Nickel Is Added To Formula For Chemical Farming

HATTIESBURG, Miss.—F. C. Glenn, who started a chemical tank farm after he saw one in a newsreel, has found that he raised stronger plants by adding nickel to his food-formula. Last year, he left nickel out of the mixture and the plants developed such a pungent odor that bugs and insects left them alone. This year, a variety of caterpillar has infested his tomato beds, which no longer smell.

Glenn said he tried the nickel in the solution because, in combination with 16 other elements in the human body, it tended to promote stronger growth. He has found the same result from using it in his tank farm.

His tank farm so far is an experiment, and an expensive one at that. Straw and excelsior are used with the chemicals, and Glenn has found that the yield is about three times what it would be in the same amount of dirt farming. But there are the advantages of not having to depend on the weather, easy regulation of climatic conditions and control of insects. Tank farm crops might be marketed well ahead of field crops.

Eventually, Glenn believes, the cost of chemicals used in the solution will be reduced to the point where tank farmers can compete with dirt farmers.

Dentist Tells of His Early Trials

SPRINGVILLE, N. Y.—Farmers of this community received credit today for being the pioneer heroes in the realm of dental science and the development of "painless" tooth extraction.

The credit came from Dr. Ralph B. Waite, who as a young practicing dentist in 1891 began experiments with an idea on how to deaden the pain of tooth extraction with cocaine. From his experiments developed a laboratory here for the commercial preparation of novocaine. He has now "retired" to manage the plant.

Recalling his early experiments, Dr. Waite tells how, armed with a hypodermic needle, forceps and an ample supply of his cocaine solution, he would hitch up his horse and buggy and drive into the country looking for teeth to pull. When he saw a farmer working in a field, he would endeavor to talk him into having a tooth pulled.

"A good many of them thought I was a little off in my head," he says. "But some of them were brave men and permitted me to convince them that I wouldn't hurt them."

"With a plow beam or a rail fence for a dentist chair, I would prepare the patient for the extraction. I guess it hurt plenty sometimes."

"I remember particularly one chap who had a whopper of a bad tooth and let me get right at it. I guess he would have let a farm implement salesman do the job. And I wasn't afraid he would turn on me if my promise to yank the tooth without pain mis-fired."

"I administered the cocaine, gave the farmer instructions to open wide, hooked onto the tooth with the forceps and yanked. "Does it hurt?" I asked timidly.

"He felt his jaw, spat, and said 'Why, Doc, there ain't no feeling at all.'"

"That convinced me that I had the right formula at last." Returning to Springville, Dr. Waite immediately launched plans for manufacturing the anesthetic and within a few years was filling orders from many parts of the world.

REACTION ON O'DANIEL TALK NOW AWAITED

FORT WORTH, Aug. 12.—W. Lee O'Daniel today awaited reaction to his unprecedented endorsement of six runoff candidates for state offices, the men whom he wants to "help run Texas like a business."

The democratic nominee for governor asked voters last night to support:

Walter Woodul for attorney general; C. V. Terrell for railroad commissioner; Bacom Giles for land commissioner; Coke Stevenson for lieutenant governor; Richard Critz for associate justice of the supreme court, and Harry Graves for associate justice of the court of criminal appeals.

Woodul, present lieutenant governor, is opposing Gerald Mann; Giles is running against William McDonald; Terrell is running against Jerry Sadler and Stevenson against Pierce Brooks. Both men endorsed for the judiciary are appointees of Gov. Allred.

"You wanted a business administration," said O'Daniel in a 15-minute talk. "There will be much criticism, but this is the way we do things in business."

The effect of O'Daniel's support was viewed variously at Austin. Some said it assured the nomination of his "preferred" candidates. Others said the candidates he ignored might form a coalition against all O'Daniel candidates. Gov. Allred declined comment.

Doing Things Leisurely Becomes a Problem

It is a little bit late in the day to remark that the automobile is remaking American life. The change began a quarter of a century ago, and we are all used to it by now. But it is still going on, and every now and then some little thing is a forceful reminder of it.

Two minor news items pointed it up lately. One was a story announcing the discontinuance of the ferry boat service across the Detroit river, between Detroit and Windsor; the other, a story telling of the abandonment of service on a lengthy branch line of the New Haven Railroad in Massachusetts, with some 80 stations being closed and their towns left dependent on autos, busses, and trucks.

Now these things are of no importance to anybody except the people who will be inconvenienced by the change; there aren't many of these people, and they will soon get used to the new order, and probably there isn't much sense in dwelling on the matter.

