Miss Opal Hill of Mineral Wells was chosen as the Southwestern Peanut Queen Saturday night at the Connellee Theatre in Eastland in a coronation ceremony highlighting the county fair and festival.

Jimmy Golden presided with Miss Hill and served as king. The election of Miss Hill as queen was part of the Southwestern Peanut Festival and annual county fair.

Selection of Miss Hill was unanimous by the judges, Eddie Barr, Dallas, E. B. Coleman from Dallas and Margaret Hall of Fort Worth. By winning the title of queen Miss Hill won a prize of $35 cash. She will also participate in the queen of Queens contest this month at the State Fair in Dallas. Officials notified State Fair authorities immediately after the selection.

The selection of the queen was held after a banquet at the Connellee Hotel. At the banquet Coleman, who is publicity relations man in this district for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures, spoke on the chances of youths entering the service.

Cecil Barham served as chairman of the peanut festival. The banquet at the hotel was in honor of entries in the contest and their reports.

After the selection of Miss Hill as queen she made her entry on a mammoth peanut. Originally the coronation had been scheduled at the Fire Department softball field.

EUROPE READY FOR WAR ON A BIGGER SCALE

By United Press
Europe's belligerents, anticipating failure of the German-Soviet peace ultimatum, settled down today to war with all their resources.

As the second month of war got underway a perhaps final bid for peace by Hitler, probably through Italy, was expected, but Britain and France already had turned it down.

On the fighting fronts every move intensified determination of both sides to fight to the finish.

On the high seas a German raider appeared in the South Atlantic and sank the 5050-ton British freighter Clement.

On the Baltic front Russia moved to consolidate its hold on Estonia by "inviting" the foreign minister of Latvia to Moscow to discuss leasing naval and air bases to Russia. The invitation accepted immediately, indicated that Latvia would follow the course of Estonia.

Turkey, at the opposite Russian frontier, apparently was maintaining a middle course. Although long a close ally of the Soviet, the Turks went ahead with an alliance with Britain and France.

Adolf Hitler, who addresses the Reichstag this week, was scheduled to deliver a final "peace ultimatum" to the allies. The next step, assuming the allies turn down their peace offer, would be war with all the German strength and all the aid Hitler may be able to get from Russia and Italy.

Britain left the world know she was ready, except the allies believe Russia will grab what she can, and fail to give Hitler military support. King George summoned 300,000 more men for military training.

PITTMAN SAYS EMBARGO IS BIG HANDICAP

By United Press
WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—Sen. Key Pittman, declared today that the present neutrality law handicaps America in her determination to stay out of the war.

Opening a momentous senate debate on neutrality law revision, Pittman centered attack on provision of the present act which permits American ships to carry any goods except arms to the warring nations. He urged repeal of the arms embargo, which he said was not a true symbol of American neutrality.

"The danger to this nation lies not so much in the type of goods it exports, as in the fact that American vessels are used for shipping," Pittman said.

Primed to answer Pittman was Sen. William Borah, Republican, Idaho, who, 20 years ago, helped lead a successful battle against another president's foreign policy, the league of nations fight against Woodrow Wilson.

"There is no cause for fear now that we will be drawn into the brutal and widening conflict," Pittman said. He added he was "impatient" with the arguments the United States entered the last war to collect debts owed by foreign governments to our citizens. He said submarine warfare brought America into the war.

British Bombers Showering Berlin With Propaganda

LONDON, Oct. 2.—Royal Air Force planes have made a successful flight over Berlin and Potsdam, the air ministry announced today, after disclosing an air battle between five British and 15 German aircraft over the Siegfried lines.

The ministry announcement indicated no effort was made to drop bombs over the German capital. In the Western front fight the British lost four planes, the Germans two.

The planes which flew over Berlin, according to the air ministry, dropped propaganda leaflets, but a strong wind was blowing and it was not known how many landed in the city. The ministry said the flight caught Berlin's air defense completely by surprise.

SEA WARFARE IN WIDE AREA HAS QUICKENED

BAHIA, Brazil, Oct. 2.—Advice received here today asserted that the British steamer Clement had been sunk by a German pocket battleship.

While We're Talking in Big Figures

We have been talking in astronomic figures for some years, $45,000,000,000 national debts, $4,000,000,000 budgets, and the like. Now with the war on in Europe, millions pour out on the unproductive earth every day, and no one is alarmed or shocked.

But while we're talking in big figures, let's talk for a moment of the biggest figure of all $200,000,000,000.

Two hundred billion dollars! That is the loss to the national income during the depression, according to a report just submitted to President Roosevelt by the National Resources Committee. That is the cost to the American people of the idleness of men and machines resulting from our inability to use to the full our vast resources during the past 10 years.

In other words, had we been able to contrive ways of employing all our idle workers, ways of keeping all our machines spinning at full speed, this breath-taking sum would have been added to the national income.

