Somewhere a Voice Is Calling

Police raided a cockfight recently and arrested 48 men.

Not on a ranch in Wyoming. Not in a table in Alabama. Not in a barn on the banks of the Wabash. In a seven-room apartment suite on the island of Manhattan.

A search of police records disclosed that it was the first violation of the law prohibiting cockfights that had come to anybody's attention in a generation. The men had permitted themselves to be carried away by their enthusiasm, and the noise of their combined cries of exhortation, approval, and satisfaction had attracted the attention of the law.

There's just a possibility that this theory might not stand up under a really rough assault, but the thought has frequently been intruding itself of late that something like a renaissance of the frontier spirit can be detected creeping up on us in the developments of the public taste in a number of fields. Creeping up especially, of course, on the city-dweller. It takes the city feller to come up with discoveries of things their country cousins knew all along.

It may not be accurate to call it the frontier spirit. It may be just an assertion of the city's boy's occasional dim nostalgia for a rural life he is acquainted with only by hearsay. Whatever it is, it's something. A man oughtn't to stick his neck out to the extent of prophesying such things as coon-hunting in city parks and the roping and branding of taxicabs, but we wouldn't be too surprised.

When it started would be difficult to ascertain with any degree of exactness. Elsa Maxwell had people who would ordinarily have attended her party in white ties and tails, hasking corn and milking a cow more than a year ago. Hollywood followed with farm and ranch parties of its own. Such items as buffalo meat and venison steak have been appearing on cafe menus with increasing frequency during the past year or so.

Consider the radio and movie Hill-billies. Consider that chicken-peck movement in truckin'. New York goes dippy over a rodeo every so often. The movement toward the farm and ranch is unmistakable in the art of painting. Every third novel you buy tells you all about the troubles with the livestock and crops. The moving picture producers are now busying themselves turning out old-fashioned "westerns" hand over fist.

It suttinly 'pears like suthin'.

American owners of Mexican oil wells are up in the air over attempts to squeeze them out. Apparently Mexican oil is not the kind that soothes troubled waters.

A senator claims that one federal bureau employs only red-heads. Maybe the government is being run by Reds after all.

Waiting for the Easter Rabbit in Washington

THE AGONY OF JESUS

BY FATHER S. E. BYRNE
St. Rita's Church, Ranger

THE TRIALS OF JESUS BEFORE PILATE AND HEROD

The morning after the night spent by Our Lord in the custody of the barbarous soldiers, having previously been questioned by Annas, and tried and condemned by the religious tribunal of the Sanhedrin, He was brought again before that assembly presided over by Caiaphas, the high priest.

Who can imagine what torments Christ must have endured during that night, after having been turned over to the custody of the soldiers. One of the sufferings of Our Lord was to listen to the three denials of the one whom He had chosen as head of His church, and who just a short time previously had made his declaration that even though the rest should deny Christ that he would never deny Him. Let us consider this denial as recounted by St. Luke:

"They led Him (Christ) to the high priest's house. But Peter followed afar off. And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were sitting about it, Peter was in the midst of them, whom when a certain servant maid had seen sitting at the light, and had earnestly beheld him, she said: 'This man also was with Him.' But he denied Him, saying: 'Woman, I know Him not.' And after a little while another seeing him, said: 'Thou also are one of them.' But Peter said: 'O man, I am not.' And after the space, as it were, of one hour, another certain man affirmed, saying: 'Of a truth, this man was with Him; for he also is a Galilean.' And Peter said: 'Man, I know not what thou sayest.' And immediately, as he was yet speaking the cock crew. And the Lord turning, looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, as He had said: 'Before the cock crow thou shalt deny me thrice. And Peter, going out, wept bitterly. And the men that held Him, mocked Him and struck Him. And they blindfolded Him, and smote his face. And they asked Him, saying: 'Prophesy, who is it that struck thee?' And blaspheming, many other things they said against Him."

Disappointed at not obtaining offhand the confirmation of their death sentence, they exclaim: "If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him up to thee."

Seeing clearly that the Sanhedrin wanted to make him only give his approval and not be able to judge the condemned, Pilate suggests with irony, "Take Him you, and judge Him according to your law." This solution was not what they wanted and they were driven to declare their own powerlessness, saying: "It is not lawful for us to put any man to death."

