U. S. CLAMPS DOWN ON SALE OF WAR PLANES

The United States clamped down a moral ban, Saturday, on the use of American airplanes to bomb civilians. While Great Britain struggled with the problem of bombing of neutral ships, Secretary of State Cordell Hull said this government had told American manufacturers it disapproved sale of planes which could be used in any area where civilians have been bombed. For all practical purposes that meant the State Department would like to stop sale of planes to Japan, as the result of bombings of Chinese cities, particularly Canton. Legally the department has no authority to stop such sales. Morally it probably can go far toward achieving its objective. Spain was not affected as all war shipments to that war are embargoed. At the same time Britain's problem of ending destruction of her ships in the war zone continued. It appeared aroused public opinion in England would force the cabinet to take firm action if Spanish rebel planes again raid British vessels. In Czechoslovakia several were injured Saturday in a clash between Czechs and Sudetan Germans at Warmdorf, on the eve of the final municipal elections.

Committeeman Everett Looney of Austin indicated he is concerned over whether others instigated Thompson's filing. An attempt to go to trial on a suit testing the validity of the gas utility regulation tax was advanced tentatively in district court as an outcome of the session of last week that threatened a special session and may affect the campaigns of William McCraw and Ernest Thompson. Third event is the opening of the campaign of W. Lee O'Daniel of Fort Worth at Waco Monday. Thompson and McCraw have both spoken at Waco and reports were O'Daniel supporters planned to make the opening an occasion to outnumber either the Thompson or McCraw rallies.

CLYDE TWISTER DEATH TOLL STANDS AT 12

CLYDE, Texas, June 11.—This tragic town of 700 persons tonight made plans for rebuilding and burying its dead after a tornado late Friday killed 12 persons and did property damage estimated at $200,000. Nearly 200 persons were injured and several in Abilene and Baird hospitals may die. Twenty-three homes were demolished, several others damaged and a new $50,000 brick high school building, the pride of the town, was made useless. The western part of the town was sheared away as the twister swooped in from the northwest and roared into toward the southeast. The tornado's path was a quarter of a mile wide and two miles long. The business district was spared. A Texas and Pacific freight train was pushed about like a toy wagon, 19 cars being overturned and trackage wrecked. Wheat was spread over the right-of-way and one transient was killed. Another box car smashed into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Graham, 100 yards away, killing both. Hero of the storm was three-year-old Jess Donald Rutledge, who saved the life of his six-month-old brother, Daryl. The boys rode with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jess Rutledge, from their farm home three miles northwest, seeking shelter in a neighbor's storm cellar. The tornado caught the car, killing both parents and Melvin Kniffen, farm youth riding with them. Both boys were hurled into a ditch filled with water a quarter of a mile away, and rescuers found Jess, hours later, holding the baby's head above water.

'Astonishingly Unbelievable' States Writer After Viewing Tornado Wreckage at Clyde

By STAFF WRITER. Astonishingly unbelievable. Such was the scene presented Saturday at Clyde, where the fury of a tornado was unleashed Friday night, killing, wounding, causing property damage and striking terror into the hearts of hundreds. The fury of the wind uplifted trees from their roots, splintered frame buildings, picked up cars from a Texas and Pacific freight train and dropped them in a field across the Bankhead highway to which the track is contiguous. Though Clyde travelers were requested to drive slowly along the main highway so that congestion would not occur. Traffic was heavy with many from out of the city arriving to inquire of friends and relatives and while others, curious, came to see the result of powers incalculable. Cars were in fields, veritable twisted masses of metal. Here and there were wheels of freight cars which had been lifted by the swirling inferno from the tracks. Someone inquired of a bent old man with gnarled hands if he knew of a friend escaping the fury. The old man, still dazed, did not know. "My 1929 Ford blew away. I can not find it yet," he muttered. Probably his only possession. His eyes were tired. He resumed what appeared fruitless searching—for his car. Still fortunate, however, was the man with the missing car. Families thanked God they escaped injury, even though every semblance of their possessions were cast in all directions by the tornado. The tornado, which struck in the west edge of the village, killed cows and horses. Stone houses were shattered as though they were glass which had been struck by a hammer. Boards pierced tops of houses. Stones were taken, as if by a workman, from homes. Men, women and children, with tear-soaked eyes, stared blankly at the ruins, saying nothing. What was there to say? Their friends and relatives had been killed in as much as a lightning flash. An old woman who had scorned the use of a storm cellar was glad her son had been insistent and carried her to the safety of one. Twenty-seven persons stood in one cellar in awesome silence as the wind spent its devastating fury. Some had seen the ominous signs of the tornado appear. They fled from what they thought would be the path of the storm, taking refuge in storm cellars or far away enough from the destruction. A wrecker crew of the T. & P. was soon on the scene in its attack (Continued on page two)

