An International Housing Problem Arises

If the world is really interested in ending the unrest of its peoples, it will do some hard, serious thinking about the job which the International Refugee Conference is tackling.

This conference faces the task of finding some sort of permanent homes for the millions of people who have been thrown out of their European homelands. These people have been dispossessed for all sorts of reasons—racial, religious, economic and political—and their presence as an undigested lump in the world's body politic is like the presence of a source of infection in the human body: it must be removed if the body is to regain good health.

Myron Taylor, the leading American delegate to the conference, pointed out the other day that the existence of these homeless millions is a major factor contributing to world unrest. It is hard to see how it could ever be anything else. You cannot have a stable world, satisfied to exist on its old basis, as long as so many people are completely uprooted. In sheer self-defense, the world has got to find a place for them.

So far, so good. A place must be found. But where?

Well, one of the things we Americans will have to think about is the proposal that a certain number of the refugees be settled in the United States. It has been pointed out, for instance, that during the next five years refugees will have to be "placed" at the rate of half a million a year, and that America and Great Britain might properly agree to absorb half of that number annually, between them. That would mean the annual settlement in this country of 125,000 foreigners.

Now the objections to any such proposal are easy to anticipate. We have some millions of people out of work, as it is; can we afford to take on huge new groups into the labor market? Our farmers, too, are growing more things than they can sell profitably; do we want thousands of immigrants to establish new farms each year, thereby adding to the country's agricultural production?

Those questions aren't easily answered. Yet in the long run the scheme might well be a very good one, from a strictly selfish viewpoint.

For one thing, it is at least possible that one reason for our protracted slump is the fact that our whole economic system is keyed to a steady growth in population, and that that growth has been slowing up of late. For another, refugees from European despotisms have in the past contributed largely to the upbuilding of this country; they might well do so again. Some able and talented people are looking for new homes now; it is hard to feel that the nation which gets them will be making a very great sacrifice.

In any case, the problem needs serious thought. World unrest won't end until this refugee problem is decently settled. We have a responsibility that we can't entirely evade.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX

Don't spoil an expensive dinner before you cook it. Study the modern techniques of home refrigeration. Learn these rules. They are based on cold logic.

Reserve the coldest spot for dairy products and raw meat. Speed milk and cream to the refrigerator, taking only enough time to wash off the outside of the bottles. Creamed dishes and desserts made of milk or cream or eggs, require the same special consideration.

Epidemics of food poisonings are usually directly traceable to improper refrigeration of foods of this group. Bacteria-infested custard mixtures of milk and egg, and raw and cooked meats, especially ground meats, are most often the sources of the trouble.

The rule that cold air goes down will help to locate the frigid zone in your refrigerator. But a thermometer or two set at different places will help to find the exact spot. Although sometimes the range is only two or three degrees, variations of six to eight degrees are not uncommon in household refrigerators.

Don't Overcrowd
This may make all the difference between sweet and sour cream for breakfast. Trays, large plates of paper sacks may divert these air currents. Overcrowding may cut them off and reduce the efficiency of the refrigerator. Dishes are better than paper sacks, as they allow freer passage for the cooling air stream. Ground meats should be handled with special care and used quickly, as there are multiple surfaces to invite attack, and the bacteria have been well seeded through the mass. It is unsafe to hold ready-to-

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Blackberries and cream, dry cereal, scrambled eggs with tomatoes, toast, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Beef cube bouillon in cups, mixed raw vegetable salad, cherries stuffed with cream cheese, nut bread, tea, milk.

DINNER: Radishes, cucumber sticks, chicken fricassee, large baking powder biscuits, buttered broccoli, deep dish peach pie, coffee, milk.

serve meats longer than two days, even at 40 to 45 degree temperatures. Fish presents a double problem, for both the refrigerator and food must be protected. A wrapping of wax paper is probably most satisfactory.

Keep Food Covered
Uncooked fish should never be held longer than a few hours. Cooked meats, left-over foods and cheese dishes all need protection from refrigerator dryness.

Foods of delicate flavor, such as milk, cream, butter, need protection from refrigerator odors. The original paper caps are best for milk bottles. Make sure all surfaces of the butter are closely covered by the original wrapping.

To keep the refrigerator fresh and sweet, wash out the interior of the cabinet with a weak solution of washing soda. This is easier to remove than soap, and for the purpose has better cleansing qualities. A mechanical refrigerator should be thoroughly cleansed with washing soda solution at defrosting time. An occasional scalding of the cube tray is advisable.

Sheriff Discounts Most of Crimes In Hamilton's Career

By United Press

DALLAS, Texas — Men who have known Floyd Hamilton most of his life and who are thoroughly acquainted with his background are skeptical of his participation in all the crimes in which he has been suspected.

"Floyd would have to be a centipede, or octuplets at least," laughed Dallas County Sheriff R. A. (Smoot) Schmid as he reviewed reports showing Hamilton and his alleged companion, Huron (Ted) Walters, hunted almost simultaneously in Texas, Louisiana, Missouri, Kentucky, Illinois, Arkansas, Indiana, Iowa—and maybe some other states.

