twisted toward the main castle masonry, and disappeared outside.

"Ch-ris-tmas!" Bob was excited again, like the boy he was. "There's a draft here, a heavy pull of air, Honey Bee. Maybe this is an entrance tunnel after all!"

He turned to the girl, his face shining with elation. (To Be Continued)

WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—Secretary "Honest Harold" Ickes has just undertaken to assure top officials of PWA and the Interior Department that they are not being subjected to wire tapping, dictaphone planting and other espionage.

Ickes acted to solve a cockeyed situation. Responsible, highly-paid officials were complaining to each other of tapped telephone conversations, of surveillance of visitors to their offices and of being shadowed outside.

Some officials even had private electricians search their offices for possible dictaphones or hidden wires. Ickes himself, apparently to make sure no one was snooping without his knowledge, had the telephone company check important offices recently—including his own.

So the secretary summoned several dozen officials to a departmental conference. He said he had heard some were disturbed by talk of wire-tapping and dictaphones, that there had been some of that once, but wasn't any more. He hadn't delegated the authority for such measures to anyone; he had retained it.

Then up spoke Nathan Straus, the new administrator of the U. S. Housing Authority. Bear in mind that Straus, whose agency operates autonomously under the Interior Department, was bitterly opposed for his job by Ickes.

Straus demanded to know whether Ickes had any right to tap wires and so on. He added his opinion that it was a criminal offense.

Ickes snapped back that he was able to run his own department. "I'm going to get an opinion from the attorney general about it," insisted Straus, whose own telephones connect through the Interior switchboard.

"The attorney general only gives opinions to heads of departments," said Ickes.

"Well, you're the head of a department," returned Straus, indicating that he would still seek an opinion if Ickes didn't.

The meeting broke up amid considerable embarrassment and numerous predictions of further hostilities.

OFFICIAL speeches most worth watching, next to the President's, are those of Jimmy Roosevelt, his son and secretary. Jimmy has been and occasionally will be used to release occasional trial balloons. He spoke with entire confidence, if not with some significance, when he recently told a Catholic youth organization at Chicago:

"American democracy is prepared today to do whatever needs to be done and to go as far as it needs to go to keep the fate of the many from falling back into control of the few."

BALTIMORE.—With a dreary Bowie meeting ending Nov. 30, and owners either headed for or making plans to ship to the sunny south or California, Judy Johnson's predicament gives you an insight on the little fellow's problem in racing.

Moving on to the Golden State, Florida, or New Orleans is a simple matter to the Samuel D. Riddles, Charles S. Howard, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilts, William Ziegler, and Hal Prince Headleys. They had plenty of money in the first place, and came up with War Admirals, Seabiscuits, or well-rounded stables.

But it is devotion to the horse and eternal optimism that makes the mare go for the smaller fry. They travel on the theory that something will turn up, and it usually does. Anyway, the thoroughbreds are fed first.

So Judy Johnson doesn't seem too perturbed about getting herself and two horses to Miami or Havana on exactly $45. "I've been in worse fixes than this," smiles Miss Johnson, one of the few women trainers and a young lady whose appearance away from work wouldn't help you to guess her unusual calling.

"In this business, you never should cross bridges until you come to them. Why with $45 in my purse I'm rich compared to one day two years ago when I found myself at Narragansett Park with only $12 and a horse called Latovich. Latovich was a son of the great Blandford, but he had seen his best days before I got him. I'll admit that I was discouraged, but Latovich suddenly woke up a few days later and won a race. That brought in $1000 and I quit living on hot dogs.

"With all that wealth at our command, Latovich and I departed for Florida. He was in good form and some of the cheaper races at Tropical Park seemed at his mercy. This little globe seemed like the best of all possible worlds, but then another blow fell. Latovich broke down. I cried.

"Through several weeks of despair, I did my best to patch up Latovich, and just when everything seemed ready to go to smash his bad leg responded to treatment. There came a race on a muddy day and to my joy Latovich won it. We were back in the blue chips. Old Lat was a good friend."

MISS JOHNSON bought a horse named Stickemup last March. She started him 16 times and he won one race, at Agawam, and five times he finished second.

The other day at Pimlico she believed he would win, but he stumbled and fell. Now he is sore all over and hardly will be able to run at Bowie.

There always seems to be hope, however. Miss Johnson has a little named Rock Sully which may be the answer to a maiden's prayer. She has started three times and never has been close, but Miss Johnson believes that she may get going in time to bail the little stable out at Bowie. At least, she hopes so.

"As something will turn up. It usually does," she says.

FROM now on until Christmas, big time entertaining will be off. We shall all be too busy getting ready for the holidays to do much formal entertaining. But we should still be hospitable. Let's do some "short order" entertaining, despite all the Christmas cards to be addressed and the packages to be wrapped and mailed.

Let your friends know that your doormat still has WELCOME written on it, even though there won't be much time for fancy things to eat for a month or so. Then arrange your pantry shelves for "short order" hospitality. Have something always on hand to refresh the visitor without exhausting yourself.

Most groceries carry shells made of puff paste put up in tin boxes which you can keep on hand and fill with caviar or anchovies at a moment's notice. There are several good brands on the market.