Sig Faircloth and B. S. Lemma have purchased a new public address system, which they will use on the tour throughout this part of the country soon in advertising the Ranger Roundup and Rodeo, which is to be staged in Ranger Friday and Saturday, June 24 and 25. The new address system will be used in announcing events at the four shows to be presented on the two days of the rodeo. No expense is being spared to make the rodeo one of the best ever seen in this part of the country, as 60 head of wild Brahma cattle have already been purchased for this event at a cost of $1,710, and more calves are to be purchased soon. The cattle already bought include 30 calves and 30 cows and steers. Murder Is Seldom a Labor of Love

Anyone whose interests run to ancient history and homicide can derive a little melancholy interest from the fact that Clara Phillips, the once-famous "hammer slayer" of sun-kissed California, has just obtained the permission of her state's parole board to get a divorce and remarry.

In case you never heard of her, Mrs. Phillips was the woman who sky-rocketed through the nation's newspaper headlines upwards of a decade ago after she took a hammer to her husband's secretary, one Alberta Meadows, and reduced the lady to a corpse.

Her flight, capture, trial and imprisonment were conducted according to the best American standards; which is to say that the whole business was turned into a field day for the sob-sisters, and it appeared presently that American womanhood and the sanctity of the home were on trial. But Mrs. Phillips was finally convicted, sent to prison and forgotten. Now, at liberty once more, she is going to get a divorce and remarry.

Which leads to an interesting bit of speculation.

Here was a lady who killed for love, as they say. That is, she was so profoundly, everlastingly and whole-souledly devoted to her husband that she rushed to arms and committed homicide as soon as another woman began to trifle with his affections. At her trial she was pictured as the victim of an emotion so high and holy that it drove her to take a human life.

Which was all very noble and uplifting—except that it develops, now, that this soul-sweeping devotion was something less than eternal, after all. For, having slain another woman for love of her husband, and having gone to prison for it, the lady now finds that she loves somebody else, and her husband goes into the discard.

Now the murder-for-love gag is one of the oldest gags that the modern criminal lawyers possess. Sometimes a woman is the beneficiary and sometimes it is a man, but the story is always the same: the poor, tormented defendant merits praise rather than blame, because a selfless affection forced her (or him) to go out and kill.

It might be a little less nauseating if the selfless affection really was the mainspring of the whole business. But it isn't. A love so great and overpowering that it caused one to take a human life and risk one's immortal soul would not be the kind of love that winds up in the divorce court. The thing just doesn't add up.

And, of course, the plain truth is that people don't kill for love. They kill for jealousy, or spite, or pettiness, or selfishness, or wounded vanity, which are quite different things; they kill because they are small-souled folk who just can't take the inevitable bumps which life hands out so impartially.

The case of this hammer-slayer points the moral. Remember it, the next time one of these murders-for-love comes along.

Its silvery wings forming an impressive pattern against the sky, the new $1,700,000 Douglas DC4 is shown above about to make a graceful landing at Clover Field, Santa Monica, after its successful hour-and-a-quarter trial flight over southern California. Largest commercial land plane in the world, the four-motored craft weighs 32½ tons, will carry 42 passengers, and has been under construction for two years. The tricycle landing gear, designed to permit smoother takeoffs and landings, is clearly shown in the photo.

Unbelievable—

tempt to right derailed cars. It appears that it would be impossible to return intact the cars which were lifted from the tracks and dropped into a nearby field.

Utility workers in their trucks were attempting to replace wires and light poles. Metropolitan newspapermen and reporters, as well as those from smaller cities, soon were on the scene to obtain their information and pictures for sympathetic readers.

National guardsmen, C. C. C. boys and state highway patrolmen, in scores, were there to give assistance to the sufferers, direct traffic and prevent plundering.

