The Cat, the Monkey and Uncle Sam

Before we go very much farther with this international co-operation idea, it might be a good thing for us to review the old fable of the cat, the monkey, and the roasted chestnuts.

You may recall that the cat and the monkey agreed on a little co-operation to get the chestnut out of a hot bed of coals. It worked out so that the monkey pulled the chestnuts out and got his paws burned...

And while no one would question the high purposes or the integrity of the great nations which we are associating ourselves, the fact does remain that some well-roasted chestnuts are now resting on an exceedingly hot fire...

Specifically, the danger arises from the fact that while our government is concentrating its attention on the aggression which is going on in China, the great democracies of Europe are much more worried about the aggression which is going on in Spain.

Spain is much nearer to France and England than China is. The military machines of Italy and Germany look worse, in London and Paris, than the military machine of Japan. It can be taken for granted that neither France nor England will get more than knee-deep in any oriental commitment until the affair of Hitler, Mussolini, and Franco is straightened out.

There is another fact to consider. The Japanese campaign in China hits the British purse much harder than the American. America has something like $340,000,000 invested in China; Britain's investment is well above a billion. Every shell that bursts in Shanghai knocks a chip off some British investment.

So it is quite possible that America would be encouraged to take the lead in action to restrain the Japanese and then be left all alone, 'way out in front, while England and France concentrated their attention on affairs nearer home.

Our statesmen at Washington can avoid that danger, if they are sufficiently cagy. They can swing this country's weight on the side of decency and fair play and against international gangsterism without getting into a spot where we have to send out the fleet to make their words good—but they will have to be cautious.

The point to bear in mind is that the danger does exist. The chestnuts are on the fire, and there are plenty of people who would enjoy seeing Uncle Sam play the role of monkey. Caution ought to be the watchword in Washington from now on.

LIFE IN AN IRON LUNG

Sport Glances. By Grayson

BY HARRY GRAYSON Sports Editor, NEA Service

CALIFORNIA talks of another wonder team. The Golden Bears under the late Andy Smith were unbeaten from 1920 until mid-1925.

They were remarkable outfits year after year, but THE wonder team was the one which included the phenomenal sophomores, the immortal Brick Muller and Bob Berkeley, ends, an exceptional kicker in Archie Nesbit, and Charley Erb, quarterback.

It requires considerable courage to compare the current Berkeley brigade with THE wonder team, but even the renowned Muller, Dr. Harold P. Muller now—asserts that the Bears of 1937 have every possibility of being just as good before the campaign comes to a close.

Muller clears up some of the mystery in connection with the much discussed herculean pass he tossed over the goal line to Brodie Stephens against Ohio State in the Rose Bowl, by the way.

"I've heard that pass went all the way from 70 to 100 yards," he chuckles. "I don't know how far I threw it, but it couldn't have been more than 68 yards."

MULLER considers the most unusual thing about that exceptional feat to have been the fact that Stephens, the other end who sprinted by the end, famous Buckeye quarterback and safety man, to catch the ball, wasn't a regular at all in 1920.

"Stephens was on the goof squad, but looked so good in practice before the Ohio State game that Andy Smith decided to give him a trip south," says Muller.

"I didn't believe anybody could throw a football that far," asserted Stinchcomb, after Ohio State's big disaster in Pasadena, in explaining why he permitted Stephens to get by him.

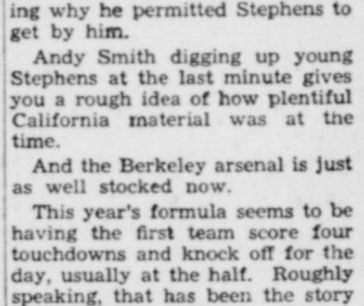

Andy Smith digging up young Stephens at the last minute gives you a rough idea of how plentiful California material was at the time. And the Berkeley arsenal is just as well stocked now.

This year's formula seems to be having the first team score four touchdowns and knock off for the day, usually at the half. Roughly speaking, that has been the story against Saint Mary's, Oregon State, and Washington State.