Since they saw that Pilate would not ratify their sentence unless he approved of their case, they brought accusations against Jesus, to which accusations they carefully gave a political coloring. They realized that the pretended blasphemy and the claim to be the Messiah would make little impression on a pagan, so they ignored the supposed cause of their condemnation, and declared: "We have found this man perverting our nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, and saying that He is Christ the King."

After having heard this clear accusation Pilate returned to the praetorium and questioned Jesus: "Art Thou the King of the Jews?" Dressed as a poor man, His face pale with fatigue, His hands bound as if He were a criminal, compared to the Emperor He must have looked pitiable, still when Pilate looked into His eyes there was a light there that made him fear that possibly this was the Messiah.

Our Lord responded: "Sayest thou this thing of thyself or have others told it to thee of Me?"

Am I a Jew? Pilate contemptuously asked. "Thy own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee up to me. What hast thou done?"

Only to the first question of Pilate does Jesus reply and in words befitting a king: "My kingdom is not of this world. If My kingdom were of this world, My

the world, that I should give testimony to the truth."

"What is truth?" asked Pilate abruptly, and, not waiting for an answer, returned to the Sanhedrin. Had Pilate been a little less hasty he might have had his question concerning truth answered by the one who was truth itself. Upon arriving on the balcony he spoke to the Jews: "I find no cause in Him."

Fearing that their victim is about to escape from them, the members of the Sanhedrin began to speak all at the same time, trying to prevail upon Pilate to change his views. The best arguments they felt would be those that would deal with the Roman authority, for Pilate was placed over the Jews by the Romans and would be careful in his dealings with one who offended Rome; they therefore declared: "He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Judea, beginning from Galilee to this place."

Pilate was surprised that Jesus remained silent at this accusation. "Answerest Thou nothing? Dost Thou not hear how great testimonies they allege against Thee?" But Our Lord answered him "never a word." Pilate, seeing that he could find no fault with Jesus, and fearing to say so, saw a chance for him to escape from this unpleasant position. He had heard the word Galilee, and he immediately asked: "Is this Man of Galilee?" Upon being informed that such was the case, he sent Jesus to Herod, the prince of the province of Galilee. Herod for a long time had desired to see Jesus and question Him concerning His teachings, and when He was brought before him he expected that he would find in the same Herod the Baptist to whom the Prophet's Herod living with brother. At first he was disappointed with some show

LAMB CHOPS are always good. But in spring time they seem to have even more tenderness and delicate flavor.

Billy the Oysterman, a New York restaurant proprietor who swings a wicked skillet when it comes to he-man food, gave us a few hints on flaking the most of the domestic lamb chop.

"For home consumption," he said, "select loin chops that come from the saddle of the lamb. Yes, I know these are slightly more expensive by the pound than rib chops, but the proportion of meat to bone is much higher and that actually makes them more economical. I definitely prefer the loin chop if it is cut from the rack of the lamb."

"However, I realize that most people still prefer rib chops. This is because the meat is more delicate and finely grained."

He explained a few of the mysteries of big and little chops. He said that if rib chops are selected and single portions are to be served, cutting the meat with the chop to a single rib would mean too thin a piece of meat which might dry out in cooking.

Cut Rib Chops Thick

Therefore he suggested that two chops be cut from three ribs, and then the center bone be removed. For a double chop, three ribs should again be used with the two outer bones removed.

On rib chops the fat and gristle should be trimmed off. Two single chops or one double chop is the usual individual serving.

As for loin chops, they can of course be cut to any desired thickness. A loin chop one inch thick is quite substantial. Loin chops are not trimmed but left as they are.

Our authority insists that broiling is the best way of cooking

NAMES in the News

Names make headlines. Newspapers, today as always, are made up of what people say, think, propose, dissent from. Governments, institutions, businesses—and all their activities—are only the lengthened shadows of men!

What is true on the front pages is true, also, on advertising pages. Advertisements are simply signed statements of men, banded together to form a business who seek your patronage. They back their good name against the products they ask you to buy. They say, in cold black type, that theirs is a name you can trust.