To a Baird man, whose name was not recorded, goes great credit. He saw the tornado approaching Clyde after leaving that city spread the alarm in Baird that help would probably be needed and notified Baird doctors.

Hearses and ambulances of the area were in the village.

A small dog crouched between debris, seemingly pinioned. He was released.

Had the Clyde school, a fine brick structure not many years in use, been occupied it would not have been unlikely that all would have been killed. Wreckers could not have done in days to the building what the violent tornado accomplished in seconds.

A school bus, housed in a garage, was blown away, twisted, several hundred yards from its location. The wheels were torn off. Even a tire was loosed by the wind from one of the wheels.

Two U. S. Army planes swooped upon Clyde. Perhaps the Tankersley pilots were taking pictures of the devastation.

Many families could not locate any of their furniture. And should they it would be in splinters. Upturned nails on boards showed how the wind had loosened planks during the storm.

Observers said the storm happened at about sundown.

One woman beamed when she discovered the picture of her late father among wreckage.

At one time in Clyde there was a water tower which labeled the city as "The California of Texas."

No California of Texas is Clyde today. Its people are sorrowing over the dead and wounded and loss of property.

LUNCHEON: Green peas, potted shrimps, braised sweetbreads and peas, hot apple tart, Stilton cheese, coffee.

DINNER: Roast chicken, giblet gravy, steamed baby lima beans, lettuce cucumber salad, meringue with fresh plum filling, fee, milk.

This was the menu on that impressive yet hospitable occasion: green pea soup, potted shrimp, braised sweetbreads and peas, hot apple tart, Stilton cheese, coffee.

As for the sweetbreads and peas, they were excellent, and the crisp tarts seemed to be made of hot apple sauce with cinnamon and good English pastry. The coffee? Well, I still think the English make the best tea in the world. After luncheon, my husband drove me to her home, to see four children. The oldest aged twelve, is a Viscount. A youthful Viscount was engagingly eating a slab of buttered bread and jam. To my question, he replied "Strawberry jam is best I like it awfully."

Living With The Rambler

BY WAYNE WALLACE

The depth to which some men will go to fathom. I refer to men who kidnap young children and then brutally murder them. They must be wretches devoid of humanity. And what a fate is theirs. Big strong, willing, helpless children, who they must be ranked with the scum of the earth. They are forced to conceive of any kind of woman doing such a thing, if sane. And yet they are not so stupid as to be light anyting points to the fact that the perpetrators of such deeds hardly can be crazy. It takes a considerable amount of planning and scheming to get away with a kidnapping of this nature. Brilliant men, every scientific invention at their disposal make of it a game that a crazy person could hardly be expected to cope with. Thus it is not even have the pleasure of their own side.

When the kidnaping and killing of a child first came into prominence the general public was of opinion that death of the victim was an accident. Yet since then so many of the young have been done away with that there is no longer any doubt in the mind of America but that such is intentional. It is a deliberate thought out plan by which a peacemaker hopes to do away with a part of the evidence.

Hot as the crime of kidnaping has become so frequently of late that a child's alarm must be felt by fathers and mothers of children. Has the same thing happen to their offspring, especially if they are endowed with a good share of this world's goods. Not to know whether a baby will be snatched from its bed in the still of night, to wonder if a small boy or girl will return home after school is sufficient cause of worry to any parent because no guarantee is given to anyone that their child might not be next.

Who are the men guilty of this crime? What is the motive of reason that prompts them to commit such atrocious deeds? Much of the crime perpetrated today is laid on the depression. When people have no money and nothing to eat they sometimes become desperate and do things that they otherwise would not do in order to obtain the necessities of life. Yet while they may try to steal something they do not become desperate enough to kill children. In fact it is usually the hungry mouths of their offspring that encourages them to buck the law. Another thought worthy of consideration is that no matter how desperate a man may become it is not necessary for such a one to kill babies in order to get something he needs. There are many other ways of breaking the law which should be simpler and far more profitable, for kidnaping is one crime that law-abiding citizens simply cannot put up with. So far the number who have been successful in this racket are few but the unnecessary grief they have caused is manifold.

