The Easter Parade—and the Goose Step Parade

Men in uniform. These are the men of tomorrow. This is the "modern spirit of the time."

At least so says Hans Schwartz, who is head of the "Uniformed Group" of the German National Tailors' Guild as it met at Weimar. (By an odd coincidence, Weimar is the city in which the constitution of the German Republic was framed. Yes, there was a German Republic, once.)

"Nearly a third of all German men now are in uniforms," exulted Schwartz. "The German style has shaken off false conceptions and incorporated the modern spirit of the time."

If the triumphant Schwartz is correct, and for his part of the world he certainly is, then so much the worse for the time.

Who can consider the wearing of uniform dress a matter of progress? It is a mere step backward toward civilization, toward the robotization of human beings.

The tyranny of uniformity of dress is too great as it is. Women, all rushing to get Princess Eugenie hats at the same time, men insisting on wearing hot coats in summer because it is "the thing," these uniformities are things we are gradually trying to fight clear of.

The best that can be said for uniforms is that they are democratic. Regardless of his circumstances, each man wears the same thing. (Yet even Dr. Goering has been known to vary the dead monotony of uniforms with nifty little innovations of his own.)

But isn't life, in Brummel's name, dull enough? If there not enough routine, what with the daily job, the daily grind, the daily routine, that it must be still further deadened and leveled by always the same clothes?

In certain cases, like the military services, it seems necessary that uniforms be worn. But to place gradually, by creeping slow degrees, a whole population in the strait-jacket of uniform dress, is certainly to stretch a blanket over an existence that has little enough color and variety to start with.

The annual Easter Parade has always seemed a little frothy. But all of a sudden it becomes important. Let's go right out and buy a yellow suit, green gloves, a purple tie, and a maroon hat with a peacock feather in it!

It may look silly, but it's something, isn't it, to be able still to wear what you darn please?

Montana, in turning down a "quick divorce" bill, demonstrates that the state cares not a whit about seeing movie stars in person.

Would it be reasonable to suspect that Hitler's favorite month is March?

This Is Beginning to Get Embarrassing

Letters From Our Readers

For the week ending March 11, the total number of bills introduced in the House was 852. Senate bills received in the House for consideration, 52; House Simple Resolutions introduced in the House, 168; House Concurrent Resolutions introduced 55; House Joint Resolutions introduced 39.

We realize very definitely the many dangers of including any kind of a tax bill in our Constitution, but at the same time, there are some good talking points for it. In our opinion, it would be better if we could submit more than one proposal to the people in order that they may be permitted to take their choice. However neither of us being a member of the Constitutional Amendments and Taxation and Revenue Committee, we are forced to make our choice on whatever amendment is submitted to the floor by them. We may be wrong, but it now appears that this will be the only thing submitted to a vote of the people.

There are several more bills to abolish and consolidate various bureaus, boards and special funds, and it shall be our purpose to vote for every one of these if we believe it to be for the best interests of the people generally, according to the promise made by us when we were elected to this important office.

We desire again to call to your attention that the proposed tax measures mean increased revenues and that for every dollar to be appropriated, someone must pay same in to our treasury; therefore we view with great concern the mounting cost of government and the easy proposal to spend more money.

We have not, to date, changed our minds on the proposal we made to the people, that we felt like we had plenty of money from present revenues if only we would practice rigid economy, cut out duplications or overlapping boards, and attempt to save instead of continued spending. Although there is a definite trend toward saving state money, and toward abolishing every department that seems unnecessary, it is very doubtful that, in this session of the legislature, much money, if any, can be saved. There is a constant cry from almost every section of the state for additional monies, and delegations are here constantly trying to put the pressure on various committees and the House generally for more money.

It is our frank opinion that some plan should be worked out whereby a steady flow of money could be provided for Social Security activities, thus, according to our way of thinking, remove the fund from the political football that it has been.

We hope to represent the people of our respective districts in a manner that is safe and to the best interests of our districts, our State and our Nation.

To date we have received a great many petitions, some of which are of great length, in addition to more than 1,000 letters each from over our districts; about 250 from Callahan County and about 750 from Eastland County. Whatever comes up we want to assure the people that we will consider their interests when we cast our votes on any measure, and hope to not be a disappointment in representing them.

Spring Calls for Cherry Pie

Cherry pie makes a repast out of a fine springtime dinner and lifts a simple meal out of the doldrums. When using plump canned sour cherries the flavor may be made more stimulating by adding a little cinnamon to the sugar which sweetens the fruit, or two to three drops of almond extract. While preparing the pie, the oven of a modern high speed gas range will preheat to 450 degrees Fahrenheit, needed for the first ten minutes of baking in order that the bottom crust will set. Then change the heat control to 350 degrees for the remaining 35 minutes or more of baking.

