Romantics' Reassurance From the Sky

Things can never get too mechanized and routinized for adventure in this modern world.

For a time it looked as if that was just what had happened in the realm of aviation.

After the soul-stirring flights of the Lindbergh era, aviation went ultra-scientific. It got out of the "stunt" period and buckled down to the unsensational job of providing safe, unspicacious service. Its heroes were not daring young geniuses, any more, but carefully trained crews of technicians, who worked together like well-ordered machines. It gave a whole lot more return in the way of transportation—but the romance went out of it, seemingly for good.

And then two very startling things happened in close succession.

First, Howard Hughes and his buddies went streaking around the world in a flight which passed all the way through the mechanized, team-spirit business and came out on the other side, in the realm of romance. The thing was so perfectly organized, so surpassingly well integrated and planned, that it became what everyone had thought no flight of that kind could ever be—thrilling and uplifting. Right on the heels of that came a throwback to the old, devil-may-care barnstorming era—the Atlantic flight of young Douglas Corrigan, who blithely flew the world's worst sea in a rickety crate that was obsolete years ago. Corrigan simply set the clock back, temporarily, and gave the world a last glimpse of aviation as it used to be, when a flyer was an adventurer first and a technician, if at all, afterward, and when the hallmark of distinction was a willingness to risk one's life casually against any sort of odds that might present themselves.

So these two flights brought back that unpredictable and indefinable quality called romance to modern aviation. And the way in which they did it is worth at least a passing thought.

They showed, in the first place, that a mechanized, modernized world need not be monotonous after all. If romance is a momentary transcending of the ordinary limits of workaday life—and that's about as good a definition as any—then the Hughes flight simply showed that when man really perfects the intricate technical details of modern life, modern life is romantic and not humdrum.

And, secondly, there was a reminder that the human spirit is irrepressible and dauntless; and it will not be confined by any formulas, but will break loose and challenge fate in its own way every now and then. And there is always hope for a world in which that is true.

They were fine things, those two flights. They make this complicated world look like a more promising place to live in.

SERIAL STORY MYSTERY AT THE LAZY R BY CLARKE NEWLON

CAST OF CHARACTERS
NIKKI JEROME, heroine; blond, popular, is engaged to six-foot, black-haired STEVE MALLOREY, hero; who is accompanying her on a trip to Nikki's aunt and uncle on a Wyoming dude ranch. Nikki's father, PETER JEROME, is a wealthy New York jewel merchant.

CHAPTER VII
THEY took the trail just as the sun broke in dawn and sent its first warming rays into the mists that formed a soft, white cloak over the hills toward which they rode in pairs, conversing and adjusting their bodies to the gaits of the fast-walking animals.

Nikki rode with Steve and realized, in the grandeur of the breaking dawn, that she loved this man very much and that she was being distinctly unfair to him. Anything might happen on this trip, she thought, and decided to tell Steve about Bancroft and the money at the first opportunity. In the meantime she rode beside him in silence and told him with her eyes that she loved him greatly.

Long before they stopped to eat the sandwiches that had been prepared and to boil coffee over a tiny fire, the trail started upward and became more and more rocky. Once they crossed a dry river bed that was a tremendous trail of boulders walled in on either side by cliffs along which the seams and formations traced irregular patterns.

The trip appeared to be a hardship for Sarto alone. He was distinctly not an outdoor man and nature to him meant taking a taxi through Central Park—when it was the shortest route to his destination. He clung to his saddle as the trail narrowed and hunched disconsolately in his seat, scowling sullenly. The pack trip was obviously not of his choosing.

THE trail wound along the side of a cliff, tortuous and rocky.

On the inside rose the sheer walls of stone, washed clean by centuries of mountain storms, marked with the oddly colored lines of capricious reds and blacks against the brown. On the other side, along most of the slender path, the mountain sloped off steeply but not dangerously. A daring horseman could have ridden down the side had he chosen. It was dotted with clumps of low-growing bushes and trees that clustered courageously in the soil around the boulders.

But in spots the violent torrents of the spring thaws had burst over the trail and rushed down the mountain side in foaming white cascades, stripping the slope of its bushes, stunted trees, and boulders, transforming the decline into a sudden, breath-taking drop that might be 50 or might be 200 feet straight down before the break ended in a rough bed of granite.

