Moral Teaching Needed, but Who's to Do It?

The suggestion of a Cleveland grand jury that a course in morals be given in the public schools has been attracting no end of attention.

It should. For if the country and the world today need anything it is a sharpening up of dulled moral senses.

But it does not follow that the public schools are necessarily the best place to bring about this revival. The reason is obvious. Not everybody agrees on what is moral and what is immoral. Practically everyone agrees that two and two are four, that antisestablishmentarianism is spelled antisestablishmentarianism, and that St. Louis is roughly due north of New Orleans.

But question three men about the morality involved in quaffing a tall, cool mind julep. One will say, "It is not immoral, but it is most unwise." And the third will say, "It is not only quite moral, but a good idea to boot." In short, there is no general agreement on the morals involved in this quite simple act.

Therein lies the danger in trying to set up a program of moral teaching in the public schools. The more specific it is, the harder it is to arrive at a program that will not conflict with specific ideas of morals held by devotees of various religions, sects, and creeds. It would have to be confined to the most elemental and generally accepted principles.

Ohio's education director, E. N. Dietrich, commented that the public schools are already teaching morals. "It should be taught in everything we do. It isn't necessary to have a special course."

And of course that is true, too. Pupils cannot go to school together, nor study anything worthwhile under discipline, without learning something about morals. Some educators believe morals are one thing that cannot be taught, but which must be learned in association with others.

Many educators and penologists immediately suggested that trying to reduce crime among youth by moral teaching would never achieve as much as improvement in economic conditions, elimination of bad housing, providing jobs and adequate recreation facilities, and alleviation of sheer poverty. These breed crime faster than any moral teaching can eliminate it.

The interest aroused by this grand jury's suggestion, however, is such as to suggest that many, many people realize the problem.

Certainly it is not one to be laughed off or ignored, for the morals of this old world and its people have been one of its primary problems since Noah, and probably long before. Everybody and every institution which can make a real contribution to better personal and national morals today is fighting an old battle, but a necessary one.

They're Here Again at the Lyric; Andy Hardy, The Judge, Marian, Ma and Aunt Milly in a Gale of Mirth. Andy Hardy Tries to Grow Up, But It Doesn't Work, Sets His Heart on Fire

New Story, Bringing Family Back to Hometown of Carvel, Has Judge Entangled with Crooked Promoters, and Daughter Marian Giving Up Romance for Business Career

MICKEY ROONEY falls in love again in the lucky seventh Hardy Family hit, "Andy Hardy Gets Spring Fever," opening Friday at the Lyric Theatre.

This time it's his high school dramatics teacher, played by Hollywood's newest find, Helen Gilbert. Lewis Stone continues as the Judge, Fay Holden as sympathetic Mother Hardy, Cecilia Parker as sister Marian and Sara Hayden as the knowing Aunt Milly. Ann Rutherford, of course, is still Andy's true love in the role of Polly Benedict. Another new addition is Terry Kilburn, who recently scored a great personal success in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips."

W. S. Van Dyke II, the man who has directed such outstanding successes as "San Francisco," "The Thin Man," "Naughty Marietta," and "Sweethearts," is said to have brought out every possible laugh from the humorous plight, so well known to all, of a boy falling in love with his teacher.

Back in Carvel, after their Detroit trip, the Hardy Family runs into a new set of problems. The Judge is told by two crooked promoters that some aqueduct property he holds and believes to be worthless is actually a rich source of aluminum. The Judge checks up on the side and, finding their analysis of soil content to be correct, invests his capital in a company to exploit the resources. Furthermore, wishing his Carvel friends to join in his good fortune, he persuades them to invest their money, too.

In the meantime, Andy has quarreled with his sweetheart, Polly, but is finding solace in the dramatic class of beautiful Rose Meredith. Soon he is heads-over-heels in love with this older girl. To win her attention, he writes the play to be presented by the high school class and wins the leading role in it. Andy is now a changed boy; his voice drops to dramatic pitches, his mind is filled with artistic thoughts; he even dresses for dinner without being told.

His sister Marian, having taken a secretarial position with the newly formed aluminum company, discovers with horror one day that the promoters have left town with all the funds. The Judge decides the only thing to do is to tell his friends just what has happened and then to sell all his belongings in an effort to repay them for their losses.

Andy's love for his teacher has by this time become a vital matter to the boy. This isn't realized by the Judge, taken up with his own worries, until he learns that Andy has proposed to Rose. Then, although he tries to reason with his son, it is too late; Andy is to get his answer from Rose on the night of the play.