Oil Exhaustion In Years Denied

By United Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa.—The petroleum industry each year uses 1,200,000,000 barrels of the 14,000,000,000 barrel reserve of crude oil, but at the end of the year there is just as much known oil in the United States, says Dr. Sylvain Pirson, petroleum and natural gas engineering head at the Penn State School of Mineral Industries.

Declaring that the petroleum industry "does not live on its reserves, but on its new discoveries," Dr. Pirson scoffed at predictions the supply of crude oil in the United States would be exhausted in 10 to 14 years.

"Every year," Dr. Pirson said, "the search for new oil fields goes on unabated, with all the resources that the sciences of geology, physics and chemistry place at the disposal of the petroleum engineer."

"Petroleum engineering is one profession in the mineral industries where the prospector still plays a large role," the professor said. "Armed with the knowledge which the various sciences place at his disposal, he finds, year in and year out, enough new oil fields to make up for the yearly withdrawal."

"At times, as in 1930, when 4,000,000,000 barrels were discovered in the East Texas field, enormous quantities of reserves are brought to light; at other times, as in 1936, the oil prospectors' discoveries are deficient, although that year they failed to reach the black side of the ledger by a mere 20,000,000 barrels."

The petroleum expert said the time when this country will start drawing on its reserves is still far away.

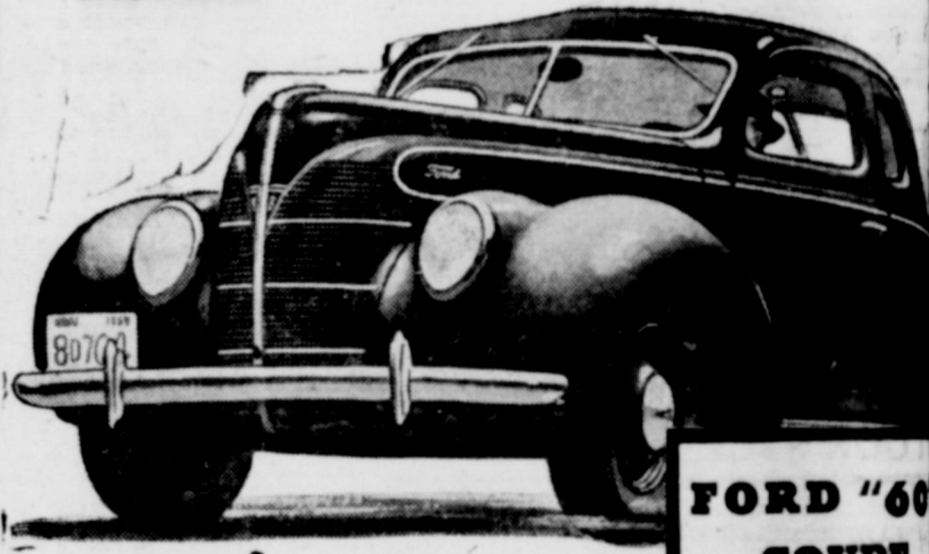

He estimated unlocated reserves in this country at 50,000,000,000 barrels and perhaps even as much as 100,000,000,000. In Pennsylvania, he pointed out, water flooding to a depth of not more than 3,000 feet, has assured the eastern oil industry a long and lasting rejuvenated life. A survey by Fancher Barnes of similar methods used in Oklahoma and Kansas, Pirson said, placed the recoverable oil at 3,000,000,000 barrels.

"Based on calculations made by Alexander Dunham, Harris County, Texas, estimated that the Texas and Louisiana furnish discoveries of 10,000,000,000 known reserves of 5,500,000,000. The geologists' reserves are extended producing areas able to place the known oil reserves at 100,000,000,000."

 DELIVERED IN DETROIT TAXES EXTRA

You expect Ford prices to be low. They always have been—always will be. But it's what you get for what you pay that makes Ford prices so amazing.

Take equipment. Ford delivered prices include—without extra charge—many dollars' worth of equipment.

Look at materials. No better steels go into any car at any price than are used in the Ford V-8. And Ford cars are built to the highest standards of precision known to mass-production industry. Working to fine limits takes time, costs money, but it pays you. It reduces wear and makes new-car performance last thousands of miles longer.

Ford gives you the V-8 engine—the smoothness of eight cylinders, with the economy of small cylinders. To get a V-8 on any other car you have to pay more than the Ford price—that's also true of the hydraulic brakes with big driving surfaces—the full torque drive—the semi-central clutch, and other features.