Local authorities complained that the hunt for Hamilton, which has become widespread throughout the Midwest and Southwest, is fast giving him a kind of legendary infamy that makes checking of his activities more difficult. They pointed out that the same complications confronted them in the case of Floyd's younger brother, Raymond, and his companions, Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow, who were rampant several years ago.

"Floyd probably is guilty of just about one-third of the crimes, charged against him," estimated Special Investigator Bob Alcorn of the Dallas District attorney's office, who was one of the party who ambushed Barrow and Bonnie Parker on a lonely Louisiana road and shot them down. "I doubt that Floyd and Ted Walters were involved in the recent $34,000 payroll robbery at Woodriver, Ill., because that must have been an inside job."

"Floyd and Ted are not well enough acquainted with that territory, and it would be the wildest kind of coincidence for them to run into someone who would tip them off on 'the lay of the land.'"

"Besides, Floyd might hold up some little country bank, such as at Bradley, Ark., but he prefers to stick up outlying filling stations and drink stands where there's little chance of getting caught. He's no big timer."

"Just let there be a holdup or shooting," Alcorn predicted, "and the first thing that'll come to everybody's mind is Floyd Hamilton. Chances are, he'll be nowhere."

Hamilton and Walters escaped last April 25 from the Montague County, Texas, jail.

SERIAL STORY

HAYWIRE HOUSE

BY EDWIN RUTT

COPYRIGHT, 1938 NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, Wilton Ames convinced Sally to buy stock in her home. That night two men rushed suddenly into the restaurant after loud shooting outside.

CHAPTER VIII DAZED as they were Sally and Kinks perceived that the invading gentlemen had found refuge in the nick of time. Outside a staccato of revolver shots rent the night. A hail of bullets splattered against the door of Mrs. Preston's house. But the door was thick and solid, built to take it.

Bull Griffin

"We'll waive the amenities," said Sally. "Just what, Mr. Griffin, was the idea of turning my house into Fat Sumter?"

"Well, it's like dis, lady," explained Mr. Griffin ponderously. "We've been' tailed by a couple of da Little Cheese's boys. And all at once we get a flat tire. Well, if we hadn't of crashed in here, dey might of plugged us. See?"

"And who or what is the Little Cheese?" said Sally.

"I'll tell you wat da Little Cheese is," he said venomously. "Da Little Cheese is a dirty, low-down, double-crossin', two-timin', rat-faced, little skunk wud had oughta be took fer a ride, drilled fulla holes an' chucked in da Harlem river."

"He's a heel," translated Kinks, for Sally's benefit.

Bull Griffin beamed upon him approvingly. "Kid, you said something. Dat's just wat he is. Da Little Cheese is a big heel."

AT this point there was a slight interruption. The Harknesses, robed for the night, appeared on the staircase. Evidently they had been covering during the fireworks and only now deemed it safe to emerge. The face of Mr. Harkness peered doubtfully over his wife's shoulder. He looked like a terrified ferret.

Seeing that the cause of the commotion was two citizens in mufti and not the German army, Mrs. Harkness made bold to speak. "What is going on here?" she inquired, with asperity. "Who are these men?"

Kinks bowed slightly. "Mr. and Mrs. Harkness," he said, "let me introduce Mr. Bull Griffin and his—his traveling companion, Mr. Spaldini."

Bull Griffin glanced up the staircase. "Pleased to meetcha, lady," he said, briefly. "But beat it, will ya? We're havin' a powwow."

A whistle of admiration escaped Mr. Harkness. He had known Mrs. H. for 30 years. And during that time nothing in pants had ever worked up the nerve to address her like that.

Mrs. Harkness gasped and sought helplessly for suitable words. In the interim Sally put a question.

"And just what," she asked Bull Griffin, "are you planning to do next?"

Mr. Griffin grinned his incredible grin and waved his automatic gently. "Me an' me pal," he said, "are bunkin' here fer da night."

NEW YORK.—Barney Ross had not a leg under him when Henry Armstrong hammered him into retirement not long ago. Lou Ambers has two good legs, and simple multiplication shows us that the Herkimer Hurricane should give the St. Louis Dust Storm just twice as much trouble as Ross in their 15-round shindy at the Polo Grounds, Aug. 16. But I fear that this will not be sufficient to keep Armstrong from becoming the first fighter in history to hold three world titles at the same time. While scrappers who wade in like Armstrong have been Ambers' mutton in the past, the Negro youth appears to be too strong for the product of upper-New York State bootleg rings. Armstrong should catch the agile Ambers along about the seventh session, but I doubt that he'll knock him out. Like Ambers, Armstrong punches too rapidly to be devastating. He socked a weary Ross with everything but the ring posts without once upsetting him.

