A Fight With Bare Hands

An Indian guide goes into the Adirondack woods for a month's stay without supplies, and emerges on the country's news pages. A company of men who lead the pioneer life commemorating the opening of the Northwest Territory run the gamut of reporters and photographers every time they enter town.

People find enterprises like those dramatic and exciting. The spectacle of one man struggling with the forces of nature virtually empty-handed, or a hand of men trying the ways of the continent's settlers, arouses admiration and stirs the imagination.

"That was the life," you hear. "Those pioneers had a fight on their hands. We're getting to be a bunch of sissies."

You hear those things, but you don't hear them from the men whom industry has not yet "absorbed." You don't hear them from their wives. You won't be hearing them from those young men who will be spending 52 weeks of their first year out of school looking for a job.

Perhaps there will be such hardy and dramatic "stunts" sometime in the future which will attract the nation's attention, arouse its admiration, even evoke assorted cries of envy. Perhaps there will be spectacular individuals setting out in the winter, bare-handed and insufficiently clad, just for a stunt, to tackle the problem of making a living.

The country's pioneers didn't arouse a great deal of wonder and admiration among their contemporaries. There were too many of them. The men who set out on job-trapping expeditions in the industrial wilds don't quite excite the amount of attention due them today, and certainly not the admiration.

It might not be a bad idea to distribute a few coon-skin caps and moccasins around. Send one unemployed man in each city out on his regular hunt, and have a reporter and photographer go with him. Have them live with him at home for a while and record his pioneer way of life there.

Just one in each city. It might attract attention. Certainly it would boost the man's stock in the eyes of some of his less sympathetic brothers, and it might speed things up, too.

There's a cat in Rochester who can recognize a triangle every time. Sleuths might use him in the detection of crimes of jealousy.

The Buffalo woman signal-tower operator who recommended switch-throwing for women who want to reduce had a good idea, but the chances are they'd go right back to the rolling pin after a while.

Raw Materials of South Dominate In Chemical Research

DALLAS.—The close relationship of some of the primary raw materials of the South, especially of Texas, to scores of new and useful industrial products is emphasized by the growing tendency of "chemical literature" to concern itself with methods and processes for transforming mineral and plant materials into new forms.

The importance to Texas of the roles played by petroleum and sulphur, and by cotton, southern pine and other cellulose sources in the creation of the rapidly widening range of synthetic products is noteworthy, says a report of the All-South Development Council, because of the attention centered on these materials, produced here, in connection with the annual meeting of the American Chemical Society here this week.

A survey of the technical literature in these fields, made by Dr. E. J. Crane of Ohio State University, editor of Chemical Abstract, reviewing reports of chemical investigations throughout the world, shows that the number of technical reports relating to petroleum increased almost 15 per cent in 1937 over 1936. The society's journal published 927 abstracts in this field last year, and described

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

By Mrs. Gaynor Maddox

THERE'S a time when every man wants to be alone. Not all the time, of course. It's a wise wife who arranges a get-together for her husband and his men friends at home. It gives the man of the house a feeling of gratitude to his modern wife.

What will they drink? Anything from soda pop down the line. That is a personal matter. All you have to do is to clear out of sight once you have arranged "eats" which the men can have whenever they are ready. The following are tried and true man-pleasing buffet recipes.

Ham Butter

(Serves 6)

One-quarter pound baked ham. 2 hard cooked egg yolks. 1-8 teaspoon dry mustard. 1-4 pound sweet butter, cayenne pepper. Remove fat from ham. Chop ham as fine as possible, then add egg yolks and pound ham and yolks to a pulp. Add butter, cayenne, and mustard. Mix thoroughly and then rub through a sieve.

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Sliced orange, fruit muffins, crisp bacon, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Ham butter, rye bread, sliced tomatoes with scallions, spiced pears, tea, milk.

DINNER: Broiled steak, French fried potatoes, buttered beets, spring salad, old-fashioned strawberry shortcake, heavy cream, coffee, milk.

nickel with butter and then with hearty-flavored cheese. Cover cheese with thin layer of catsup. Cover with another slice of buttered bread. Garnish with stuffed olives.

Cheese and Shrimp Sandwich

(Serves 6)

Six slices bread. 1 cup chopped cooked shrimp. 1 package lumpy cheese. Toast bread lightly on both sides. Remove black membrane from cooked shrimp and chop. Spread on toast. Cover with slices of cheese. Place in broiler for a few seconds until cheese is melted and slightly brown.

1,174 patents on chemical methods of transforming crude petroleum or its products into new or better derivatives.