But such things do stick in the craw a little, just the same. The auto has been an immeasurable convenience—but it has killed a lot of old conveniences, and by speeding up the pace of daily life it has made us more dependent on it than we might like to be.

You can get to any point in the United States nowadays by auto, and you will have excellent roads most of the way. That's all to the good. But suppose you don't happen to feel like driving; suppose you want to poke along by steamboat, or surrender yourself to the train? In many, many cases you are simply out of luck. You drive, or you don't go at all.

The passenger steamship lines on our inland waterways and our seacoasts are growing fewer, year by year; the branch railroad lines that led to watering places, summer resorts, and remote little cities are giving up the struggle, one by one. The triumph of the auto is getting more and more complete. As it does so, we get more and more dependent on the auto.

Which means that something leisurely is going out of life. We like speed, and we are getting it in steadily increasing quantities; the only trouble is that the slower pace is becoming impossible for us. We have to use speed whether we like it or not.

We'll live through it, of course, without much trouble. Certainly we wouldn't go back to the pre-automobile age, even if we could. But we might live a trifle more pleasantly if we could manage to save a little of the old way of doing things.

It isn't altogether a good thing to rely too much on any one of our machines. We are placing ourselves more and more at the mercy of automobile. It is a priceless servant—but it may turn out to be a rather exacting master.

Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush

PIGGLY WIGGLY WILL MARK ITS ANNIVERSARY

Marking its 20 years of leadership in the self-service grocery field Piggly Wiggly will this year hold its annual convention in the atmosphere of the exclusive Edgewater Park Hotel at Edgewater Park, Mississippi. The board across the lawn, dotted with beautiful shrubbery and spreading oak trees, surrounding the Hotel at this popular all year 'round resort will be peopled with hundreds of independent Piggly Wiggly merchants from August 14 to 17, the dates set for the Twentieth Anniversary Convention.

When President D. D. Williams, of the National Piggly Wiggly Operators Association, announced that Edgewater Park, Miss., had been chosen as the site of the 1938 Piggly Wiggly Convention, manufacturers all over the nation were quick to offer their cooperation to make the Piggly Wiggly Convention this year one of the finest ever held.

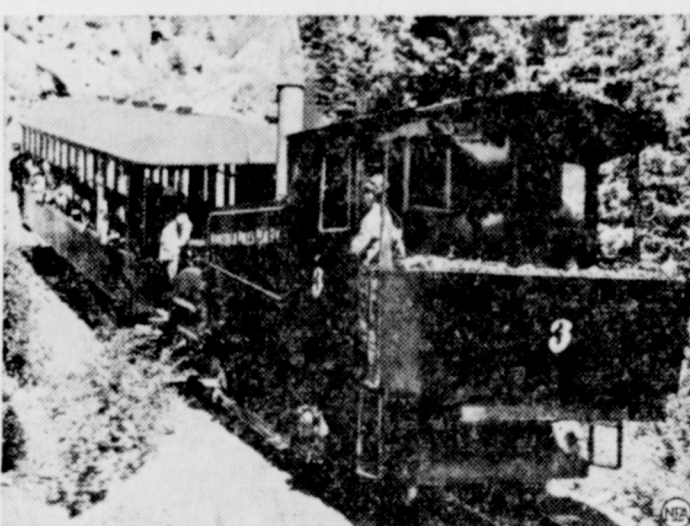

Piggly Wiggly was the first self-service system, coming into the field in 1918, and it is significant that the grocery chains today, some twenty years later, are turning frantically to self-service as the best way to serve their customers. And still, Piggly Wiggly leads the field... with "Scientific Merchandising" Piggly Wiggly, being the first in the self-service field, has, over the years, constantly studied itself for every improvement that might be made—and in these days has the finest self-service stores in the world, with independent, home-owned stores in 44 states.

Here with headquarters in Eastland, Pipkin Bros. Grady and Jess) are the owners and Operators of the Piggly Wiggly franchise in Eastland, Ranger, Breckenridge, Graham, Olney, Odessa and Monahans. Messrs. Pipkin Bros. have for many years been leading merchants of this section, and their home-owned, independent Piggly Wiggly has been a real leader in the grocery field.

Being a member of the great Piggly Wiggly organization, "All Over the World, Messrs. Pipkin Bros., have had and have all of the advantages of a chain store, and none of its disadvantages. Piggly Wiggly has had for twenty years the whole hearted support of manufacturers and jobbers—and so it is with Piggly Wiggly here in this section. This cooperation from manufacturers and jobbers, and the ability of Piggly Wiggly, buying in large quantities, to lower prices has enabled Pipkin Bros. to become one of our very outstanding merchants.

