Norris Would Bare TVA for All to See

One of the most refreshing signs on the political horizon is the recent action of veteran Senator George W. Norris, Nebraska Independent, in proposing a Senate investigation of his own beloved Tennessee Valley Authority.

In a political era marked all too often by stubborn, unreasoning refusal to air the facts and cope with them, Norris' willingness, even eagerness, to have the inner workings of TVA exposed to public view is a healthy symptom.

If any one man can be given credit for saving Muscle Shoals for the government, for establishment of TVA with its tremendous power-making facilities, its promise of cheaper and more easily available electric current, its usefulness in controlling floods, that man is George Norris.

He fought for his ideal through thick and thin. Never a political discussion did he hold in Senate corridors but what he turned over in his mind the possible advantages which could be accrued to his cherished plan.

Norris was probably the happiest man in Washington on that day back in 1933 when the TVA measure became law. Since then he has defended it against attacks which he felt might ruin its usefulness.

Now, however, a crisis has arisen in the affairs of TVA. There are changes that the administering board is torn by friction and bickering; that efficiency of the entire project is suffering from that dissension.

Norris, the man who had the courage to fight for TVA and the wit to put it over, now has the intelligence to recognize the fact that TVA needs an airing and he has the courage to propose it himself.

To be sure, his investigation resolution proposes an inquiry into other phases of TVA operation, notably whether municipalities and rural residents have suffered any loss by reason of the court attack on the authority by private utilities, and whether there have been any violations of TVA act.

But over and above all that, Norris wants to know whether TVA is working, and if not, why not. He wants the country to know, too, although he must realize the possibility that an investigation may bring out some facts unfavorable to the project he fathered.

More of that kind of frankness and honesty could be used in American politics these days.

Mayor LaGuardia tells New York voters he found on taking office that Tammany had put 888 unnecessary workers on the city payroll. If Tammany was that moderate, then there must be something in the talk that it has reformed.

Hoover warns the Republicans they can't hope to succeed without setting up some principle other than mere dislike of the administration in power. Why not? Didn't the Democrats do it in 1932?

Rambling With The Rambler

One of the queerest quirks in human nature is the desire of people to see others suffer, and that in spite of the fact no one wishes to be the object of suffering. Some people, even entire nations, have felt an unholy glee in subjecting other human beings to the most excruciating tortures.

Aged Evangelist Says Indians Are Not So Savage

By United Press FORT WORTH. — Rev. J. A. Newsom, 71, one of the few white children reared in Oklahoma's Indian Territory, hardly believes Indian food and customs were as "savage" as many historians related.

Newsom, now a traveling Baptist evangelist, was made an orphan by Indians, but he and a brother and sister were taken into the tribe and treated well thereafter.

Newsom's father was killed by an Indian's arrow in 1872, as he plowed in a field on the famous old Goodnight range of the Texas Panhandle. His mother attempted to maintain the family, but two months later she too was slain by a party of marauding Cheyennes when she went to the spring for water.

The Indians carried Newsom, aged 5, his 17-year-old sister and three-year-old brother to Oklahoma and reared them with other children in their village. Newsom was taught to make bows and arrows; to eat parched grasshopper, baked terrapin-in-the-shell, and roasted rattlesnake.

The white children stayed with the Cheyennes for 10 years, spoke their language and adopted their customs. When he was 14, Newsom saw the first white woman since his mother's death. When he was 15, Newsom and his brother and sister were sent to live with the Seminole tribe, where a young missionary school teacher fell in love with him.

After fulfilling a promise to her to attend school for five years, Newsom was married to her.

Most vivid recollection that Newsom has of his Indian existence was that of testing new-born babies for bravery. "If born in the winter," he said, "the infant was dipped in ice water until it stopped crying. Then, if the child lived, he was supposed to be brave. In summer, hot water was used and when babies died the mothers were tortured for bringing a weeping into the world. But about 60 per cent survived."

Much the same is the toll of death in motor vehicle accidents that represent a big loss in human lives every year. Hardly a day passes that we do not read the account of several such accidents but unless the victims are close to us we pass it over with scarcely a thought.

It would seem that Stanley F. Reed, 54-year-old Kentuckian who is a solicitor general of the United States, named as a successor to Justice George Sutherland by President Roosevelt will be more satisfying to the general public that was the nomination of that of Hugo Black. CHICAGO.—The American League is approximately four miles ahead of the National in the matter of promotion.

I name that distance because "Batter Up" is the fourth and finest instructional sound picture put out by the junior circuit. In four years, 12,000,000 people have seen these films.

Asked to name the biggest handicap in the development of young ball players, Lou Fonseca, promotional director of the American League, unhesitatingly answers, "Spring football."

"Football in the fall is bad enough," explains the old first baseman, batting champion, and White Sox manager, "but spring practice prevents a boy from playing baseball at all.

"I wouldn't give you a list of the fine prospects lost to baseball because of football. . . . young men who passed up bonuses for signing and 17 years or more of rather important money just to delight rooting sections."

BASEBALL evidently was being wiped out of football-minded high schools and colleges when Fonseca ticked his present assignment in 1934. To be exact, there were 267 major colleges playing the "fall" sport, the great majority of them in a half-hearted way. In 1937, there will be 415 major colleges rather excited about baseball.