They had been on that upward trail several hours when it happened. Nikki was watching her horse stepping carefully at the heels of Rance's mount. Behind her Uncle Jim hummed a monotonous little song and paid small attention to a trail that was long familiar to him.

Behind her uncle came Fiske, quiet and observant, and back of him rode the glowering Sarto. They were passing one of the sections of the trail narrowed by the snow-laden torrents and the path hung precipitously over awesome nothingness on the right. There wasn't over 20 feet of danger and then the trail widened and fell off into gradual sloping ground again.

NIKKI heard a sudden frightened yell and turned to see Sarto's horse plunging forward, hugging the inner wall. Sarto clung to the pommel, his head ducked forward into the steed's mane.

The quick lunge carried Sarto's horse crowding between the wall and the mare ridden by Fiske.

side by side. He could see just ahead the safety of the sloping mountain with its dotting bushes and small trees.

That safety lay a bare seven feet ahead of Fiske.

The final plunge of Sarto's horse thrust Fiske's mare far out on the edge. One hind foot slipped over and pawed into the thin air. She fought and lost the battle for balance.

Then Steve moved. With the sudden skill of years of polo playing, he turned the horse to the outside of the trail. He leaned forward and brought his flat hand down brutally hard on his mount's rump.

Uncle Jim was off his horse by that time with a rope in his hand. He tossed the noose down to Steve, snubbed the other end around his saddle horn.

"Slip it over your arms," he shouted, and Steve managed to find footing long enough to get the noose over his head and shoulders. Rance and Uncle Jim hauled him back up.

Sarto still sat his horse sullenly. Fiske was leaning against the wall. He came over to give Steve the final helping hand back up on the trail.

WASHINGTON

WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The candidates in Oklahoma who tried hardest to out-promise the others were licked. Namely Governor Smith, for senator, and Alfalfa Bill Murray, for governor.

Mr. Roosevelt's friend, Senator Elmer Thomas, who won Democratic renomination after the President patted him on the back, is no sound, cautious conservative himself. Elmer always is wanting to do something more about silver, printing press money and inflation.

In fact, there were those who felt that poor Woody Heckaday, who tried to spring on the President with a prosperity plan based on shining shoes and buying wheat to make bread at a profit, belonged somewhere on a ticket which featured Gomer, Alfalfa Hill, Elmer and an astonishing assortment of Mae Wests, Daniel Boone's, Brigham Youngs, Huey Longs, Oliver Cromwells and Patrick Henrys.

But by all odds the most spectacular recovery proposal from Oklahoma is made by Oscar Ameringer, lovable old Socialist editor of the American Guardian at Oklahoma City. Oscar wasn't running for anything, but it's hard to see why someone didn't pick up his program.

He proposes that the Treasury immediately print $20,000,000,000 in $1, $10 and $100 bills and broadcast them from airplanes, guaranteeing that:

"I. Every mother's son and father's daughter employed and unemployed will drop whatever he or she has on hand and start hunting bills.

"II. As fast as the bills are found the stores are emptied.

"III. Frantic orders for more goods open factories, creating demand for labor.

"IV. No one being willing to work for less money than he hopes to find (remember there may be a $100 bill in the next yard or cow pasture), employers are compelled to raise wages sky high, adding earned purchasing power to found purchasing power.

"V. All farmers out on dollar hunt, 100 per cent crop limitation will send farm prices sky high.

"VI. Unprecedented sales, prices and profits swell Federal Treasury, balance budget and retire bills recovered.

"VII. Exercise in the open air promotes health and longevity."

Oscar admits this may be "goofy," but insists it's no goofier than a system which doesn't let people buy the food and clothing they produce and keeps them from producing more.

SENATOR William H. King of Utah, who has an almost unbroken record of always having been again... everything—whether in the Hoover or Roosevelt administration—now finds himself in a rather curious spot.

He is a member of the monopoly investigation committee. He is opposed to monopoly, but he is also opposed to practically any proposal to curb monopoly. First one impulse gets the better of him and then the other.

Thus, recently, Senator King was saying privately that the less change made in laws governing business, the better it would be.

But a day or two later he wrote to Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, demanding that patent monopolies be included in the committee's investigation and proposing a bill to prevent companies from locking up patents for long periods without using them.

SISTER MARY'S KITCHEN

BY MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX
NEA Service Staff Writer

COUNTRY eating, especially the old-fashioned kind, has an appeal that never grows tiresome. In glancing through "The Country Cook Book" recently done by Cora, Rose and Bob Brown, these two recipes seemed too good to keep to myself.