People who get the most for their money in the market-places are people who know the value of familiar, trade-marked products. They buy with confidence. They buy by name—and save time, tiresome searching, and money! Are you doing likewise?

Easter Cruise

CAST OF CHARACTERS
VICI MILNER, heroine; she is on the cruise.
DICK HAMILTON, hero; he is on the cruise.
JOYCE, heroine's friend; she is on the cruise.

CHAPTER VI
The hard sobs that were choking her; she cried long and lustily, enjoying every salt tear. . . .

DR. GRAY stopped in to see her the first thing next morning. It was after 9 o'clock but she was just beginning to open her eyes.

"Well, young lady, how do you feel this morning?"

"I'm fine, thanks." "Glad to hear it." He laid a professional hand on her forehead.

"Dr. Gray chuckled. 'He's been up since daybreak, but I gave him strict orders not to wake you. Now he's gone over to Hamilton on some secret mission. . . ."

"To Hamilton?" Joyce shuddered. "I wouldn't cross that water again. . . ."

"Oh, come now!" The doctor regarded her more critically. Perhaps it had been a bad fright, more than she let on. He mustn't let it leave a scar.

"She met the challenge in his eyes. 'I'd rather stay on the boat. . . ."

"He stroked his chin thoughtfully. 'Well, that's too bad, now. All the ladies have gone ashore, and I'm trying to find someone to do a little shopping for me. I promised my wife some doekin gloves from Trimmingham's. But I can't leave the ship; I have one of the crew down with acute appendicitis. . . ."

"Joyce hesitated. The morning sun streamed through the port, and she knew that the water would be clear and blue again, topped with little white caps edged in pink. . . ."

"I'll go for you," she said finally. "I guess it would be silly not to go." An hour later she was ashore wishing Dick were with her.

TRIMMINGHAM'S Department Store was crowded to capacity with passengers from the Empress, shopping for English doekins and Scottish tweeds and Wedgewood potteries. But the greatest number was at the glove counter, where doekins that sold for $4 in New York might be picked up for $2.

Leaving the store, Joyce walked up the hill toward the center of town, idling away the hour until the last tender left for the ship. She strolled through the gardens of the Bermudiana Hotel again, enjoying their colorful and well-planned beauty; she passed the governor's mansion and she visited the quaint little Portuguese church. And all the while she looked above the heads of passers-by for a sight of Dick's turbulent brown curls. But she looked in vain.

Nor did she see him in the crowd on the wharf waiting for the tender. Mr. Gregory was there, standing apart from the others, and he joined her.

"If I'd known you were coming ashore alone," he remarked pleasantly, "we might have done something together."

Joyce laughed. "I've been shopping, and I know you wouldn't have enjoyed that."

A little colored boy approached them, his arms laden with enormous bouquets of sweet peas. "Flowers f' de lady, boss?"

"Why not?" Mr. Gregory responded promptly. "How much?" "Twenty-five cents, boss."

"Cheap enough. I think I'll take the white ones. . . . that's it." He held them out to Joyce. "Wear them for me, with that lovely white frock of yours, will you?"

Joyce thanked him, admiring the wax-like perfection of the flowers. But her eyes clouded at the reminder of the lovely white frock that was no more, and she buried her face in the soft fragrance of the bouquet. Evidently Mr. Gregory had not heard of their little adventure. . . .

While they were crossing the harbor, he asked her suddenly: "Would you care to spend the evening in Havana with me, Miss Milner? There's a great deal to do, I am told, with an agreeable companion."

But she begged off quickly. "I'm so sorry, Mr. Gregory. I've already made an engagement. . . ."

"She knew that she was refusing the invitation, solely in the hope that Dick would ask her. She might still be left sitting on the Empress all alone, a target for Mr. Gregory's sympathy. (To Be Continued)

him scourged, to save His life at least. It was the custom of the Roman governor of Jerusalem to release to the Jews on the Paschal Festival a prisoner, whomsoever they would. As the multitude had already arrived, Pilate ascended the steps of the tribunal set before the praetorium, and asked the Jews: "Whom will you that I release to you, Barabbas or Jesus that is called Christ?"