Increasing interest on the part of realistic industrial researchers into the possibilities for making industrial products out of agricultural materials — the farm chemurgic idea — is shown by the fact that technical articles dealing with cellulose and paper, involving cotton, wood, nuts and other cellulose sources, advanced 7 per cent in 1937. Those devoted to dyes and textile chemistry rose 11 per cent.

"One raw material may be used to get substances needed in the production of refined products from another raw material," said Dr. Crane's survey. "Sulphur is converted into sulphuric acid, and this acid is used not only in petroleum refining but in a great many other chemical operations with raw materials. The chemist handles raw materials roughly, but useful, refined products result."

The creation of manufacturing enterprises here to put into production the new utilizations of these materials constantly being uncovered may be expected to contribute largely to the industrialization of Texas, the council's report pointed out, provided all factors influencing plant location are favorable. Some demonstration of official state welcome to such potential industries — thus far not evident here — would greatly supplement the appeal to such enterprise which Texas already has by reason of her advantages of climate, transportation, and ability for producing many of the needed materials, both mineral and agricultural.

Location of this type of enterprise here would not only provide employment and payroll benefits of the highest type, the report

JIM WENT TO THE CELLAR

Last night Jim, our next-door neighbor, went to the cellar and looked over his last year's porch furniture. His appraising eye saw all the scratches and wear given the chairs last year by his three growing boys.

Jim decided that he needed some paint and a new brush; and planned to take that furniture out in the back yard next Saturday afternoon for the annual cleaning-up process.

Curious, but men all over the country are now thinking of paint, and seeds, and outdoor games. And—a new hat, a new suit and some new shirts.

And maybe the women don't feel the urge to buy new things!

And why shouldn't they? Why be content with old things when there is money for new? Mercantils are offering the latest goods of all sorts in the advertisements in this newspaper. Go to them as you would to old friends. You can rely upon their descriptions of every article.

light remark, to prove her non-chalance, but no words came to her lips. Her heart was beating in wild confusion, and she could feel the hot blood tingling her cheeks. All she wanted was to escape from the dining room before everybody saw through her discomfort.

"Care to come ashore with me?" Mr. Gregory suggested as they emerged on deck. "You could help me shop for perfumes."

"That would be lovely!" She forced an enthusiasm she did not feel into her voice.

The presumptuous conceit of him! Walking out on her, in a foreign gambling den, then asking her how she liked it! Laughing at her!

THROUGHOUT the day she did her best to be nice to Mr. Gregory. But it was an effort. Despite the man's courtesy and generosity, there was something vaguely repulsive about him. She could not explain it, not even to herself. They lunched on the Plaza roof, and seated across the table from him, she decided suddenly why she could not like him. It was his eyes. Behind the thick glasses, there was something furtive in their pale depths, something a little cruel. One looked at Mr. Gregory and felt peculiarly uneasy, and thought, against one's will, this man is treacherous.

But Joyce put the thought aside quickly. She had no cause to feel that way. It was ridiculous to analyze a person so critically.

"How about driving out to the beach at La Playa?" he suggested. "That would be fine. It's so sticky and hot in the city!" She forgot his eyes.

She was glad when the time came to return to the ship. Mr. Gregory had been charming, but his company was strangely depressing. He would never become the same happy companion that Dick had proved himself.

In the instant she checked the comparison. That was over now. All over.

It was 5:30 when they returned. The Empress was already steaming up, preparing for her six o'clock sailing. Joyce went below to tidy the damage the afternoon's swim had wrought to her hair.

"It's been a pleasant day," she remarked to her reflection in the mirror. But she saw the lie in her own eyes, and turned aside, her heart heavy with a dull depression.

She unlocked her suit-case and took out the handful of bills she had won at the roulette table.

This was Dick's money, by every right. If she returned it to him, she might as well do it with a good grace. It would be just as easy to hand it over with some sort of laugh over their good luck as it would be to stick out her chin with a pained expression of How-dare-you-sir-get-drunk-in-my-presence.

SHE tucked the huge wad of bills into her pocketbook and went up on deck, her heart lighter now with a sweet forgiveness.

Dr. Gray, standing alone at the rail, waved a cheerful hand.

"So you're all back and accounted for," he observed.

"Yes. Why?"

"Two passengers still A. W. O. L. on the roll-call. And since one is our young friend Hamilton, I thought you might have been the cause of it."

"No. Not me." Her voice fell a little flat.

"Seems as if we can never get the whole family together at sailing time," he complained. "This cruise business is a great deal like running a kindergarten."

"Here they come now!" Joyce exclaimed, looking toward the shore.