Two reasons suggest themselves in helping to explain the pettish side of these men's nature: bombastic egotism and greed for easy money, easy in the sense they do not have to do manual labor to obtain it. As a rule most criminals have developed in themselves an inflated ego. It must be the predominate characteristic of the man outside the law who attempts to accomplish what so many others have failed to do. He will show the world that he is smarter than the others were. He will be the cleverest bandit in the country. Of course the motive is money. He will show up the law and at the same time be rewarded for it.

And the price of such selfishness. A frantic father and mother, unable to eat or sleep, see constantly before them a small face. Is he lonely and in tears? Is he hungry, are they torturing him? Is he in pain? Perhaps he is dead, his tiny body mangled. Anxious friends try to console them while an enraged populace endeavors to apprehend the fiend. And even

Courts, Not Juries Should Fix Verdicts A Judge Believes

HOUSTON. — District Judge Langston C. King, militant campaigner for prison reform and adult probation laws, believes that courts—not juries—should pass on final disposition of criminal cases other than capital offense.

Judge King is chairman of the committee on reform of criminal law and procedure of the Houston Bar Association. His recommendations may be submitted to the Texas Bar Association's convention here June 30 to July 3.

"I think the judges are in a better position to pass on the merits of the individual case," King said. "I think the matter of severance should be discretionary with the court, particularly if the defendant has been in trouble before."

"I want to suggest that all fraudulent acquisition of property come under the general heading of theft, instead of being classified as theft, theft by false pretext, theft by bailee, embezzlement and swindling."

"I think defendants in criminal cases less than capital should be given the right to waive a jury and be tried before the court. I believe some of our minor felonies should be changed to misdemeanors."

Judge King has been outspoken concerning the crowded conditions of Texas prisons, which he blamed on lack of clemency and lack of probation laws.

Seeks Compromise on Labor Measure

Waving his hand to emphasize his arguments, Senator Eibert D. Thomas, chairman of the Senate conferees considering the wage-hour bill, is pictured above as he sought to effect a satisfactory compromise. He conferred with the White House after the measure got caught in a cross-fire of controversy between northern and southern groups which threatened to result in a filibuster on the Senate floor.

Life Begins After 40 For a Writer

By United Press

ST. LOUIS.—Life began after 40 for Saul Raskin, artist, who won the Chicago Art Institute's Logan prize and whose works are included in permanent displays of more than 15 American museums.

"Until I was 43 I devoted myself to journalism and Jewish literature," he said. "But in 1921 I spent the summer in Palestine. What I saw there impressed me so much I began drawing and came back to America with about 100 sketches. They were well-received, and since that time I have devoted all my time to drawing."

Raskin still spends much of his time in Palestine and much of his work represents his impressions of the country. He is a member of the American Water Color society. He was awarded the Logan prize in 1930.

this is not all. Perhaps another mother discovers that her son has committed the crime as happened in a recent case. What anguish her heart must experience. What unspeakable pangs must she endure. If there are brothers and sisters then too must they share in the shame that follows. And last, and in this case least, is the tax payers money that must be used to capture the convict. And the criminal if he is successful in staying clear of the law has only bitter memories and blood money that he will be afraid to spend lest it lead to his detection.

Kidnaping is one crime that citizens of the United States should unrelentingly oppose, no matter what the cost. It is the duty and obligation of adults to see that the young of any generation have sufficient and adequate protection. Make the kidnaper feel that the name of society is against him at every turn. He has forfeited every right to the sympathy of humanity because he has desecrated his own humanity.

Yesterday: The climax comes when Terry defies his relatives at home, tells them she and Joe are going to be married. Joe is shocked! But it is too late.

CHAPTER XI

HE moistened his lips, rocking a little on the seat, looking at her. She watched his face, fascinated. He did not say anything.
"Joe!" she said suddenly.
"Let's get out of here!" he snapped, and got up abruptly.
She followed him outside the shop. She stood in uncertainty on the sidewalk beside him while he looked up the street and down the street, rocking a little, ominously rocking, his face unreadable.

Then he heard her make a queer sound, and he looked at her sharply. She was crying as she stood there, quietly, almost soundlessly crying. He did not make a move, staring at her. She did not look at him, but she slowly turned and walked off down the street, alone.

He had never seen her cry. She looked forlorn and alone to an intensity of loneliness such as he had never seen either. He knew what loneliness was. He knew what happiness was. He knew what it was to have happiness snatched from your grasp, wan-only, by heedless life.