Beside that figure, the national debt looks small, and the cost of the World War could have been quickly absorbed.

Of course any such estimate of lost national income is a pretty theoretical thing. Neither machines nor men ever run without waste under any conceivable system of government. All this figure does is to point out to us rather convincingly our central problem. We must, whatever else happens, find ways of increasing that unemployment. We cannot forever continue to run a fine eight-cylinder engine on five cylinders and not expect strains and backfires.

Several of the countries of Europe have solved the problem by putting everything under military dictatorship, thus increasing the national production, all right, but dumping it right back into destructive war preparations, and now war itself.

That works for a time, but there is no future in it. Wars end. And when they end, back comes the problem, stronger than ever, of attempting to continue in peaceful, productive activity the pace set by the delirium of war time.

The problem must be faced, not by the cocaine-stimulation of a war boom, but in its basic aspects.

The National Resources Committee admits quite frankly that it doesn't know how to get this machinery going and these men to work. But neither does anybody else.

The basic thing to remember is that we must never lose sight of this fundamental lock barring the door to our future, and never for a moment cease trying to find the key.

Robert Montgomery rode across from England in a ship's swimming pool because of crowded conditions. That's even a better stunt than a publicity man could think up.

The Army forbids its privates to marry. Officials evidently prefer recruits to confine fighting activities to the field.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

BY BRUCE CATTON
REA Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The Japanese government is trying to get back into America's friendship again. Both formal and informal overtures are now being made, and the goal is an "understanding" which would permanently remove the danger of war between the two countries.

So far, the Japanese idea is for an "understanding" on Japan's own terms, including acceptance by the United States of Japan's conquest of China and Manchukuo. Since this country's official position has been that it does not recognize territorial changes made by force and in violation of treaties, that hope is perhaps somewhat remote.

Nevertheless, the campaign for a settlement of Japanese-American difficulties is being pushed. Publicly, it recently took the form of renewed conversations between Secretary of State Hull and Kensei Horiuchi, Japanese ambassador. The ambassador presented no proposals, but simply discussed various aspects of the two countries' relations. It is understood further talks will be held later.

Unofficially, Japan's point of view has been presented here by the visit of Toshi Go, Japanese commissioner to the World's Fair in New York. A private citizen, Mr. Go is understood to have been acting informally to sound out sentiment and present his government's point of view. During a week's visit he conferred with a number of government officials, representatives, and senators.

The general tenor of Mr. Go's message can be summarized, briefly, thus: Japan does not want to take over the Philippines when America gives them up. Japan is willing to see American trade rights in China continued—for selfish reasons, if for no other, since the full "development" of a pacified China will take many generations and will be a job far beyond Japan's unaided resources. Japan feels that it ought to be possible to come to agreement on spheres of influence in the Pacific satisfactory to both countries.

Beyond that, Mr. Go represents the signing of the Russian-Japanese agreement as a development favorable to Japanese-American harmony. The Japanese attitude on that goes like this: the sooner the war in China is wound up, (by a Japanese victory, of course) the sooner can Japanese-American friendship be restored. The agreement with Russia will help Japan win the war, and hence will bring a final understanding with America that much closer.

So far, Mr. Go has had a pretty noncommittal reception here. Although the outbreak of the war in Europe has created a good deal of sentiment in favor of doing whatever can be done to lessen the danger of a clash in the Pacific, the proposition to date is pretty largely a simple proposal that America okay what Japan has done in China.

The general understanding here is that two factors led to this effort to restore friendship. The more immediate one was the signing of the Russian-German treaty, which left the Japanese feeling very much isolated.

That, it is believed, has been pretty largely counteracted by the more recent agreement between Japan and Russia. Aside from that, however, it is reported here that the Japanese navy had a hand in the move for a new understanding. Japanese navy heads are understood to have decided that their fleet would be pretty likely to come off second best in a fight with the United States navy, and to have served notice that Tokio would be well advised to see to it that such a fight did not occur.

SERIAL STORY

WORKING WIVES

By LOUISE HOLMES

Copyright, 1939, NEA Service, Inc.

Yesterday, Dolly is happy in her preparations for her wedding, and Marian finds it difficult to keep explaining Dan's absence, and her own plan to remain in Chicago. Marian decides to move to cheaper quarters. Terror fills her heart as she wonders if Dan will ever come back.

CHAPTER XXIV

MARIAN found an apartment on the Near North Side. It was small and at the back of an old building. For a view it had back yards and the distant elevated. The rent was $30 a month. To Marian it was not a home, but simply a place to hide. She sold much of her furniture and quietly packed.

Dolly, deep in her own exciting adventure, was easily put off. On the last day of October, Marian went to a small church and stood at the altar while Dolly and Randy were married. Their happiness sickened her with a kind of bitter envy. She left them with horror enveloping her like a shroud.