She saw them clearly, Dick and Isobel, running down the long dock. Occasionally Isobel would stumble, and Dick would stop to grab her hand and hurry her forward. Captain Boyer must have seen them too, for now there was a short imperative blast from the ship's whistle. The tender waited for them, and as soon as they stepped aboard, its motor was accelerated, and it started out toward the Empress.

Joyce and Dr. Gray watched it draw up alongside. Isobel was laughing and dancing about in gay ecstacy, and Joyce wondered grimly how many Planter's Punches she had consumed that afternoon.

Then suddenly, as Isobel turned and saw the passengers lined up at the ship's rail, she waved up in gallant salute. At the same time she reached out and took Dick's hand in hers.

"Hello, everybody!" she called, waving their hands together.

"We're engaged!"

Somewhere on the ship a voice called: "Good for you!" Instantly other voices joined in gay congratulations, and excited matrons gasped in eager appreciation of this romance culminated under their noses.

Joyce stood there, stunned by the announcement, and stared vacantly down at the muddy water.

Vandalism is nothing new. As early as 1873, one year after appointment of N. P. Langford as first park superintendent, it had become objectionable.

"The parapets of sinter of the 'Bee Hive,'" he wrote to the then secretary of the interior, "have been much defaced by visitors to the park." He even suggested leasing parts of the park so leases would give protection to safeguard their interests.

A description typical of today's vandals was written by Capt. William Ludlow of the U. S. army engineers more than 50 years ago.

"The only blemishes on this artistic handiwork," he reported, "have been occasioned by the rude hand of man. The ornamental work about the crater and pools of Faithful had been broken and defaced in the most prominent places by visitors and pebbles were inscribed in pencil with the names of the most undistinguished persons. Such practices should be stopped at once."

That was more than a half-century ago, and the practices haven't been stopped yet.

WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHMAN

WASHINGTON—Last month a first-class battleship for the United States Navy was estimated to cost about $70,000,000.

Today, according to confidential estimates of naval officers, the cost can be placed somewhere around $100,000,000.

The increase is due to the fact that the Navy Department and the administration now recommend 45,000-ton ships, having abandoned the old 35,000-ton treaty limit.

With costs rising in this and in other ways, little if anything is being done to see that the taxpayers get their money's worth from what originally was called an $800,000,000 naval expansion program, but more lately has been described as a $1,121,000,000 measure which is fairly sure to be much more expensive by the time shipbuilders have presented their bids.

Although many complaints have come from administration throats against prices and rates of profit in other industries, no one here seems to have a clear idea what the profit rate is on battleships. There have been some curious incidents, however, which indicate that certain critics may be correct when they say the legally fixed profit limit of 10 per cent doesn't mean anything under certain methods of accounting.

Last year private shipyards bid $49,870,000 and $47,829,000 on two battleships, while government navy yards bid $37,265,000 and $38,789,000. The average difference was $11,827,000. At the present time the navy yards are full, and private yards are sure to build the new ships.

Congressman Sauthoff thinks the difference between what private yards will charge and what navy yards would bid will be around $35,000,000 on the three proposed dreadnaughts, but admits that's only a guess.

Interstate Commerce Commission engineers once discovered that the 1929 cruisers averaged $1,429,000 apiece cheaper when produced by navy yards, although the government paid its workers $558,000 per cruiser for annual leaves and holidays, and wages were some 20 per cent higher than in private yards. Taxes and other expenses paid by private yards but not by navy yards were listed at about $156,000. The Senate Munitions Committee found that the navy-private yard difference on 1927 cruisers was $2,116,304 per cruiser.

Ambassador Joe Kennedy, until recently chairman of the Maritime Commission, charged that some fairly stiff bids had been made last year for construction of merchant marine vessels but that when the private shipyards saw the big naval contracts coming they boosted bids for merchant marine vessels by as much as 50 per cent.

Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri, who was questioning Kennedy, declared that there was a combine of private yards and that the government must buy from the combine or not at all.

CLEVELAND—With only one game of the International-American Hockey League's regular season remaining, William Oscar Cook had an entire team shot right out from under him.

But six casualties didn't deter fighting old Bill Cook, coach of the Cleveland Barons and the greatest right wing who ever played the glistening game.

He had entire companies of artillerymen shot right out from under him as the Third Division of the Canadian army swept from Ypres to the Somme.

The grizzled veteran of Vimy Ridge, Flanders, and Hill 70 picked up a stick himself, ever figured that his playing days were over. Four years had flown into darkness since he traded his skates for an artilleryman's uniform. He expected to spend the remainder of his life feedin' and oatin' and tilling the soil of mid-western Canada.