Loneliness was creeping over him as he stood there and she drew farther and farther away, not looking back. Once he would not have recognized it; now he knew it all too well, clammy and cold. The anger drained out of him, down through his very feet into the insensate earth.

He set out after her at a quick pace.

When he caught up with her and fell into stride he gripped her hand hard. "Cut it!" he told her.
"Stop that."

Obediently, abruptly, the sobbing ceased. She walked by his side, very still. He went on, holding the hand hard.

"All right," she said. "I think you're nuts and I'm no better.
I'll take it on."

The small hand in his gave a convulsive start and gripped him hard in return. "You mean you'll marry me?"

"I think we're out of our heads.
So we might as well get married."

And there was a sudden quivering breathless radiance in the dusk beside him.
"It was late when they arrived at her home. All was dark and quiet, and they entered the front room stealthily. They listened, and there was no sound: Joe broodingly, Terry inscrutably, Terry lighted the lamp, and then she extinguished the lamp. They sat together in the stillness, listening. Terry put out a hand in the darkness. And then abruptly, brutally and darkly and hungrily, they turned to one another and swept into each other's arms.
Joe was drunk with sensation and Terry with ecstasy, and they listened no longer, for there was a roaring as of a mighty and om-nific surf on an endless ocean, and it drowned out all the world. . . .
They were married in the chapel of the municipal building downtown by the city clerk at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Now do not think for a minute that disposes of Terry and Joe and my story about love. Marriage is an incident in life, and life goes on. It goes weaving and winding, deviously hiding and wantonily flaunting its always in-scrutable purpose, undaunted even by death. Terrible and beautiful it goes, spilling all plans and provisions, constant to one thing only: the certainty of change. The very magnificence of life is its completely sublime disdain.

There was something wanton and disdainful about this marriage of Joe and Terry. No inevitability was in it at all, but much chance and fortuity. Precarious indeed is any marriage, but here was a marriage with no foreordained compulsion about it, with no fond benediction of families and friends, with nothing, practically, but that small and intense persistence of Terry Mal-low. And she was young, knowing neither life nor the world sufficiently, where Joe knew both all too well.

It was a marriage sustained only by that small and intense persistence, and by it to stand or fall.

THEY told no one about their intentions when they met early and went downtown together.
They go, busy immediately afterward and selected a small flat, a four-room box flat three stories up on a side street in their own neighborhood. Joe drew his money from the bank and let Terry select a bed, a table, utensils, furnishings. They bought with frugal care, having none too much money for their wholesale needs, and they bought right in the neighborhood, so that the things might be delivered and installed that very day. Long pas-any proper meal time Terry prepared their first meal together that night in their own home.

Terry went about all that day in a kind of calm, bated entrance, full of wonder and joy and yet unquestioningly sure of herself. She had no experience to guide her, and was at no time daunted by the demands of the day. It was as if she selected ordered, instructed things and people out of unwavering instinct Terry possessed a rare directness of mind: she knew always without confusion what she most wanted, and her energies went wholly and solely into the acquiring of it.

"I feel good," she told Joe spontaneously in the midst of the confusion that was their home. She smiled. "So good! Feel it? Is here where my heart is? Do you feel the same thing I do?"

He felt the sturdy, steady beating of her heart, and he smiled.
He looked at her a long moment while sober thought played in the pupils of his brown eyes, and then he said with a shade of huskiness in the tone, a touch of difficulty, "Baby . . . I guess I do love you, baby!"

It was the first time.
She made a quick sound without words, saying something inexpressible. That was all Joe had lacking, the last thing needed . . . and life was in fullest flower it flowered for Terry. But for Joe there had once before been a time like that, and then there was a blight, and no second blooming came. There was a survival and a continuity, similar to that of the arid uprooted tumbled drifting on its vague and in-scrutable journey before the winds that prevail, but there was no flower, no color, no perfume of life.

He had committed his love to this small one whom it made so happy. He lied, knowing so. He accepted this, deliberately. Last night late, after he had gone home and to bed, there was a long hour when sleep would not come, but instead a relentless parade of phantoms out of the past. Even then, on such a night, against his will and despite his will, he had kept a bleak rendezvous with a figure poignant and accusing and mute, come in final farewell.