Old-Fashioned Chicken Pot Pie

Start jointed chicken cooking in hot, not boiling, water. Be sure to have enough so the liquid will just cover the chicken when it is nearly done. Season, while cooking, with salt, pepper and 2 to 3 sprigs of fresh herbs from the garden.

Parboil 1 small onion for each person and peel potatoes of equal size. Forty minutes before chicken is done add onions and potatoes to the pot, slipping them under the chicken a few at a time so that boiling does not cease.

When all is thoroughly heated, and steadily boiling again, lay dumpling mixture, a heaping tablespoon at a time on top of chicken, cover very tight and do not lift cover for 25 or 30 minutes. Or cook your dumplings separately in a steamer over rapidly boiling water.

Sour Milk Dumplings

One pint clabbered milk, 1-2 teaspoon soda, 2 eggs well beaten, 1 scant teaspoon salt, 1-4 teaspoon

Tomorrow's Menu

BREAKFAST: Orange and currant juice, green corn griddle cakes, maple syrup, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Salmon, celery and green pepper salad, buttered wholewheat toast, sponge cake, blackberries and cream, tea, milk.

DINNER: Old-fashioned chicken pot pie, sour milk dumplings, mashed potatoes, green peas, lettuce and tomato salad, green apple pie, cheese, coffee, milk.

white pepper, flour. Stir soda into milk, add eggs, then sufficient seasoned flour to make a dough stiff enough to be stirred and taken out by the heaping tablespoon to drop in the pot.

When you think dumplings are done, tilt up the side of pot cover, quickly take one out and open it to make sure it is cooked all the way through. Have 1 to 2 tablespoons flour mixed smooth with milk.

Take 1 p chicken and dumplings on a platter, potatoes in a separate dish. Add thickening through a strainer to the pot, stir and boil 5 minutes. Put all on the table as quickly as possible.

Simple Method of Increasing Quail Is Worked Out

AUSTIN, July 28.—A method so simple that it scarcely seems worth writing about has been found to be one of the most effective means of restoring bobwhite and quail in depopulated ranges, the game department announced today.

It is the establishment of fenced areas which offer the birds abundant food and cover in which to build their nests and hide from their enemies.

As described in a bulletin by Valgene W. Lehmann, field biologist, and just published by the game department, the plots should be about a half-acre in size and properly planted so they will be well-stocked with food. They may be square or rectangular in shape. "There are many quail ranges in Texas that produce few quail because they are overgrazed by cattle, sheep and goats, or cultivated so intensely that little food or cover is left for the birds," Lehmann writes.

He added that experiments with the fenced shelters had been made in Wharton county. They did not interfere with normal farm and ranch operations, and resulted in an increase of the quail population. Fourteen of the 16 plots established, he said, held coveys of quail the following fall and winter.

In some instances the shelters were located on the open prairie fully two miles from territory where quail had been known to winter before, and Lehmann found they attracted and held coveys.

The fenced shelters, Lehmann found, can be established at little cost, and can be made to produce quick results.

As Floods Struck West Texas

This was a typical scene in West Texas as the San Saba river roared out its banks after torrential rains to drive more than 500 persons from their homes and do upward of $300,000 property damage. An almost completely submerged farmhouse is shown in the river's grip near San Saba, Texas. Many were rescued from housetops.

CLEVELAND.—Big Ed Walsh pleads for the return of the dead baseball and inside play.

The famous White Sox pitcher of 30 years ago points out that it is practically all outfield play now—little infield play.

The Big Moose yearns for more base-running, hitting and running, double plays, and diving catches.

In Walsh's day, a team had to do something besides bat a base-runner around.

Players had to stand out defensively as well as offensively.

Walsh, now associated with a filtering plant outside of Meriden, Conn., dropped into Cleveland for a remarkable old-timers' game which saw Tris Speaker field his 1920 world champions intact.

Most of them played nine innings, including a young catcher named Stephen Francis O'Neill. And after watching Smoky Joe Wood, Charley Jamieson, Bill Wamby, Doc Johnston, Joe Sewell, and Elmer Smith cavort, and Walter Mail pitch, it might not be a bad idea for Alva Bradley to bring back some of the old Indians.

AFTER Duster Mails pitched two innings, O'Neill asked him how long he believed he could go and be that fast.