No sooner had he seated himself, than some of his servants came to him with a message from his wife, "Have thou nothing to do with that Man; for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him." But Pilate would not heed her, and after sending the servants back, he again asked his question: "Which of the two do you wish that I release unto you?" The crowd, having been stirred up in the meantime by the chief priests, cried out with one voice: "Barabbas!"

Barabbas was a notorious leader of a band of men who only a short time before had caused bloodshed in Jerusalem in a vain effort to overthrow the authority of Rome and that of the Sanhedrin as well; this uprising had been crushed after much bloodshed, and Barabbas, the leader, was looked upon with contempt by most of the people. St. John merely sums up the popular regard by saying, "Now Barabbas was a robber!"

"What shall I do then with Jesus that is called Christ?" asked Pilate.

All together both the rank and file of the crowd and also the members of the great council cried: "Let Him be crucified!"

"Why, what evil hath He done?" the governor insisted. "I find in Him nothing worthy of death. I will chastise Him therefore, and release Him."

But they with clamor, cried out the more: "Crucify Him! Let Him be crucified!"

Finding that to talk longer was useless, and that the crowd was beginning to become unruly, Pilate, still knowing Jesus to be innocent, thought of an ancient Jewish custom as a means of showing to the crowd that he believed the prisoner innocent. There was a custom in Israel which ordained that the magistrates of any city where the author of a murder remained undiscovered should wash their hands over the corpse of the victim, in witness of their innocence. Thus he ordered a basin of water and washed his hands before the gaze of the crowd, saying: "I am innocent of the blood of this just Man, now, then, it is your concern." The people answering said: "His blood be upon us and upon our children!" Then Pilate delivered over Christ into the hands of the soldiers to be scourged.

From this conduct of Pilate, when believing Jesus to be innocent he nevertheless condemned Him to be scourged, we can see the danger of paying too much attention to the opinion of the world around us. If Pilate had done what he believed in the beginning to be right, he would have delivered Jesus from the Jews, instead of trying to gain the good graces of all concerned and as a result found himself every time deeper in the affair. Let us try to immediately do those things we know to be right, and not hesitate out of fear of what our neighbor might think about us.

NEW ORLEANS—The Haas of New Orleans are America's first golfing family. When 52-year-old Fred Haas, Sr., approached and putted himself to the New Orleans P. G. A. championship on his home Colonial Club course the other day, he further cluttered up the family trophy room. He captured the same crown in 1934.

The Haas trophy room contains scores of cups and things copped by Fred Haas, Jr., a member of this year's Walker Cup team, the Colonial Club of New Orleans women's championship symbol bagged last fall by daughter Mildred, and others accounted for by Mrs. Haas. As they approach from a distance down the fairway, you can't tell the two male members of the Haas clan apart. They walk alike, and their games are identical.

Horton Smith is young Freddie's idol, but the boy plays in the methodical fashion of his father. Naturally, Freddie, now 22, has outstripped his dad. This is principally due to his superiority approaching and on the greens, although "Pops," as they call him, is a superlative player of pitches and an excellent putter.

THE story of Fred Haas, Sr., a striking figure of a man, is an interesting one. Adversity put him in the golfing business. Born at Stuttgart, Germany, he was reared in a cotton family, learned to speak English as a child, and followed the boll business on the continent and in the United States until 1928.

"Pops" Haas had studied golf with German thoroughness. He was a brilliant amateur who had no time for tournaments. In his cotton work, he also had made a study of grass.

It was this knowledge of golf and grass that first turned him to professional golf at Greenville, S. C., then Bastrop, La., and finally to the Colonial Club of New Orleans, the course of which today reflects his personal neatness.

Fred Haas, Sr., began his American business career in Boston. It was there that he met the Arkansas schoolgirl whom he later married. Mrs. Haas still is a splendid golfer. Her more recent contributions to the Haas trophy room testify to this.

BUT it is Fred Haas, Jr., who should write American golfing history. As a student of Louisiana State University, which daughter Mildred attends now, an 18-year-old Freddie Haas went to the quarter-finals of the national amateur at Brookline in 1934. He was the winner and medalist in the western junior in Chicago.

At 19, Freddie was runner-up in the national intercollegiate of 1935 in Washington. He won the western junior for the second straight year in Detroit, and was a quarter-finalist in the national amateur in Cleveland.