Health Department Continues Drive On Dirty Restrooms

AUSTIN, Texas.—"The State Health Department's three-month campaign against filthy restrooms over the state has been marked by splendid cooperation on the retail business establishments involved, the public at large, and the press. Our department is so firmly convinced that filthy rest rooms are a major health hazard that the department's sanitary inspectors are seeking rest rooms as carefully as they do other violations of sanitary regulations," states Dr.
W. W. Cox, State Health Officer.
"We have served notice on all retail establishments in Texas that they must clean up their restrooms and continue to keep them clean under penalty of violating a State Food and Drug Law, Article 695, which carries a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars.

"Our sanitary inspectors have been notified to assess this fine whenever they find rest rooms maintained without adequate sanitation. The public and business establishments have been adequately warned. Any subsequent violations will be dealt with through legal channels.

"We want the public to cooperate with us in this campaign.
Such filthy conditions as heretofore have been prevalent over the state will never again be tolerated. When the public finds a rest room that is unsanitary, whether it be in a cafe, tavern, filling station, retail establishment or business station, they will be doing their community a favor if they transmit this information directly to the State Health Department, Austin, so that necessary steps can be taken.

"Disease breeds in unsanitary rest rooms and is spread from one person to another, indiscrimi-nately, under such conditions. Facilities should be available for washing the hands; toilets must be sanitary and kept that way.

The Suffering Servant

Text: Mark 15:22-27 and 29-39

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY Editor of Advance

ISAAC WATTS' great hymn, which the late Matthew Arnold called the greatest in the English language, begins:

When I survey the wondrous cross,
On which the Prince of glory died, My richest gain I count but loss, And pour contempt on all my pride.

Glory and tragedy are in the description of the crucifixion in that great hymn, and that is as it should be. The dying of Jesus on the cross is at once the most tragic and the most momentous of all events in history. But here, in this lesson, it is a distinctly human aspect of that event that is presented.

THE title of our lesson is "The Suffering Servant." This is essentially what Jesus was in His life and in His death—the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, manifesting in all that He did, and in all that man did to Him, the divine compassion and love that steps at nothing in its effort to redeem and save.

The human aspect of Christ's sufferings is further emphasized in the men who suffered with Him, a malefactor on either side. They were human, too. They felt the keen terror of the nails. But one is not so impressed with their situation or their suffering, for they were dying as many others have died under the operations of crude and raw justice, but a form of justice none the less.

But it was and still is the Christ on the cross who is the central figure, the suffering Saviour, enduring all that He might fulfill the loving purposes of God, dying in a very real sense that men might live.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, May 00.—If saying that Wearin can only be beaten, if at all, by the large wad of money which they assert is being spent by conservative groups to save Gillette. Persons outside Iowa are entitled to believe either, neither or both of these tales. The suddenness with which Gillette and Wearin have become nationally conspicuous figures accentuates the fact that neither had been a celebrity in Congress.

Gillette is 59 years old, a War veteran, lawyer, former congressman and well-to-do farmer. Wearin is 35 years old, a former state legislator, editor and writer on agricultural and historical subjects and six years a congressman. Wearin has consistently supported the administration and frequently has helped lead the House progressive bloc in some of its battles. Gillette opposed Roosevelt in the Supreme Court fight and voted against the administration wage-hour bill.

There is no evidence that the New Dealers went after Gillette's scalp solely because he opposed Roosevelt on the court bill, although you can't disprove that. Wearin, promoting himself as a candidate on his own at first, was a logical beneficiary—and Gillette a logical victim—of the strategy of the administration group led by Harry Hopkins and Secretary Ickes which seeks to enter New Deal Democrats against Republican nominees in every possible contest this fall. Even National Chairman Jim Farley, despite directly contrary reports, has been working for Wearin. Roosevelt's unspoken approval is obvious.

Albion is being prepared in advance, however. Opponents of the administration will contend, if Gillette is defeated, that he was swamped by political misuse of WPA and other federal machinery. And New Dealers already are Eddy: "Whatever inspires with wisdom, Truth, or Love—be it song, sermon, or Science—blesses the human family with crumbs of comfort from Christ's table, feeding the hungry and giving living waters to the thirsty" (page 234).

Marriage Announced Mr. and Mrs. Joe Laurent of Eastland announce the marriage of their son, Frank, who resides in Austin, to Miss Phyllis Kathryn Sims of San Angelo. The ceremony was performed in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Truman H. Sims, 207 North Jefferson, San Angelo, with Father Bertin Herrington of the Sacred Heart Church officiating.