California played a double bill, Oct. 16, with the California Aggies at the venerable Amos Alonzo Stagg's College of Pacific, and there was some talk of bringing in everybody and everything except Tom Mix's horse to give the Bears an honest day's work.

SEVERE WINTER PREDICTED By United Press RHINELANDER, Wis. — Conservation wardens believe that frequent raids by northern Wisconsin bears on kitchens, gardens, orchards and beehives indicates the coming of a severe winter. Other wildlife students insist, however, that the bears have been driven to the raids by a shortage of berries.

Texas-Mexican Air Line to Start In Near Future

By United Press

EL PASO, Texas.—An air line carrying passengers, mail and express between El Paso and Mexico City, and operated by the Mexican-owned Lineas Aereas Mineras, S. A., will start service next month.

Tri-weekly service will be maintained, the tentative program calling for south-bound flights on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and north-bound flights on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Goron S. Barry of Mazatlan, vice president and general manager of the company, said six planes would be used at the beginning, and nine would be placed in service later.

The planes will be six-passenger, single-motored Lockheed-Vegas. The company plans to substitute bimotored Lockheeds within six months, Barry said.

The El Paso-Mexico City trip will require eight hours, and stops will be made at Chihuahua City, Parral, Torreon and Leon. Connection will be made at Durango with branch lines. A rate of $55 will be charged—the same amount as that charged for railroad fare—with a 10 per cent reduction on round trips.

The company, with headquarters in Mazatlan, has been in operation in Mexico for four years. It now has lines running from Mazatlan to Durango, Toyahvale, San Ignacio, and water routes to La Paz, Bja., Calif., and Tres Marias Islands. Adolfo Garcia of Mexico City is president of the company.

All pilots employed on the run, Barry said, will be veterans with an average flying time of 3,800 hours. Mexican commercial flying regulations, which are similar and as strict as those in the United States, require that a pilot have had a minimum of 2,000 hours of flying time in order to qualify for a transport pilot's license.

Intermediate fields at 60-mile intervals between El Paso and Mexico City are now under construction, Barry said.

Barry, formerly of Los Angeles, was a pilot for the CAT Lines which once operated between El Paso and Mexico City. That line was discontinued when the Mexican government ordered that all pilots on Mexican lines be Mexicans. That company at that time did not have sufficient Mexican pilots in its employ.

"It is an easy run, over level country, with weather unusually good, normally," Barry pointed out. "Our line will be the shortest and fastest connection between the United States and Mexico City."

They Have Quail at Every Meal

Quail to most persons is a rare table delicacy, but to Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Springer of Atlanta, Ga., it is an interesting pet. Old Files Reveal a Slave Beating Case

LOCKHART, Texas.—Files in an old criminal case of 1859 in which a prominent Lockhart citizen was indicted for cruelly whipping a slave who was the property of another person have been unearthed in the courthouse attic here.

The discovery was made by T. H. Beckwith of San Antonio and Miss Lucille Hodges of Lockhart, working on an historical record survey undertaken as a Public Works Administration project.

Thomas H. Baker was foreman of the grand jury which investigated the slave-whipping case. The defendant contended that the slave had insulted him.

The charge to the jury by District Judge A. W. Terrell, who later became author of the Terrell Election Law, stated in part: "Insulting language used by a slave to a white person will justify such white person in inflicting reasonable chastisement on the slave and the white person insulted need not wait to consult the master, but may administer chastisement himself; but, if in inflicting punishment under such circumstances the insulted person inflicts unreasonable abuse, he would be guilty of the offense charged."

The penalty in such cases, according to the charge, was punishment by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $2,000. However, the verdict returned by the jury was for a fine of $10 and costs.

JILL

CAST OF CHARACTERS
JILL WENTWORTH, heroine, vivacious debutante.
ALAN WENTWORTH, hero, rising young artist.
BARRY WENTWORTH, Jill's brother.
JACK WENTWORTH, Jill's brother.
SYLVIA SUTTON, old heiress.

Yesterday: Alan declares his love for Jill. The event is in the hands of Fate now.