Carrot Cheese Balls
(Balls for 4)
One package of cream cheese, 1 teaspoon paprika, 1-2 teaspoon pepper, 1-2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 tablespoon mayonnaise, 1 large raw carrot.
Mix cheese with seasonings, Worcestershire sauce, mayonnaise and grated carrot. Make into small balls and stick a toothpick in each when serving.

Baby Hamburgers
(Balls for 4)
One-half pound of ground round steak or boneless chuck, 1-4 onion, 1 teaspoon salt, 1-2 teaspoon pepper, 1 tablespoon butter.

Minute Cheese Dreams
(4 servings)
One package cream cheese, 1 tablespoon mayonnaise, 1-2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, dash of tabasco, 4 slices of bread.
Mix cheese, mayonnaise, Worcestershire sauce and tabasco. Put in enough tabasco to make it snappy.) Remove crusts from bread and roll very flat and thin with a rolling pin. Spread thickly with cheese mixture and roll as you would a jelly roll. Wrap in a damp cloth and keep in ice box until ready to serve. Cut slices from roll about one-half inch thick and toast quickly under broiler. Serve at once.

Canned baby frankfurters may be kept on hand and small rolls bought on the day of a party. Frankfurters may be toasted and put between toasted rolls with a little mustard.

Tomorrow's Menu
BREAKFAST: Baked apples, dry cereal, cream, bran muffins, bacon, buttered toast, coffee, milk.
LUNCHEON: Puffy omelet, Spanish sauce, melba toast, stewed pears, tea, cookies, milk.
DINNER: Tomato juice, boiled ham butt, mustard sauce, parsley potatoes, 8-minute cabbage, steamed apricot pudding, coffee, hard sauce, milk.

WILLIE HAYES, AUSTIN TEXAS

In this column answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. Address inquiries to Will H. Hayes, Austin, Texas.

Q. Has the Texas Highway Department experimented with building pedestrian walks along highways?

A. In recent years walks for pedestrians have been built on many bridges and along highways near schools, and other places of usual travel. This is likely to be done more generally in future as a precaution against traffic accidents.

Q. Where and what are Huesco of the Rio de las Palmas country?

A. They are tank-like rock formations in the mountains about 24 miles east of El Paso and 10 miles north of Highway 62 and were an important stopping place on the old Butterfield Stage route from Texas to California. Indian pictographs at the tanks are said by archaeologists to be more than 2,000 years old.

Q. When was Stephens County created and who were its first officers?

A. Stephens County, first called Buchanan County but renamed in honor Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy, was created in 1858 from Bosque County. The first county court was held Nov. 3, 1860, with Gaudin E. Miller, chief justice; George James, B. W. Reynolds and A. Bishop, commissioners; S. P. Newcomb, county clerk; S. L. ## House Shows How Students Attend School Cheaply

How youths may obtain a higher education with a minimum expense without denial of necessities is demonstrated visibly at Agricultural and Mechanical college at College Station where approximately 450 students are living cooperatively in project houses.

Many of this county who last week attended the Agricultural and Mechanical-Texas University game took time to inspect the Eastland County Project House near the school.

Students who did not go home for the holidays stated that average expense of each participant in the project house, one of 14 newly constructed units is $12 or $12.50 each month. Every project house accommodates 32 youths.

Not only does the $12 sum from each participant pay for board and room but it also meets expense of house maintenance and payments on equipment of modern type. In four years the project house will become property of the Eastland county boys who can, among other things, pass the resulting saving on to other youths.

The project houses are located in a "colony" nearby the school buildings and Kyle field stadium.

Students share work cooperatively as well as the expenses. Food and other supplies are purchased by Manager Jack Morris of Crane, formerly of Ranger, with the aid of Mrs. E. E. Warden of Ranger, house matron.

Prices for the food are near wholesale quotations. It was stated 14 loaves of bread are eaten daily by the youths. Meals are taken in a dining room with two long tables.

The house matron has use of modern kitchen equipment, including electrical refrigeration, automatic heater and other supplies.

Several of the youths had as guests Thanksgiving their parents and friends. Preparation of food for the many youths involves

The house is two storied. Rooms have beds of the bunk type, one section on top of another, each accommodating two students. Usually there are four beds to the room.

A large bathroom is on the second floor offering ample lavatories and showers for the rush created by the 32 boys.

In addition to the youths who live at the house there are two students living elsewhere who takes meals there.

Juarez to Drill A Wildcat Test

JUAREZ, New.—A group of Juarez business men headed by J. Hernandez Ojeda, secretary of the Mexican section of the International Boundary Commission, was granted a concession by the Mexican government, to drill a test well for oil on approximately 15,000 acres of government land, 12 kilometers south of Juarez.

A company has been formed and 54,000 pesos (about $16,000) has been raised to start preliminary work on the project. The company is called the Compania petrolera de Ciudad Juarez.

A favorable report was said to have been made by a group of American geologists brought to Juarez to make a study of the land.

"A test well will be sunk at Puento Alto, about 12 kilometers south of Juarez when equipment arrives," Jesus R. Silva, a stockholder in the newly formed company, said.

Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, former president of Mexico, declared the land Mexican government property.