The bride wore a frock of rose beige marquisette with accessories in parasol. Her corsage was of miniature white carnations. Miss Helen Lee was bridesmaid, and wore powder blue chiffon with roseberry accessories. Nick Woodward of Austin served as best man.

Mrs. Harvey Cosper of San Angelo played "I Love You Truly," and "Love's Old Sweet Song" as pre-nuptial music and "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin as a professional. Lizst's "Love Dream" was selected for the ceremony and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" for the recessional.

An informal reception followed the ceremony, with punch served with the wedding cake. Daisies predominated in decorations for the home, and baskets of daisies alternated with white tapers in brass candelabra against the background of vines and fern before which the ceremony was read. Immediately after the reception, the couple left for a week's trip to Galveston. The bride wore a blue print with navy accessories for traveling.

Mrs. Laurent attended Baylor University, Texas State College for Women, and the University of Texas. Kappa Alpha Theta was her sorority. Book On Review

"R. F. D." by Charles Allen Smart After some years spent in and near New York as an editor, teacher, and novelist, Charles Allen Smart inherited a farm in Southern Ohio. With considerable misgivings about his prospects as a farmer, he moved out and took charge. A few months later he married a girl from Massachusetts. This book is the story of the first three years of their adventure, which is both contemporary and dateless, and altogether American.

In these three years the Smarts have learned a great deal about farming, perhaps even more about America, and a few fundamentals about life in general. They have bred sheep and cattle, found out what it means to keep them alive in extremes of cold and heat, sold them at auctions. They have seen crops burned up in a major drought and washed out in a major flood. As "apprentice farmers" from the East, they have had interesting and significant relations with neighbors, townfolk, the co-operatives, the government. They have kept their own minds and bodies alive, integrated close to realities. They know what it costs to farm, in money, in work, in discomfort, in isolation from earlier surroundings; and they know what it pays, both in money and in deep satisfaction. Above all, they have had an enormous amount of fun.

'The Nutmeg Tree' by Margery Sharp

This is chiefly the story of Julia, kindhearted, incautious and impulsive, who is just barely old enough to have a grown daughter, Susan, the daughter, has been brought up by her grandparents who, according to their lights, are eminently better preceptors of youth than Julia. Susan has grown up to be a prig but for all that, a very lovely prig. Julia has by no means abandoned her daughter. When a suitor appears on Susan's horizon, she promptly sends for Julia to come and tell her what to do. It is typical of Julia that she become involved with five trapeze artists on the way. Equally typical it is for her to grow bored in the small town and plan an excursion to Aix to refill her empty purse at the casino. To find the casino closed, and to get the money for the trip home by a bit of modified larceny, which includes entering the front door of a lingerie shop and leaving by the back door, is for Julia simply a situation well met.

This is not a synopsis of the story but simply two incidents in a novel that ripples persuasively along, charming, witty and sometimes downright funny.

'Pigmy Rebellion' Of Cedillo Called Joke by Mexicans

MEXICO CITY—Gen. Saturnino Cedillo's revolt has been officially branded by the Mexican government as a "pigmy rebellion" and a "joke."

The government's attitude was expressed by "The Mexican Courier," an official publication, which said of Cedillo:

"He has always been a nonentity. He is an old soldier but he has never been an outstanding figure by reason of feat of arms, by strategy, civic or personal courage. He was an assistant of the celebrated warrior, Pancho Villa, and he fought in the mountains of San Luis Potosi and Durango, without having won a battle.

"Cedillo had a brother named Magdaleno who earned some prestige as a soldier. He was a stronger man than Saturnino and obtained control over a certain region in which he fought. He died and his brother took over the command.

"He became a large landowner, in direct opposition to the constitution and the agrarian ideals of the Revolution. At the same time he entered into agreements with other landowners and a farce of the distribution of the peasants by giving barren mountain land which of course could not cultivate.

"In order to consolidate military strength, he armed thousands of Indians, to give him better lands or employment on his ranches. Thus, in 1920 he was able to present an army of military strength as recent events have shown like a pack of cards in the first onslaught of the military power country.

"It is not surprising his pigmy rebellion was called more of a joke than else by the people of Mexico."