"For nine innings," replied the big left-hander now campaigning for the office of sheriff in Marin County, California, while serving as public relations counsel for the San Francisco Seals.

"I've a notion to kidnap you . . . take you to Buffalo," said O'Neill. It was a fine old-timers' game, with the 71-year-old Cy Young taking his turn for the Cleveland Naps of 1908.

O'Neill asserts that Charley Keller of Newark would improve the New York Yankee outfield on either side of Joe DiMaggio.

"The departure of Bob Seeds helped some," said Stephen Francis, shaking his noggin, "but the presence of Keller leaves us plenty of trouble in Newark."

Outside of a young Buffalo left-handed pitcher named Fred Archer, who was purchased from the Philadelphia Athletics along with Fink, O'Neill says Keller is the only young International League athlete ready for major league delivery. He expects the Bisons to collect $25,000 for Archer.

MAILS says that in Bill Lillard, 19, and in his second year of professional ball, San Francisco has the slickest Pacific Coast League shortstop since Roger Peckinpaugh and Dave Bancroft. Bill is a Los Angeles lad and a brother of Gene Lillard, who became a pitcher for the Angels after being shipped home by the Chicago Cubs as a third baseman.

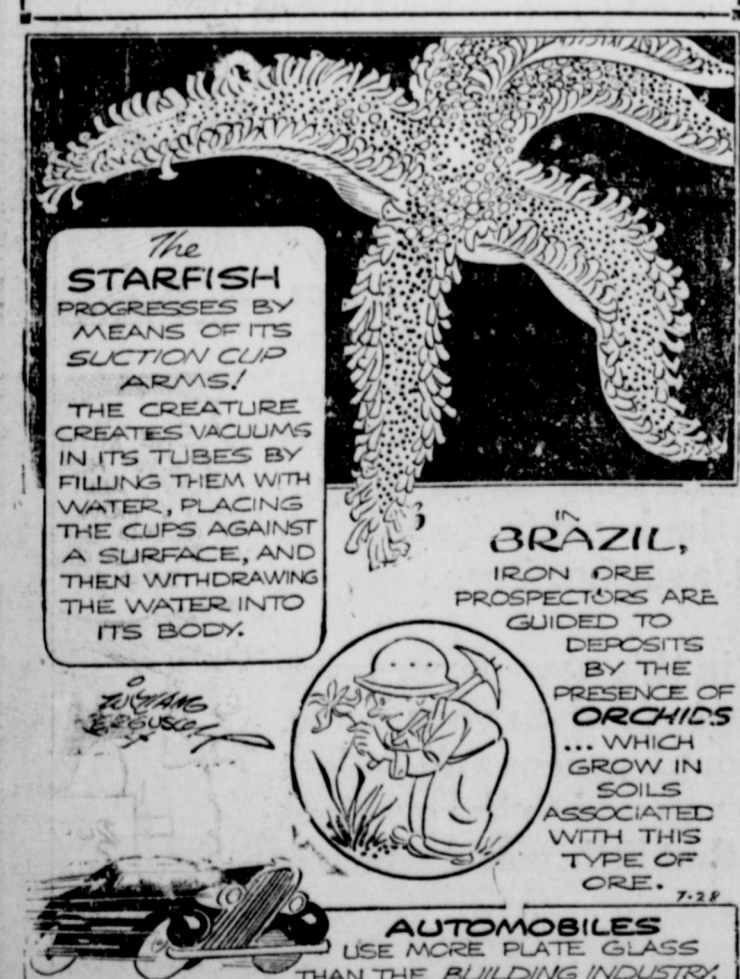

The Duster adds that Dominick DiMaggio is a better outfielder than Joe, but that he is a year or two away in hitting. He lists Brooks Holder, a 21-year-old San Francisco outfielder who guards the plate like Max Bishop, and Schoolboy Hutchinson, a 19-year-old, 195-pound Seattle pitcher, as bright prospects.

He says that the veteran pitcher Win Ballou, now with the Seals would aid any major league outfit as a relief worker.

"Ballou's curve breaks like ball dropping from a table," explains Walter Mails, the people's choice of Marin County.

RATTLER INTRIGUES BABY

By United Press

ETNA, Calif. — Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Evans, Jr., have moved back to this city from their country place in Scott Valley. The reason for the change was that one day Mrs. Evans found her 2-year-old son Jack trying to make friends with a rattlesnake in his pen in front of the house.