CHAPTER VII
PATTY had dropped by Alan's studio for a cheering word and also with a practical suggestion. Had he ever done illustrating? There was a chance her publisher might be interested in having him submit some sketches.

Alan thanked her. But color was his forte. He would feel as helpless as an armless man trying to express "himself" through any medium but paint.

"I've had some good fortune since I saw you," Alan said. "A man—I haven't been able to discover who he was—bought one of my pictures through a dealer. He paid the unbelievable sum of $3000 for it."

"What a break!" Patty cried. She was genuinely pleased and bewildered. Here, she had been giving the old town a black name for coldness and callousness. And straightway it had taken this newcomer to its heart.

The bewilderment lasted all the way round the corner to her apartment, where she found Ardath Holm stretched out on one of the cots, the flowered cover in a wrinkled heap on the floor.

"Come to life," she said to Ardath. "Wonders do happen. That painter fellow has just sold a picture for $3000. What do you think of that for a nice piece of luck?"

Ardath sat up and stared at Patty out of her strange eyes, which now had an excited glow in them.

"Tell me about it," she said in her low, throaty voice.

"Not much to tell," Patty replied. "I don't think he knows so very much about it either. He said someone—he didn't know the man's name—had bought a picture through a dealer."

"He must have some big friends," Ardath drawled. She reached for a cigarette and began to smoke, lazily regarding the circling smoke through half-closed eyes.

PATTY was digesting the remark. She rejected it scornfully. "He doesn't know anybody. The seediest crew of people you could imagine have been coming in to see his pictures. Except for a lot of browsing down and out, he knows only you and me—and Jill."

She clapped. There was a queer smile in Ardath's eyes.

"Her voice sounds rich," Ardath drawled.

Patty stared. This Ardath wasn't so dumb after all. Jill's voice did sound rich. Well-bred, beautifully modulated. The voice of a thoroughbred, who had had thoroughbred training. What did you know about that?

"Well, it should," Patty replied. "Her father's John H. Wentworth, the millionaire."

"Then, she's Jacqueline Wentworth," Ardath gasped.

"Of course. Her friends call her Jill."

"If you think Jill had anything to do with this, you're mistaken," Patty continued crossly. "Jill was wild for him to sell something. But even a rich man's daughter doesn't go around throwing money away on pictures."

"Maybe she wouldn't be throwing it away—on a picture," Ardath's voice sounded wise.

Thinking it over, Patty came to the conclusion that Jill must have interested some of her wealthy friends in Alan's picture—if she had not been, as Ardath had hinted, the actual purchaser. It wasn't likely that a purchaser had dropped out of the skies and left such tangible evidence of his visit. But she would not tell Ardath Holm this. She wished fiercely that she had not said a word about it. Though, she couldn't see how Jill could be hurt by Ardath's sly insinuations.

THE last of Alan's pictures had been boxed.

He had paid cash for a three months' lease of his new, furnished quarters. A location which was very different from the rooms he was leaving.

The new place was not luxurious. But it had dignity and good taste. Even the most fastidious of visitors would not be able to find fault with its atmosphere.

During the next few days, Alan was a man with two minds. One functioned calmly, rationally for practical purposes. The other was filled with dreams. With tender phrases, tender pictures. With one mind he drove a shrewd financial bargain about the lease. With the other, he was writing the prolog of his great adventure. He was in love. Tremendously in love. And amazing as it was, this lovely girl was his.

Tomorrow he would bring Jill to his new place. He would show her how they made tea in English homes. And Jill would sit across a small table and pour tea from the antique silver teapot he had brought from home.

THERE was a ring at the door. Alan opened the door of the dismantled living room and faced Ardath.

"Hello," Ardath said. "How are you?" Alan spoke more formally.

Ardath held out a long, slim hand. "Perhaps you don't remember me. I'm Ardath Holm."

"I remember you quite well," Alan said. Which was true. There was something dangerously arresting about this girl. You might not admire her type. But you would never overlook her in a crowd.

"I'm afraid I must appear in-hospitable. I can't ask you in, Miss Holm. I'm moving. In fact, I have moved. I'm waiting now for a cab."