Great news comes to the Judge on that day. The city of Carvel is willing to buy his aqueduct property for the use of its gravel content for road building. The sum the Judge receives is enough to cover all money taken by the promoters. But tragedy descends upon Andy when, during the play, he learns that Rose is already engaged. Stiffing his tears, Andy pours out his soul in the play—only to learn that it was Polly Benedict he loved anyway. A happy Hardy Family walks home from the play that night.

"Coast Guard" Film Spectacular Story Of Navy Of Mercy

The bravery of men who give their lives that others may live is brought to the screen in Columbia's "Coast Guard," hailed by Hollywood as one of the most thrilling and dramatic records ever to be screened. Story of the United States Coast Guard, the new film comes to the Lyric Theatre on Sunday, with Randolph Scott, Frances Dee, Ralph Bellamy and Walter Connolly featured.

Authentic and spectacular scenes provide the background against which the romantic story is painted. Magnificent episodes in which the Coast Guard carries on its multiplicity of duties add a genuine thrill to the film.

The picture reveals the heroic saga of the Coast Guard, with its stations standing on every coastline of America, from outposts in Alaska to modern quarters on the Gulf of Mexico. The activities of the Service are clearly shown; the cutters patrolling the iceberg lanes of the North Atlantic or guarding seals from the depredations of poachers; aircraft wing over little-frequented shorelines and great ambulance planes take seriously injured men from ships at sea. Storms, shipwrecks, floods, disaster at sea, hurricanes—these are the elements from which the stirring story of "Coast Guard" is taken.

Randolph Scott, Frances Dee and Ralph Bellamy are featured with Walter Connolly in "Coast Guard," new Columbia drama of America's "navy of mercy," Sunday at the Lyric theatre. Scott is seen as the pilot of a "mercy plane" and Bellamy is a Coast Guard lieutenant. Rivals in romance, the two cheerfully risk their lives that others may live.

The romance centers around the whirlwind courtship of Miss Dee, granddaughter of Walter Connolly, sea-captain, by Scott, reckless pilot of a Coast Guard ambulance plane, and Bellamy, officer in the service. An outstanding group of players, including Warren Hymer, Edmund MacDonald, Mala, Stanley Brown and numerous others are included in the cast. The picture was directed by Edward Ludwig.

CHAPTER No. 4

SERIAL STORY

WAR AND A WOMAN

BY BETTY WALLACE
COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, Linda tells Jimmy their marriage is impossible while her father lives, while Jimmy remains in the Navy. Later she meets George, refuses to tell him about Jimmy, gives back his ring.

CHAPTER XIII

"LINDA!" Startled out of his calm, George Cameron was grabbing at her. "Linda, you can't do this!"

She eluded him, ran up the steps and yanked at the door. Behind her, she heard a tiny metallic sound as the platinum and diamond engagement ring fell to the stone walk. Then she was stumbling inside, closing the door against him. She stood with her back against it, her breath coming fast, for a long minute before she went upstairs. George would not ring the bell, nor hammer on the door. He'd go away, quietly. She knew him that well.

She did not realize until much later that her subconscious mind had acted against the will she had imposed on herself. "Break the engagement," Jimmy had pleaded. She'd replied that she couldn't. And yet, almost before his airliner had time to take off from the airport, that blind impulse to tear George's ring off her finger had egged her on.

With a sinking heart, she remembered Daddy. If she didn't placate George quickly, Daddy would hear of this. He must not hear of it.

"No shocks," Dr. Logan had ordered. What a monster she was becoming! What a selfish, insane fool!

But on Monday, she could not force herself to telephone George. It was better over. No matter what happened, this much was finished. If only she could hide it from Daddy a little while, until he was stronger.

She dreaded the time when Daddy would ask, "Where's George? He hasn't come to see me."

Yet when the day came—only three days after that fatal Sunday—she managed to answer, lightly enough, "He's been busy at the laboratory, I suppose."

Her father looked at her. "Linda, you're keeping something from me. I've tried to get it out of Rourke, but she's like a clam when she wants to be."

The palms of her hands were wet, and her mouth was dry. No shocks, Dr. Logan had ordered. No shocks. "How funny of you, Daddy, to think I'm hiding a deep, dark secret," she managed to say. "What could I possibly be hiding?"