Cook was 41. He started to play hockey when he was 15. When he returned from the World War he figured that his playing days were over. Four years had flown into darkness since he traded his skates for an artilleryman's uniform. He expected to spend the remainder of his life feedin' and oatin' and tilling the soil of mid-western Canada.

BUT Cook came back to hockey to become an immortal with the New York Rangers.

Cook announced his retirement at the start of the campaign just closed. He signed to coach the Barons. His team, a bedraggled aggregation a year ago, won 34 of 50 games until struck by its epidemic of injuries.

When Center Oscar Hansen was carried off the ice with a wrencher knee early in the game in which Cleveland was eliminated, Cook had only nine men besides himself out of an original roster of 17.

Syracuse had 17 men—an extra line and extra defense men for the customary third shift.

Linesmen usually work only 20 minutes of a game in the speediest of sports, but Cook himself took his regular turn on two-line shifts, which kept his ancient underpinning on the surface during half of a savagely fought engagement that went into the fourth overtime period. He was a magnificent figure as the clubs battled until 1:15 in the morning. For 122 minutes or more than two hours, of actual play.

IT was a treat to watch him. No false moves, in position at all times, conserving his energy by going direct to his work. Feeding the puck and looking for an opening.

Any experienced player will tell you of the strain of returning to the back check after going down the ice when tired.

But, "if you can't come back, don't go down," is one of the first hockey axioms.

And Bill Cook never was the kind to break a standard rule.

He got back.

"It's too bad that it's all over," remarked the old campaigner. Bill Cook asserts that he really is finished now, but that is doubtful. He has an altogether too consuming zest for competition, whether that competition be waged on the battlefield or artificial ice.

Labor Will Aid Chinese Victims of The Jap Invasion

NEW YORK.—Four million members of the American Federation of Labor thus far are enlisted in the campaign being formulated by Labor's Committee for Civilian Relief in China, Matthew Woll, chairman of the committee, announced here today.

Mr. Woll, who announced initial organization of the committee several weeks ago, said that funds raised through activities sponsored by the committee would go for aid of the more than 30,000,000 Chinese civilians who have been victimized by the Japanese invasion of North China.

Serving with Mr. Woll on the national committee, of which William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, is honorary chairman, are more than 100 officers of national labor groups, he said.

Organization of state committees also is well underway, according to Mr. Woll, with twenty-five state chairmen actively engaged in forming local committees within their states. Cities where these units of the national committee have been formed represent a population of more than 40,000,000 people, he revealed.

Lead China's Embattled Women

In Sadler Show Knew Nationality But Not His Arithmetic

By United Press FORT WORTH—A defendant in federal district court here knew his nationality, but not how to add it up.

In answer to the question, "What nationality are you?" he replied: "A half-breed Indian."

"What were your father and mother?" "My mother was one-fourth Osage and my father one-fourth Osage."

Ben Pryor Enters Race for Constable

This issue of the Telegram announces the candidacy of Ben Pryor, for the office of Constable, precinct No. 1.

Ben has been in Eastland for the past 18 years, during which time he has engaged in the grocery and market business. He served as City Commissioner for two terms and has had varied experience as a special peace officer. He is now connected with the Eastland Dairy Products Co.

In a statement to the newspapers, Ben states that he feels that with his thorough knowledge of the official duties necessary to the trust of the office he seeks, backed by business and practical law enforcement experience, that he is fully qualified to ask the voters of this precinct for their influence and support at the coming primary election.

Officials in charge of the convention expect 300 persons interested in the subject to attend. Discussion will be centered on closer co-operation between states in probation, institutional care, parole supervision and rehabilitations of prisoners on parole or probation.

State members of the conference are Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kentucky and Missouri. In addition, Charles Haslop, Newark, O., general conference chairman, said that officials from other states have been invited.

L. F. Murphy, Wisconsin superintendent of parole investigation, is president of the conference.

Pin the Tail On the Donkey

When you were young, you played that timeless game. Blind-folded, you weaved your way to the painted donkey on the wall, and tried to pin his tail in approximately the right position. You hit his nose, his ear, his leg—or you missed completely, and your blind stab landed on the empty wall.

Do you still "pin the tail on the donkey" when you go shopping? Do you make your purchases "blindfolded," leaving your choice to chance? That is literally the "unenlightened" method. It wastes your time, your energy, your patience—and your money.

Don't buy haphazardly. Know beforehand what to buy, and where to buy it, and how much to pay for it. Read the newspaper advertisements! Scan the shopping columns; compare prices, compare values—decide upon your bargain. Then go directly to the store which advertises it; make your purchase—and be content!

No more hit-and-miss buying when you follow the advertisements. They lift the blindfold; they make it easier to find the best values.