"I heard you were going away," Ardath spoke, slowly, "and that you had sold a picture."

"I'm afraid I sounded boastful. Spreading the news. But it was hard to keep. It's pretty great, isn't it?"

"I should say so," Ardath still stood looking up at him. She made no move to go. Alan, restless, eager to be on his way, wondered what more there was to be said.

"Jacqueline Wentworth must be pleased," Ardath said.

"Who—oh Jill?"

"Her real name is Jacqueline. All her millionaire friends call her Jill, I believe."

Color surged to Alan's face, but he said nothing.

After a moment, Ardath continued. "Patty said she was wild for you to sell a picture. And you did. It's wonderful what rich people can accomplish, isn't it? But, naturally, the daughter of John Wentworth could do pretty much what she started out to do. You were lucky to pick a friend like this Wentworth girl. I guess you know that."

"Yes," Alan's voice was cool and controlled. Rage and anguish within. But this girl—this insufferable girl, who had toppled his world, should not know.

"Well, good-by—and congratulations," Ardath said.

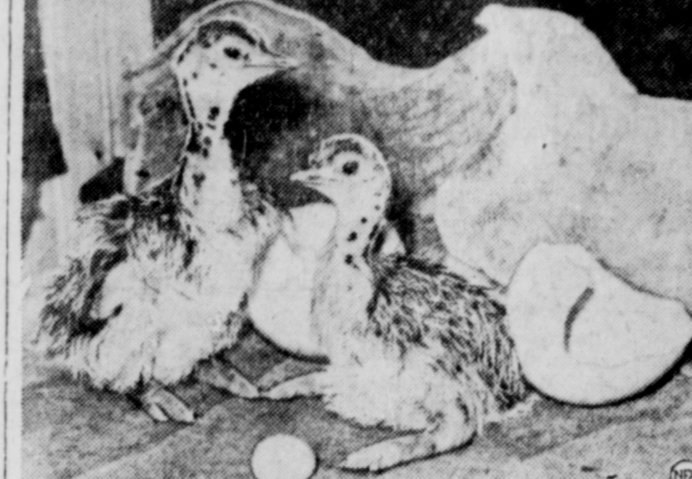

Alan stood in the doorway of his old room, barren place. He watched the taxi coming toward him. He motioned to the driver and went inside.

He picked up the telephone book that hung dejectedly by the phone and opened it with shaking fingers.

Yes, there was the name, and the address. And the number Jill had given him.

THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—It is interesting to watch the growth of an incipient war psychology in Washington. In fact, it is so interesting to some persons who are especially sensitive on the subject of war that it gives them cold chills.

No one thinks we are really going to war, of course. But so many of both the best and most indifferent minds here are talking about what it would be like if we did, that it would be holding out on the reader not to mention it.

In no time at all, Washington—high and low—has come to be teeming with people who turn out to be military-naval strategists of the most articulate order.

Senator M. M. Logan of Kentucky, who ranks well up in the Senate Military Affairs Committee, proposes a naval blockade of Japan which he thinks would make the Japanese behave.

For one such suggestion made publicly a Washington correspondent can hear a hundred in private.

Roosevelt, with his warning "let no one imagine that America will escape," and his advocacy of collective "quarantine" against aggressor nations, started all this.

He left the imagination free to roam the distance between an admonitory shake of the finger at Japan and positive military-naval action in a "preventive war."

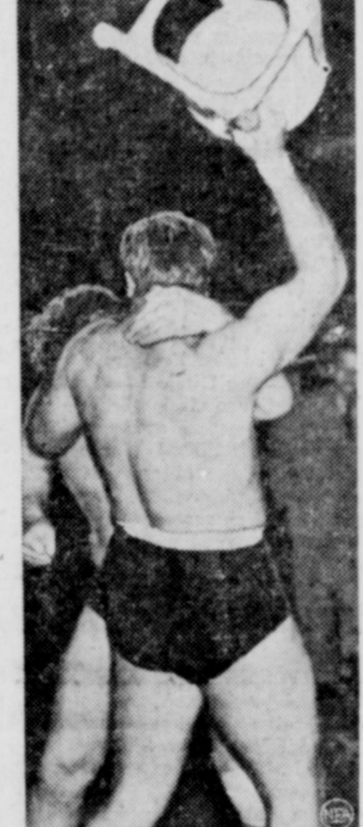

Military and naval men naturally, in view of their function, speak in terms of action. But they're far from the only ones who can tell you how long it would take to develop an effective bombing base in Alaska. (About a year, if you want to know.)