In the streamlined design 1939 Fords you have unique style leadership—the same cars in America are in the Lincoln group.

All these things add up to greater value—and that means lower price. In no other car do you get as much for your money as you do in a Ford V-8.

SERIAL STORY

'MRS. DOC' BY TOM HORNER

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

The characters and situations in this story are wholly fictional.

Yesterday, Eric taken Emily home from a dance, decides to say goodnight. But instead he kisses her. When he leaves abruptly, realizing what he has done to Alan.

CHAPTER X

LAN was sitting beside the fireplace as Emily entered the house, paused with her back against the closed door. Eric's car had just left.

"Oh—hello, honey," Alan said, leaning up. "Why didn't Eric come in?"

"He had to get back to the car," Emily answered. "We didn't know you were here."

"I was waiting for you. Did you have a good time?"

Emily walked to him, sat on the floor beside his chair, so that she could rest her head on his neck. His fingers caressed her cheek. She did not answer.

"Grandma Frank had a bad day," Alan went on. "We were late to see the break all right, but she may not pull through."

"Oh, that. Why—nothing, yet, ar. Why do you ask?"

"To tell you the truth, Emily, I haven't thought much about it. I'm too busy. I'll write Peter tomorrow, tell him you'll be the position?"

"For me? For us. Before it's too late. Alan . . . Alan darling, I must go back to St. Louis. My face was against his knee; she shook her body. Alan, on the floor beside her, turned his chin so that he could look at her.

"It's this town, Alan. It's doing nothing to us." She stifled her sob. "It's not the same. It never has been the same. Let's go back to St. Louis."

Alan was serious. "I'm sorry if I'm dull, Emily," he said bluntly. "What are you talking about?"

"About you, about me. Ever since you came to Summer it has been the same. You're not interested in me, in our home, in a young man. You don't care at all about your friends. You're just about home. You're gone if it's not for me."

morning before I'm awake. Sometimes you get home for lunch, usually not. I've eaten so many dinners alone I almost have to tell Herminia to set your place.

"All you think about are your patients—this one's appendix, that one's stomach. Somebody else's baby—"

"But I like it here. My father was a country doctor. That's all I want to be. I can't do anything greater than bring these people medical care—to the best of my ability. We have everything we want. That's all I ask."

"That's not all I ask," Emily continued. "I'm tired of being alone, of never knowing when I'll see you. I hate going places, and either rushing home before the party is over, or coming home with someone else. I can't stand it. I won't stand it."

"Emily, you're just getting yourself disturbed without cause." Alan's voice was gentle. "I'll admit I haven't been very considerate of you, but I have been awfully busy. I'll do better. I'll—"

"But you won't, Alan, and you know it," Emily said bitterly. "Every time the telephone rings, you'll jump, just as you always do. I won't stand it."

"Either you break entirely, or you stay in the same rut. Are you, or are you not, going to accept Dr. Peterson's offer?"

"Since you ask it, Emily, I am not."

EMILY did not answer. Alan had expected her to explode in an angry outburst, and her silence surprised him. For a long time they sat there, their hands almost touching—but not quite.

At last she rose to her feet, seated herself in a chair. Her hand shook a little as she lighted a cigarette.

"Eric Kane is in love with me, Alan," she spoke calmly, slowly, as if selecting each word.

Alan turned quickly. It was as if someone had struck him. "He just kissed me, there in the car."

She could see his lips compress into a thin line, see his jaw set, see his eyes grow narrower and darker. He was quiet, and cool, and deadly cool. He could have killed Eric in that same terrifying calmness.

"He's gone, and he won't come back," Emily went on. "He'd better not." Alan answered grimly.

"He's gone because he was your friend, because he would not betray the faith you placed in him. He's fine, Alan. He left even though he could see—"

"Even though he could see what you were doing to him?"

"What you can't. That you're losing your wife. That you and your eternal medicine, your thoughtlessness, are killing our love."

"I don't love Eric. There was nothing wrong in his loving me. He's been in love with me ever since the first time we met. He didn't tell me so, but I know. Don't hate Eric. The kiss was as much my fault as his—and it meant nothing."

"I love you, Alan. I'm your wife. I've done nothing to deceive you. You forced Eric and me to be together. You left me with him. If you blame anyone, blame your—"

"A thousand Eric's couldn't make me stop loving you. There's only one man that can make me do that—you!"

ALAN stared at the floor. Emily talked on but her voice carried only a meaningless jumble of words to his ears. The anger that had risen within him died. The hurt he had felt left him numb. Eric. Emily. His patients. The three drummed against the door of his soul as thoughts—mad, wild thoughts—clear, calm thoughts—clattered in bedlam through his mind.