At 20, Freddie tied Johnny Revolta in the Waterloo tournament of 1936, but lost in the playoff. He copped the Canadian amateur at Winnipeg.

He won the national intercollegiate in Pittsburgh last year. Freddie Haas has the ability and class, and he most certainly belongs.

WASHINGTON -- BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—Clouds of partisan smoke obscure the merits and demerits of the reorganization bill. The average citizen who wants to make up his mind objectively will need more time for study and more opportunity for experience with government problems than he can ever expect to have.

The Senate wouldn't have passed the bill if the Roosevelt administration hadn't brought the bill of its friends into line for the measure and applied most of the lobbying pressures which any administration has at its command. On the other hand, the opposition wouldn't have amounted to much if Mr. Roosevelt's most persistent critics and opponents hadn't banded together in an effort to give the President a personal beating.

ALTHOUGH there was honest conviction on both sides, the lineup shows most of the New Deal Democrats and machine followers on one side and the coalition of Republicans and anti-administration Democrats furnishing the bulk of nays. This is true even though large non-partisan outside groups also fought the bill.

One new result is the White House has won its first bitter, close-fought major congressional battle since the 1936 election. The administration must now battle again in the House.

And again the issue is the question of how much power ought to be given the President in the hope of improving government efficiency.

THE Senate bill and the House reorganization committee bills give the President about half as much scope as he originally asked for. The chief remaining controversial points are:

- 1. POWER TO REORGANIZE—The President would be authorized to transfer, regroup, consolidate, reorganize and abolish administrative agencies with the exception of agencies which include the Interstate Commerce, Federal Trade, Securities Exchange, Communications, Power, Coal and Maritime Commissions, the National Labor Relations Board, Federal Reserve System and others. He could not abolish any executive department. His orders must lie before Congress for 60 days before becoming effective and could be nullified only by a congressional enactment—which, as usual, would be subject to veto.
- 2. CIVIL SERVICE—The President is authorized to place non-civil service employees whose duties do not involve determination of policies under civil service, assuming they can pass non-competitive examinations. This number would be about 200,000 employees.
- 3. COMPTROLLER GENERAL.—The Senate bill would abolish this office, setting up a joint congressional committee on accounts which would appoint an Auditor General responsible to Congress. The House committee bill retains the Comptroller General but makes him responsible to and removable by the President.

Both Senate and House have approved the relatively non-controversial proposals to give the President six executive assistants and to create a Department of Public Welfare.

Texas Is Next To California With Acreage In Truck

DALLAS (Special)—Significant evidence of growing diversification in farm crops, highly desirable in the South to ease the strain of expanding cotton markets, is seen by the All-South Development Council in the rise of Texas to second place, next to California, in acreage devoted to commercial vegetable crops.

The 271,238 acres utilized in the state in 1934, bringing the state from 12th place to second, the $24,222,000 in cash receipts from such crops put the state in fourth place nationally in the total, and was a large gain from the $14,790,000 valuation in 1933.

California, which has been the leading state in both acreage and receipts for many years, was far in front in value, with $57,742,000. Florida and New York were second and third, with valuations of $29,742,000 and $22,184,000, respectively.

Other southern states, making vigorous efforts to "modernize agriculture and industry" as well as to balance the different factors with agriculture and lessen their dependence upon cotton, have greatly increased their commercial vegetable acreage.

The report was made by Gustave Burmeister, Department of Agriculture economist, showing that Louisiana's acreage last year was five times as great as in 1933; Alabama and Mississippi four times; and Georgia and Florida tripled their total growth acreage in that period.

Young Cave Robbers Gang Is Broken Up

HOUSTON — Investigation of five A. J. Taylor has broken up a gang of juvenile cave-robbing robbers who plundered and hid their loot in the manner of old-time river thieves.

The youngsters, caught in an area 12 to 17, used a large cave in the 40-foot bank of White Lake as a hideout. Many of the boys lived in the cave for days at a time on food stolen from shops and homes.

They entered the cave through a tunnel in the top of the jagged bank. Inside the cave Taylor found stolen bicycles, clothing, jewelry, automobile accessories, contents of safes and scores of other articles.