THEY'RE betting 8 to 5 that Ambers doesn't go the route, however. . . . 3 to 1 that Armstrong wins. Addicts are puzzled by their own sports pages today. For instance, they read of a half dozen world heavyweight wrestling champions. They have to spend beautiful Saturday afternoons mowing the lawn because the ball club owner insists he's being rained into another Sunday double-header. And now the New York commission ruling on the Ambers-Armstrong affair. Ambers is defending the lightweight leadership. Armstrong holds the welter and feather championships. But, although the boys are meeting at their natural weights, which is between 133 and 134 pounds each, the boxing board decided that Ambers would not be welter champion even though he poured ether on Armstrong. That's silly, of course, and Ambers will be recognized as lightweight and welterweight champion everywhere outside of New York if he comes down in front.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON — A prophet usually lands in the doghouse in his own country. That was exactly the fate of Dr. Stanley High, who was publicly booted from the White House inner circle when he wrote a magazine article predicting a liberal-conservative battle for control of the Democratic party. But High knew what he was writing about, and events he predicted have come to pass. His piece "Whose Party Is It?" appeared February 6, 1937. He had prepared it weeks before without knowing President Roosevelt would pop his Supreme Court plan on the eve of publication, and would depend on conservative politicians to put it over. Roosevelt had no foreknowledge of High's article. Although he wreaked his wrath on High, he really has said the same things High said—and publicly. The issue, High wrote, was whether the Democratic party was to become the liberal party in 1940. Old-line Democrats were ready to ease out the "economic salvationists" and their salvation plans and "restore the inoffensive Democracy with which they were familiar in the traditional era before Roosevelt." They were sure, he continued, they could have a party by 1940 in which Carter Glass, John Garner, Al Smith, Jim Reed, and John W. Davis could again feel at home. Sensational at the time, but stale news 18 months later, was High's prediction: "It seems probable that the engineer of this movement of restoration will be the Vice President, Mr. Garner. Hopes of the old-order Democrats are pinned on him. . . ."

Negroes Crowding Into Urban North

WASHINGTON. — The Negro population of the United States during the past quarter century has been on the march from the rural areas of the Southern states to the highly industrialized centers of the north, a report of the National Resources Committee discloses. The northward movement began sometime after 1910 and was sharply accelerated during the World War years with the heavy demand for industrial workers to replace those who had gone into military service. In 1910, the proportion of Negroes in the south to the total Negro population was not much smaller than it had been in 1860. By 1930, however, about one-fifth of all the negroes in the country were living in Northern states.

According to the report, the northward trek has been almost entirely to the large urban centers. In 1930, 88 per cent of all Negroes in the north were living in cities. This is in sharp contrast to conditions in the south. There, only 32 per cent of the Negroes live in urban centers. Contrary to the tendency of white citizens at various times to migrate to the far west in large numbers, few Negroes have moved to this area. In 1930, only one per cent of the entire Negro population lived in the far west. Prior to the outbreak of the Civil War, 92 per cent of all Negroes lived in the south. When the war was over and the Negroes had gained their independence, however, a movement to the newly-settled lands west of the Mississippi began. By 1910, the proportion of Negroes living in this area had increased to 20 per cent of the total population. A decline set in, however, and this area soon began to lose more Negroes than it gained. Numerically, the movement westward was not particularly important. At its peak in 1900 only 330,000 Negroes born east of the Mississippi River lived west of it. By 1930 this number had decreased to 320,000, showing that not enough Negroes were going west to replace those who died or returned east. During the war years when Negroes were moving north to work in the factories, a large-scale white movement to the farm lands of the west, spurred by the cry "Wheat will win the war," was in progress. This movement was a resurgence to an earlier trend from the Atlantic seaboard to the west, but it was a failure to most of those who participated in it. When the war ended, the demand for wheat slumped and the population of the western states declined in some cases.

PREVIEW OF A SEASON

By the calendar it's still Summer . . . but it's Autumn by the advertisements! They're starting now with exciting bulletins from the fashion front, news of special fur and furniture sales, and clever ideas for home decoration.

Turn the pages! So those are the hats we'll wear this Fall! Here's a chance to select your winter coat—of fur, or fur-trimmed—at a great saving. There are items of interest to September brides and grooms looking for unusual values in furnishings for the new home. Right alongside is a description of the latest in window hangings that would lure Mother from her preoccupation with the children's school wardrobes.

Look ahead to Autumn for a reason of thrilling activity . . . and look to your favorite newspaper's advertising columns for a foretaste of coming fashions in clothes, and housefurnishings and entertaining. Buy, when you're ready, from the merchants who, through their printed messages, have kept you posted, guided you to values, and saved you money. Read the advertisements . . . and be ready for Fall.

It's the little humble things that make a house a HOME

THOSE careless marks of his baby fingers . . . could any one buy them from you now? The knee-high smudges on the door! The pencil scratches on the wall that showed his growth from two to a little man of six! The nicked nursery bed where you two watched for hours one night until a sprawled, feverish form slipped into healing slumber!

Yes, a home is seasoned with smiles and tears, mellowed by memories and flavored with hopes. Each room has well-loved articles that have grown dearer with the years. And there are new things that you are working and planning for. It may be an occasional table for the living-room. New drapes for the breakfast nook. A summer rug. Porch and lawn furniture.

The advertisements in this newspaper bring you news of furnishings to freshen your home. Study them and save shopping steps and budget dollars. They will help you add to the gracious charm of your home . . . that little world which is your very own!