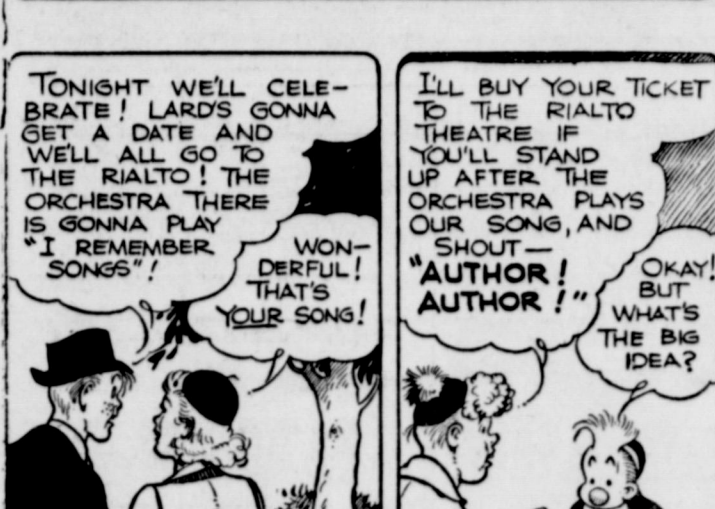

He could find no hate in his heart for Eric. Emily was right. Eric had fought against a love for Emily, older than his own. He had fought fairly, too, and Alan, blindly, had only made the battle the more difficult. Alan had insisted that he come to the dance, forced him to bring Emily home. He had placed every temptation in the man's way. He wondered if he would have been as courageous as Eric—if he would have left.

And Emily. That she had been true to him, that she still loved him, Alan did not doubt. Coming to Summer hadn't been easy for her; giving up all the pleasures, all the fun, all the friends she had known. That had been her battle. How many nights had she cried in this house, as the walls of loneliness closed in on her? Medicine he prescribed would cure aches of the body, but could anything repair the injury done to her very soul?

His patients. How they depended on him, how they trusted him, believed in his ability. In his care for them had he forgotten Emily's happiness? Could they supply the love, the devotion she gave him? His father, a doctor here before him, had expected him to watch over all of them. Did his father ask this sacrifice? The decision was his. What should it be?

FRECKLES and HIS FRIENDS

Saul Becomes a New Man

Text: Acts 9:1-12, 17-19

BY WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance

WITH this lesson we turn from studies in the life of Peter to consider the life and letters of Paul. Here we shall find the same Christian experience, taking root, developing, and bearing fruit in a very different personality and in a somewhat different environment.

With Paul, however, the situation was probably somewhat different. He was a tentmaker, for it was a part of the Jewish religious and social principles that every boy should know a trade or be brought up to healthy and honest work.

But Paul had had advantages of schooling. He had sat at the feet of Gamaliel, a well-known teacher, and as was the case with many Jews, following their occupations, his real interests were in the realm of intellect and morals. He had in him the elements of the scholar, and he was a thinker.

WITH this background it is not unusual that he should feel a deep intensity of religious conviction, and it was not surprising that he should resent the words and actions of those who, in his judgment, were perverting the truth and tending to substitute new teachings for the law and the prophets.

Jesus, of course, had not represented His teachings as new. He spoke of Himself as fulfilling the law and the prophets. As we must always remember, Jesus was a Jew—a human and earthly product of Jewish life and Jewish religion, emphasizing in His example and in His teaching the great truths that had in counting man's wealth you must first know the state of his conscience and health. Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span, who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.

Not happy and sad, for the swift flying years bring each man his laughers and each man his tears.

Not the two kinds of people on earth I mean are the people who lift and the people who lean. Wherever you go you will find the world's masses are always divided in just these two classes; and, oddly enough, you will find, too, I mean, that there's only one lifter to twenty who lean.

In which class are you? Are you easing the load of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road? Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear your portion of labor and worry and care?—Selected.

Tune in on XYZ for the latest news on a Timely Topic!

More than ever before people are thinking about homes. It's in the atmosphere and on the air! All records for home-buying have been broken for the first two months of 1933. And comparing very favorably with 1929—ten years ago—are the number and volume of savings accounts—a sure sign that the individual is trying to do something to better his condition.

Just getting by from day to day hardly satisfies the average American family. When one starts home ownership, he starts saving. And the person who is groping about for something he will never get until he starts doing a few things for himself.

All of our rent houses are for sale. While we have sold off a great number of homes this past year, we still have what you want, and every sale is a bargain.