"You've quarreled with George, haven't you?" The quiet voice was implacable. "You never used to lie to me, Linda. But now, behind your smiling, you're not the same girl. Can't you confide in me? Tell me what's wrong."

SHE bent forward and touched the frail, veined hand. "Nothing's wrong, Daddy. Really."

"I want you to be happy," he persisted. "If you've found that George can't make you happy, that's all right. I—I don't mind as much as you think, my dear." He patted her hand affectionately. "Sometimes I thought it was my influence that was the only cause for your ever having become interested in George. I used to wonder if it was wise. Because you're so young and alive—the way your mother was—"

Her mother. She had died when Linda was a baby. Daddy seldom mentioned her, his grief and loss had gone too deep.

"George is a fine man, Linda. You know what I think of him as a scientist and teacher. But when I saw you two together, sometimes, I had my doubts. I refused to face them." He smiled in a wry way. "I told myself that your youth and beauty were not as vulnerable as they seemed to me. I told myself you were enough my daughter to value George's mind, his scholarly achievements. I was an old fool, my dear. You are your mother's daughter. She married me for no reason in the world except that we loved each other."

Linda was weeping helplessly before he finished speaking. How correctly he had read her heart! She ached with love for him. But there was more to it than this. Much more. There were still those bombers, black against the sky; still Marcia, with her trusting brown eyes.

"I didn't want to lie to you, Daddy," she sobbed. "But I couldn't bear to hurt you."

"Darling, it will always hurt me more cruelly to have you keep the truth from me. I'm your father. Surely I can understand anything that you feel is right . . ."

She didn't feel that those planes were right. She hated them. This other problem was one she must face and fight alone.

Daddy didn't ask her what had precipitated her quarrel with George. All he said was, "Come here, Linda." He kissed her forehead. Then he was holding her in his arms as he had held her on those long ago days when she had skinned a knee or stubbed a toe. "My little girl. My dear, dear little girl."

Rourke found them like that when she came in with the tray. "A fine mess!" she grunted. "Get off that bed, girl." Grudgingly, she added, "Go on, stay here if you want to. I'll be glad to have you matras away from this room. He's been grumpy as an old bear!" "I won't be now, Miss Rourke," Daddy promised humbly. "I'm very happy again. Happy and relieved."

"Get along with you! What'd you think the child had done, robbed a bank?" "I'll run downstairs and get Tibertus," Linda smiled. "It'll be like old times again."

"Bring up the manuscript from Milan, too," Daddy told her. "I haven't looked at it since I've been in bed." The evening paper was lying on the hall table. Linda took that, too, on her way back upstairs. But Daddy waved it aside. "Give me the manuscript."

Rourke threatened to stay out half the night, seeing a movie over twice. "I always see them twice, so I can remember better." "I'll be right here till you get back," Linda said.

She fixed her father's pillows, adjusted the bed lamp. She straightened and tidied the room for the night, feeling a new and sweet peace pervade her. After Daddy was settled with his precious manuscript, and miles away from her, she sat down herself and picked up the evening paper.

Bad news. Bad news. She glanced at headlines impatiently, wanting not to connect them with the Navy or with Jimmy. Suddenly a line of black type jumped up at her. Linda stiffened, her fingers crumpling the edges of the newspaper. She must be dreaming! But she had certainly read Jimmy's name.

Swiftly, her eyes were skimming over the column heads again. There it was. "TWO NAVAL OFFICERS KILLED IN CRASH." And under that, "LIEUTENANT JAMES COOPER AND T. D. RYLAND INJURED AS CRACK NAVAL BOMBER BURNS."

Two Games Slated At Eastland Field

Two games have been announced for tonight at the Firemen's Softball field in Eastland.

One will be between Modern and Gunsight and the other between Lone Star and Mingus. Saturday night the Hiway team from Abilene, one of the best in that section, play the Eastland Outlaws starting at 8 o'clock on the Eastland field.

A supply of mulberry leaves near her home to take care of the food problem.

Her family was forced to go on a cold diet, for food odors interfere with the worms and hamper silk production. She imports the worms from Armenia.

The room where the worms are is equipped with heaters, fans and other devices necessary for maintaining correct temperatures.

Mrs. Vartanian explained that the silkworms keep her so busy that she rarely gets more than five hours sleep a night.

"They require almost super-hospital care," she said, "because so many diseases can kill them."

Nationwide, beer contributes over a million dollars a day to the cost of government. Think what that means in paying for relief, in public works, in old age assistance right in your own community.
