SENATE VOTES REMISSION OF STATE TAXES

AUSTIN, April 14 .- Remison of state ad valorem taxes to ill counties for five years beginning in 1940 was considered by the Texas Senate today after it voted the return of half of such taxes to Harris County for 10 years for flood control purposes.

The Harris County remission was estimated to amount to $350 .-000 a year. The statewide remission would amount to approximately $9,000,000 a year. Counties would be permitted to use the money for soil conservation, flood control, drainage, reforestation or

To gain the remission, Sen. H. G. Nelson of Lubbock proposed to equal what was returned by the state. Sen. L. J. Sulak of La-Grange asked the senators to change this and allow a county to claim the remission if it reduced county taxes 50 per cent of the

Where Justice Might Beget Injustice

On Congress, and on the legislature of every state which levies an income tax, now rests a grave duty.

Each should pass laws which will guarantee that injustice shall not proceed from the new decision of the U. S. Supreme Court permitting states to tax incomes of federal employes, and the federal government to tax salaries of state employes.

For, immediately the court reversed its long-time course supporting mutual immunity from such taxes, every person affected became theoretically liable for past taxes. That is, a federal employe who paid no state income tax in 1934, because the courts then ruled that he did not have to, now becomes liable for that same 1934 tax because the court now holds that he owed it.

It is easy to see how grave injustices might proceed from strict enforcement of any such procedure. To go back as far in some cases as 12 years, and say that a citizen must pay now, today, taxes for all those years when highest authority ruled he did not owe them, would be thoroughly unjust.

The Constitution provides that no ex post facto law may be passed. That means a law may not be passed which to- ALLEY OOP day penalizes you for something you did yesterday but which was then quite legal. Yet it would seem that a court decision can have the same effect, making you liable today for something you did yesterday, even though the same court yesterday said you were not liable.

The remedy to prevent any such injustice seems to be for Congress promptly to pass a law exempting state employes from back taxation, and for such states to have income taxes to pass similar laws specifically exempting federal employes from similar back taxes.

General approval will probably meet the court's change of view. Good sense surely indicates that government employes, no less than the rest of us, ought to bear their share of maintaining the government. And the old objection that allowing states to tax employes of federal government agencies, and the reverse, is striking at those governments themselves will appeal to few.

The decision is right and long-needed. But it ought not to be allowed to become an instrument of oppression in its

To penalize a man today for an act which, when he did it yesterday, was perfectly right and legal, is atrocious, and both federal and state governments owe a duty to head off any such unfortunate results of an otherwise sane