Ghost Buffalo Herd Is Declared a Myth

AUSTIN, Texas—Research workers for the Texas Game, Fish and Oyster Commission have discovered a record of a "ghost buffalo herd" that 40 years ago created wild interest among Central Texas sportsmen.

Wild buffalo had disappeared from Texas several years earlier because of the depredations of professional hunters. Then, in 1894, a sports magazine reported that "40 or 50" buffalo still roamed the wild area of Val Verde County along the Rio Grande. As the story circulated, the herd grew figuratively larger.

An expedition to search for the "last herd" was formed at San Antonio. Then came word that the herd had crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico. The would-be buffalo hunters became suspicious and finally disbanded.

H. E. Atwater, well-known naturalist of the day, checked up on the legendary herd. He concluded that the buffalo were entirely mythical.

"So far as I know," he wrote in a report in the commission's files, "no sign of them has been seen. It is strange that some of the buffalo have not turned up since that time, or at least been heard from in some way."

Texas 'Little TVA' Finished at Pecos

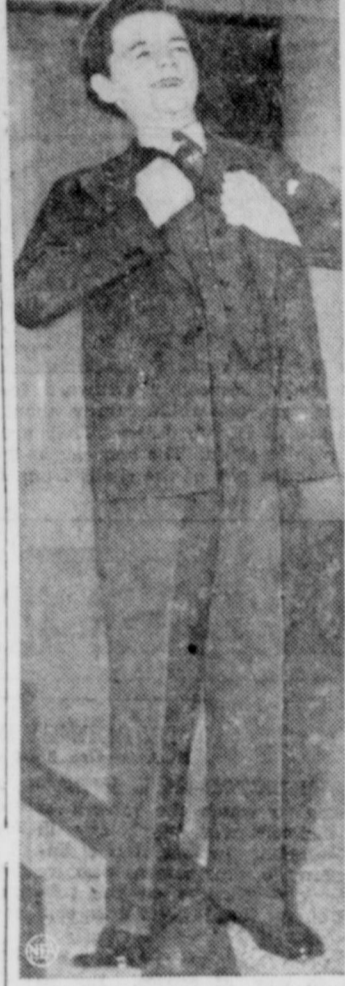

PORT WORTH, Texas—State headquarters of the Public Works Administration in Fort Worth have announced the completion of the first part of the Texas "Little TVA" project on the Pecos river.

Nowhere in the Southwest is there another project like that which centers around the $2,600,000 Red Bluff dam, for it will supply not only irrigation facilities but electricity to farmers and ranchers living in the hitherto-semi-arid country.

Today there is an abundance of water for residents along the meandering Pecos.

With water flowing over the Red Bluff spillway, PWA headquarters has received authority to award contracts on an electrical distribution system, which will include a large generator and about 150 miles of power lines.

The new water distribution is expected to increase by hundreds of acres of the development of lands down the Pecos, one section of which already is considered one of the finest spots in the nation for raising of cantaloupes.

Poultry and Eggs Shipments Are Low

AUSTIN, Texas—Shipments of poultry and eggs from Texas to interstate points during September reached a seasonal low, it has been reported by the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research. Poultry shipments totaled only 33 cars, but this total was substantially above the eighteen cars shipped during September last year. Egg shipments of 26 cars were exactly equal to those of September last year.

Receipts of eggs at Texas markets from out-of-state points amounted to only five cars, compared with 26 cars last year. This year two cars originated in Kansas and three cars in Missouri. A year ago nine cars were received from Kansas, nine from Missouri, one from Oklahoma, and seven from Nebraska.