When Messrs. Pipkin Bros. meets with all the other Piggly Wiggly Operators from all parts of the world at Edgewater Park in August, these merchants will discuss and analyze the many business problems that confront grocery stores all over the world. These discussions and the consequent enlightenment will make each one of the members of Piggly Wiggly a better, smarter, broader merchant who can meet his own problems with a sureness

An American Institution Passes

Many a wide-eyed tourist has been toted up Pike's Peak on the famous cog railroad, with tilted steam locomotives, like that in the lower photo, furnishing the power. But streamlining has caught up with the Rockies and the old engines have given way to three very modernistic, 50-passenger cars, like that in top picture. One of the old-time engines, which have been used for 50 years, will be placed atop Cheyenne Mountain, facing the Peak, as a monument.

Oil Well Gun Taps Pay Near Surface

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.—Man's technique of tapping nature's valuable oil wells has been advanced by development of an electrical "gun" to break into formations which otherwise would be shut off.

General Electric Company scientists have perfected a movable "gun" capable of firing a .30-caliber bullet through 4 inches of steel and concrete, to tap oil formations on upper strata. Inventors explain that in drilling oil wells, sands may be encountered on the way down. Usually these deposits are blocked off by metal and concrete casings and the drilling is continued to more productive lower levels. After the lower level formations have been exhausted, the "gun" is brought into play to tap the smaller formations above. The gun, mounted on a special truck bearing 12,000 feet of cable, is about 10 feet long and has 10 or 15 barrels. It is lowered into the shaft, synchronized electrically to indicate the depth to within a few inches.

HAYWIRE HOUSE

BY EDWIN RUTT

COPYRIGHT, 1938 NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, The Harknesses arrive and then Kinks gets his second surprise. Sally tells him that she will probably marry Wilton Ames.

CHAPTER V

THE Harkness suitcases tumbled from Kinks' arms. For a moment he stared blankly at Sally. Then he shook his head. "Lady," he said, "you're all wet. You're not going to marry some bluish named Wilton."

Kinkoid Parker

"And just who are you to decide that?" "Me?" said Kinks. "Don't you know me? I'm the guy you are going to marry."

"So if this Wilton thinks enough of you to want to marry you, ought to be able to get his man to extend the time of the interest payment."

SALLY shook her head doubtfully. "I don't think he could. You don't know Spencer Ames. He's as hard as nails. And I—well, I think he's got some sort of interest in this place."

When Kinks came back from taking the Harkness bags to their rooms there was a concerned look on his face.

"Well, I don't know what we can do about it," said Sally. "The customer is always right, isn't he?"

come on, beautiful. You're driving me to the station."

"STATION? What on earth for?" "I'm going to New York," Kinks announced. "I'll check out of the place I live, get some things and be back bright and early tomorrow. I suppose we can both live under this roof. There seem to be plenty of chaperones."

"You would do something like that," wailed Sally. "You saddle me with two strangers and then leave me to cope with the situation."

Kinks did not quite make good his threat to get back to the Preston place bright and early the following day. True, he returned to instock on a morning train. But upon arriving he spent several hours in the village. His ambition as some form of advertisement which would announce the existence of the Pennington-Parker restorium and he finally ferreted out a man of many accomplishments who listed sign-painting among them.

Mr. Spencer Ames was a grizzled individual of 60-odd, with a thick body, large shoulders and a neck which bulged around his collar in a role of red flesh. But his obesity was mere camouflage for a mind as sharp as a whip. Spencer Ames never missed a trick.

HE was looking across his desk now, searching the countenance of his son, Wilton. "What's all this that's going on at the Preston place?" he inquired. Wilton shrugged. He was a thick-set young man who, as yet, had not taken on his father's corpulence. But he had the same cold eyes, colored a light blue. His hair was straight and brownish, parted carefully in the middle.

"Search me," he said. "I didn't know anything was."

"Then you don't keep your ears open," said his father sharply. "It's all over the village that the Pennington girl has taken in boarders."

Wilton sat up in his chair. "Boarders?" "Spencer Ames lit a cigar. "Here are the facts," he said. "That nephew of Mrs. Preston's, who inherited a half interest in her estate, finally showed up yesterday. He and the Pennington girl called on Kenworthy. Just what was said over there, I don't know. But by nightfall there were two other people at the Preston house and the Clipstack woman told Giles that they're going to board there. Who they are or where they came from, I haven't any idea. But... well, what do you make of it, Wilton?"