Fifty per cent of major league talent now comes from the colleges.

"The place to catch the young manly part of our League"

Fonseca. "That's where he chooses his major sport."

This is why the American League plans to conduct an eight weeks' baseball school in six cities this summer, with youngsters from 8 to 17 years of age eligible.

The plan was tried out in Chicago last year, when 40,000 kids attended. Teams were formed, eliminated, and finally the Cubs and Sox Juniors played for the championship. Five members of these clubs signed professional contracts. One of them belongs to a major league club.

FONSECA has organized a high school tournament for the state of Iowa next season, and hopes to make it a national one.

The American League is to conduct clinics in scores of colleges this spring. Classes will be conducted on 10 Saturdays in March and April. High school coaches will be invited.

Fonseca believes that more boys are playing baseball today than ever, but says that they do not play enough of it. Their minds are on automobiles, softball, golf, and other things.

A motion picture hobby started Fonseca on his present mission, and the American League's initial appropriation for his work was exactly $1000. Today the department runs into thousands of dollars.

The department formerly had a campaign for places to show American League films. Now it can't find the requests.

Baseball still suffers from a dearth of playing talent, but the condition shouldn't exist for long, if young America catches up with the rest of the world.

"I grant my royal permission," Connie smiled, but her heart did not beat so hard now; almost it seemed not to beat at all.

"In a few weeks," Bret said, "the bridge will be finished. Then we'll be married. You will be Mrs. Bretton Hardesty. How does that sound?"

"It sounds lovely!" Connie breathed. The time had come—her hour was ended—now she must tell him. "But, darling," she slipped her hand into his, summoned all her courage, "I am that girl—just as you said, as we pretended. I am Constance Corby."

He did not say anything. He looked at her; slowly withdrew his hand. "You—but you couldn't be! You're pretending now." But he knew that she was not. He saw in her eyes that now pretense was finished. "You're laughing at me!" His tone was gruff, as though by employing his own pretense he could change things back again as they had been.

"No," Connie said. "I'm not laughing at you, Bret. Don't make it more difficult for me, darling."

"I—MAKE it difficult for you! I am laughing now." His laugh was bitter. "You were laughing at me then. That day we met, you pretended to pretend to be Miss Corby when I asked you to have dinner. You've been laughing at me ever since, every day, when you played at working in the camp office, when we walked into the hills together, when I told you I loved you, when I kissed your lips."

"No, no!" Connie cried. "That isn't true. That wasn't pretending! That was the truest thing that ever happened to me. The other girl—you won't even let me explain."

"But you could have told me," he said. He held his head between his hands, not looking at her. "You need not have pretended with me."

"I know that now." She must not expect him to forgive too quickly. She never doubted that he would, once his shock and hurt was numbered. "But I didn't then. I know now. I should have told you much sooner. But it need not make any difference between us," she added eagerly. If he would look at her, if he had not withdrawn his hand.

"No," he said, still not looking up, "the only difference it makes is that there is nothing between us any more."

"Bret! You can't mean that! I'm just the same. You're just the same. We love each other."

ALLEY OOP

By HAMLIN

Q. How and when did Cos' men join Santa Anna and what was then the comparative strength of the two armies?

A. Gen. Cos, who had been instructed to proceed to Velasco bay, was ordered to divert his march to Lynchburg to join Santa Anna there. He crossed Vince's Bayou on the morning of April 21, over the same bridge that the Texans crossed the previous morning, and joined Santa Anna about 9 o'clock. Houston sent a detachment under Dear Smith to burn the bridge to prevent arrival of more reinforcements and escape of the Mexicans by that way. The armies entered the battle with 783 Texans and about 1,150 Mexicans.

Q. When was the decisive attack made by the Texans at San Jacinto?

A. About three o'clock in the afternoon of April 21, and it was over in about 20 minutes. The Mexicans were taken by complete surprise, the officers, including Santa Anna, and many of the soldiers being in the enjoyment

WILL H. MAYNOR
AUSTIN, TEXAS

Common answers will be given to questions on Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its address inquiries to Will H. Maynor, Austin, Texas.

Texans ahead of them at the crossing, took their position in the woods on the opposite side of a small prairie, with a stretch of marshy land behind and to the right of them.

Q. What was the extent of fighting at San Jacinto on April 20?

A. To find the exact location of the Texans hidden in the woods, Santa Anna sent out infantry with a piece of artillery to fire into the woods, expecting a return of musket fire, but instead received an answer from the "Twin Sisters," which caused a hasty retreat to timber. Intermittent firing was kept up during the afternoon with but little damage other than the severe wounding of Col. James C. Neill. Late in the afternoon Col. Sidney Sherman unsuccessfully attempted to capture the Mexican gun, and two Texans were wounded, one fatally. The Texans were glad to rest for the night, and Santa Anna was equally glad to await arrival of Gen. Cos with 400 or 500 men the next morning.

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS

By Blosser

Q. What were the losses on each side at San Jacinto and how many Mexicans were taken prisoners?

A. The Texans lost nine killed or mortally wounded and 34 were wounded, including Gen. Houston. Mexican losses have been stated as from 380 to 630 killed or mortally wounded. With the exception of about 40 who escaped, the others, along with all the army equipment, were captured.