"There's The doorbell again"

Suppose daily to your door came the butcher, the grocer, the clothier, the furrier, the furniture man, and every other merchant with whom you deal? What a tedium of doorbell answering that would mean!

It would be even more impractical for you to visit daily all these stores to find out what they have to offer and the price.

And yet you need those merchants' service quite as much as they need your patronage. Contact between seller and consumer is essential in the supplying of human needs. Before a sale can be closed the goods must be offered. Every day, through the advertising columns of this newspaper, the merchants of this city come to your home with their choicest wares. Easily, quickly, you get the news of all that is worth while in the market-places of the world.

They are not strangers at the door, but merchants you know and trust. You are always surer of high quality and fair price when you buy an article advertised by a reputable firm.

That Reminds Me

From O'Daniel's own statement in his campaign, those who are now in official and clerical capacities, who are efficient and are doing their job well, have nothing to fear as long as they are loyal to their trust. This is as it should be.

In the state races, there are four offices that are to be decided. Gerald Mann and Walter Woodul will tell the voters why they are best fitted for the job of attorney general.

Jerry Sadler is scheduled to try and unseat veteran C. V. Terrell for railroad commissioner. Terrell has the full backing of the independent oil operators of this entire Oilbelt.

Naturally, that which effects the independent oil operators of this section also effects every business interest, as the major revenues through all channels of business comes from the oil interests.

W. H. (Bill) McDonald will go into a clinch with Bascom Giles of Austin. Giles has ranted all over the state hurling charges right and left that are unfounded and without merit.

A certain big city newspaper attempted to distort the minds of the people of Texas with a groundless effort to bring McDonald in disrepute. Bill only liked about 40,000 votes of having a clear majority.

A most unusual upset came in the race for Supreme Court, when the returns showed Davidson leading over the present incumbent, Judge Richard Critz.

From a local angle, two races will claim the attention of the voters. John White and Claude Curley Maynard will be in the heat to settle the question of who will be the next district clerk.

time to time and he knows them by their first name. John made an efficient county treasurer, and was a quiet and unassuming personality in the official capacity of his office.

Curley Maynard, who entered the political arena for the first time in his career, has a large local circle of friends which he made in the several years he was connected with the Harvey Chevrolet Company at Eastland in the sales department.

Another battle royal will take place for the office of floral representative from the 107th district, consisting of Eastland and Calahan counties. Omar Burkett and Wayne Sellers will hold the spotlight in this race.

Omar Burkett has had a seasoned background in associating himself in the realm of generalities in county and state official capacities. During the years he was with the Eastland office of the railroad commission, he built up a wide circle of friends in this entire section by his agreeable personality and efficient application to his duties.

perience fits him for the job in the event that the voters see fit to elect him.

The job of representing the people of this section in the legislature is a most important one and one that the citizenship should give careful study and consideration to before they cast their ballot. It is not a job at this time for political ambitions, but one that demands of whoever is elected to attend to the job at hand, and that is to represent the people. One cannot lay groundwork for future personal political ambitions and represent the people at the same time.

Royal Blues Win Eight to Four at Cisco Engagement

The Cisco girls' team broke into the run column Wednesday night at Cisco in a game, won by Eastland Royal Blues 8 to 4 played at Cisco.

Greer started on the mound for Cisco but was wild and was replaced by Ash in the third inning with none out. Both teams scored two in the first. The Blues went ahead one in the third, and Cisco went ahead one by scoring two in the fourth.

Barbara Blythe sent a hard skipper down the third base line for a home run to knot the count in the sixth and both teams went into the final stanza all tied up.

In the Blues' half, Edith Rosenquest laid a bunt down the third base line and beat it out; Hale duplicated the play, Mitchell missed the third strike. All hands were safe and the bases loaded when Horn's grounder got away from Campbell.

Helen Rosenquest got one of her typical home runs with a hard smash that sailed high over the left fielder's head and rolled to the fence.

Visiting Teams to Play This Evening On Eastland Field

Two games to be played tonight on the Eastland Fire Department field were announced today by officials.

First will be between the Texas Coca-Cola Bottling team of Eastland and the All-Stars of Cisco. Second will be between Methodist 9-19 of Eastland and a team from Desdemona.

Attention also was called to the start of the district Amateur Softball Association of America tournaments at Eastland next week.