"Well," said Wilton, starting to his feet, "I'm going down there and find out about this."

"Not so fast," said Spencer. "I've one or two things to say to you, Wilton." He put the tips of his fingers together and gazed at his son. "As you know, we hold a mortgage on the Preston property."

"So what?" said Wilton inelegantly.

"So," said Mr. Ames, "I am very much interested in knowing whether or not this young man, whose name is Parker I believe, is in a position to continue the interest and amortization payments."

"And if he is or isn't?" "Mr. Ames set the cigar in an ash tray and spoke carefully. "If he is," he said, "I shall have to do a good deal more thinking about this matter than I've already done. But if he isn't... well, I shall be very much pleased, that's all."

"Listen," said Wilton, a little irritably, "I'm not getting this. What does the Preston place mean to you, anyway?"

His father's keen eyes shown with their cold light.

"Just this," he said. "A few weeks ago a representative of Farnsworth Hotels, Incorporated, of New York called on me. He was interested in possible sites for country hotels or inns. Well, I took him over to Preston's. And he thinks his firm will want to buy it, that's all."

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Staff Correspondent. WASHINGTON.—Even Jesse Jones of REC, locally somewhat notorious for tight-fistedness, has come out and criticized bankers—some of them, anyway—for excessive caution in the field of loans to industry.

Chairman Marriner Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board has been feeling the same way about it, only worse, which is why bank examination rules were slightly relaxed recently. Finally, there is Chairman William O. Douglas of Securities and Exchange Commission, who for months has been preaching against what he says is unnecessary restriction of credit and also urging a new regional industrial banking set-up to handle needs of relatively small local industries.

The bankers have argued back that nothing of the sort is true, usually asserting—as the Investment Bankers' Conference, Inc. did recently—that lack of confidence in the political and economic outlook, increase of taxes depriving corporations of incentive to expand and the attitude of the administration toward employers caused many companies to refuse to seek new capital. Others still recall the avarice with which banks called loans in the depression of 1928-33 and that this memory affects their psychology as to borrowing.

BUT now Douglas and SEC, in a phase of the monopoly investigation, are going to investigate the causes of credit restriction. And it's possible to reveal at least one item of source material as they begin—a study of a recent questionnaire by the Investment Bankers' Conference from which I. B. A. drew the conclusion that "there is not now and CALENDAR FRIDAY NIGHT Junior Choir of the Baptist church will meet for practice to-night at 8 o'clock in the church.

On Review Farewell Toinette Bertha Harding has never written such brilliant, scintillating mood as this gassy, rollicking vignette, which she terms "a footnote to history." In her treatment of an episode in Hapsburg-Bourbon life there is greatest respect for factual data. Most of the characters will be recognized as accurate portrayals of living persons who strutted and fretted, laughed and flirted, in the Age of the Rococo. The merry boulevards of the Swabian masquerade are both incredible and true. But the parts of minor characters had to be filled in, dialogue had to be written and expanded and brought to life. And so this is "historical romance," though not less historical for being romantic.

In holiday spirit, Farewell Toinette concerns itself with affairs leading to the marriage of Marie Antoinette and the French Dauphin in 1770. It opens with a priceless portrait of Marie Therese (woman enough to bear six children, and man enough to run an empire as it should be run) sitting at Schonbrunn to unite her young daughter to the French Dauphin. Marie Therese is depicted as a butterfly mind for her station with lessons in French, in dancing, in the "facts of life." The little fourteen-year-old Princess charms. She is betrothed, married by proxy, and escorted on her journey to France in the company of her brother, the co-emperor Joseph, and an Austrian cavalcade.

A glimpse of life at Versailles, the roistering old Louis XV, carefree of the coming deluge, makes a scene with the beautiful Marie Antoinette. She is surrounded by her children, her two daughters (whom he so outrageously nicknamed Rags and Greasy Cracklings, Cheap Intrigue against the lowborn dress, and Toinette's stolid husband-to-be keeps his futile gaily.

ROYAL BLUES WIN EASY IN DAIRY GAME

The Royal Blues smothered Street's Dairy Maids Thursday night in a landslide of runs after the Dairy Maids ran in their only two runs in the first inning. The game ended with the Blues holding the big end of the 13 to 2 count.

Edith Rosenquest, on the mound for the Blues, pitched them to an easy victory but she failed to show the power and control that she did against Kleiners in the District play off a week ago, probably because it wasn't a necessity to pitch air tight ball.

In the first inning it looked as if the Dairy Maids might make it hot when Rosenquest walked both Stuard and Tankersley, and then Drake, the pitcher, smacked one to score both Stuard and Tankersley, but this proved to be all that was in their power for from that time on the Blues had the game any way they wanted it.

In the last inning the Dairy Maids had the bases loaded but Williamson went down to retire the side and end the game. Batteries for Royal Blues—E. Rosenquest and Looney. Batteries for Streets—Drake and C. Williamson.

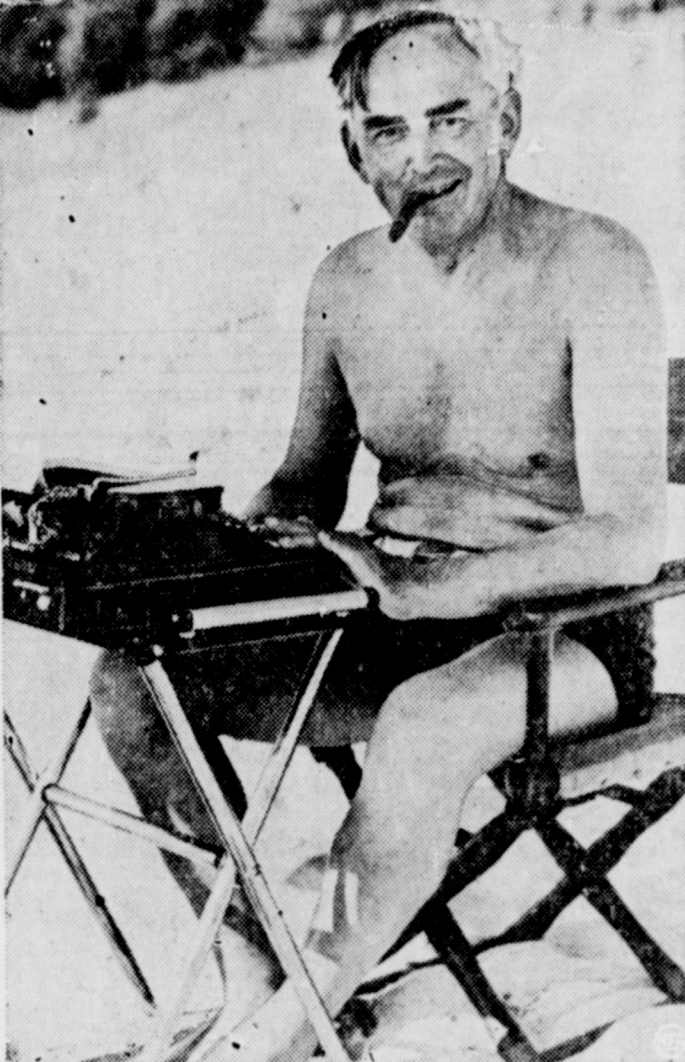

Double Wedding Brings a Lawsuit

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The principals of a public double wedding have brought a double lawsuit against the promoters of the double nuptials. The two newly-married couples—Arlene and Warren K. Stover and Beatrice and William Harris—charge that an automotive trade association and a theatre chain promised them furniture, a wedding trip and bridal clothes if they would be publicly married. The gifts were not forthcoming, they charged.

The double-promoters answered that the furniture never was promised, that the bridal outfits were to be worn only at the wedding and that they offered the couples airplane trips, but that they would not fly.

Vandenberg Working While He Plays

With third term talk in the air and the 1940 election already a live topic, an outstanding G. O. P. presidential hope, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, is a busy man these days. The usually well-dressed senator is pictured—cigar in mouth and clad only in bathing trunks—as he worked on matters political on the beach of his Lake Michigan summer home west of Grand Rapids.

When the fight went on and on, Director Richard Thorpe yelled over a portable microphone: "Sound the bell! Sound the bell!" But the roar of eight hundred extras in the replica of Madison Square Garden drowned him out completely. By blowing a whistle and dispatching a group of studio police to the ringside, Thorpe finally broke up the bout, with Peroni and Taylor both glad to take considerable more than the one-minute time-out before going into the eighth.

Robert Taylor Gets Beating That Was Not In the Script

Because the ringside bell failed to sound the end of the round, Robert Taylor took a two-minute beating from Patsy Peroni that the script didn't require.

The two were fighting the final bout of "The Crowd Roars," which comes to the Lyric Theatre Sunday for a two-day engagement. It was the seventh round and Taylor was taking the licking called for. He had received for leather flying from all angles, had picked himself up twice from the canvas, and had been knocked into the ropes again and again. The ringside timekeeper became so excited watching the bout that he forgot completely to attend to his job.