A letter from Dan awaited her at the office on the first day of November. It contained a check for $75. Letting the check fall to the floor, she hungrily read the few lines. He had arrived safely, was settled in a pleasant room at the Heathman Hotel. From the window of his room he could see Mount Hood. That was all. The first of November was a gray, never-to-be-forgotten day.

The weeks dragged themselves over jagged stones of discontent and growing antagonism toward life. Sally Blake took on more, and still more, of the secretarial duties while Marian toiled over wearisome charts.

She was quiet and reserved. Inwardly, she seethed with rage, her mind swung back and forth between desperation and impotent self-pity.

Toward the last of November, a raw, biting day, Marian met Amy Ellen. Sands. Amy Ellen knew that Dan had gone west and cordially invited Marian to spend Thanksgiving Day in the Sands household.

Marian accepted for the simple reason that her tired mind could find no logical excuse for refusing. Afterward she wondered what might have happened had she not gone to the Sands for Thanksgiving Day. Afterward she wondered if the kind gods had known her plight and, in pity, sent Amy Ellen to her.

SOMEHOW, for months, years perhaps, she had been drifting through chaos, clinging to the spar of her own belief in her own conclusions, afraid to let go. Subconsciously, she had been making comparisons and observations. Arguments had been gradually taking form in the back of her mind, arguments which she refused to face. She was ready to be convinced, she needed only the unaffectedly joyous spirit of the Sands family to tip the scales toward saner thinking.

They were utterly themselves, happy together, glad to share their happiness with an outsider. Amy Ellen kissed Marian warmly upon arrival. Bill also kissed her, saying he did it for Dan. The children were natural and unspoiled. Marian's nerves quieted, she laughed for the first time in weeks. Her ready smile meant something.

Janie, aged 3, took a decided liking to her, bringing her dolls and books, leaning against Marian's knee, looking up with trusting eyes. Marian was flattered beyond measure.

When, after a hilarious dinner, Janie climbed sleepily to Marian's lap, she held her with a fierce tenderness. The little girl went to sleep in her arms, her golden head pressed against Marian's breast.

"You're so lovely with the children, Marian," Amy Ellen said. "You should have a few of your own."

"Maybe it's not too late." She allowed herself that much. Saying it, she was wrapped in pride and warmth and mystery.

It was 8 o'clock when all the Sands banded into the family car and drove Marian home. In parting, Janie presented her with a battered doll. "So's you'll remember us and come again," she said.

Marian sat in her ugly, uncomfortable apartment with the doll in her arms. Light snowflakes glistened on the window. She drowsed, not sleeping, allowing her mind to wander back across the years.

SHE and Dan had lived in an apartment much like this one when they were first married; a square, unimaginative room, a door on one side, two windows opposite, a little kitchen beyond.

But joy had lived in the funny apartment, so much joy that Marian's heart ached, remembering. She had cooked and cleaned and washed and ironed. She had invited the girls in for simple lunches, the crowd for Sunday suppers. Always there had been something exciting going on, the day they bought the radio, the day when Marian's pie crust was flakey at long last. Even 6 o'clock in the evening was exciting. That was when Dan came home.

This paradise had lasted how long? Four months? Six? At the end of six months Marian had been fretting privately. Accustomed to having money of her own, she had spent too lavishly, had opened charge accounts and recklessly taken advantage of them. She hadn't told Dan, working out a system by which she could pay the bills from her allowance.

She had made fair progress until Dan came home with the news that his salary had been cut. Thirty dollars from now on. Oh, well—what did they care? He had kissed her and she had been less responsive than usual. Those awful bills—And she wanted a new coat—her clothes were ragged.

They had been married almost two years when Dan had been forced to take a second salary cut. In the following spring he was earning $22.50. And glad he was to have a job at all. Men, by the thousands, were walking the streets.

By this time collectors were calling at the apartment, hard-faced, hard-voiced individuals who accepted a dollar or two and promised not to tell Mr. Harkness. At last, in desperation, Marian had suggested that she return to her job.

She had said, "Things are getting pretty tight, aren't they, Dan?" They were both sitting in a big chair and she twisted a button on his coat.

"We'll get by—it can't last forever—my work is steady."

HE had pulled her head down on his shoulder. He didn't know about the bills and the collectors. "Hold on, Glad," he had said. "Just hold on and do without things for a little while. It's fun if you only think so. We're in a battle, the world against Glad and Dan Harkness. Are we going to be licked? I'll say we're not."

She kept on twisting his button. "Until the depression—I mean the battle—is over, maybe it would be a good idea for me to go into the trenches."

"What do you mean?" scowling down at her.

"I want to help, Danny. Mr. Fellows said there would always be a place for me in the office—please—just until we beat the enemy."

He had swung her to her feet, standing over her. "Men don't take their wives into battle, Glad. They want to go alone—they glory in the fight because they have someone to fight for."

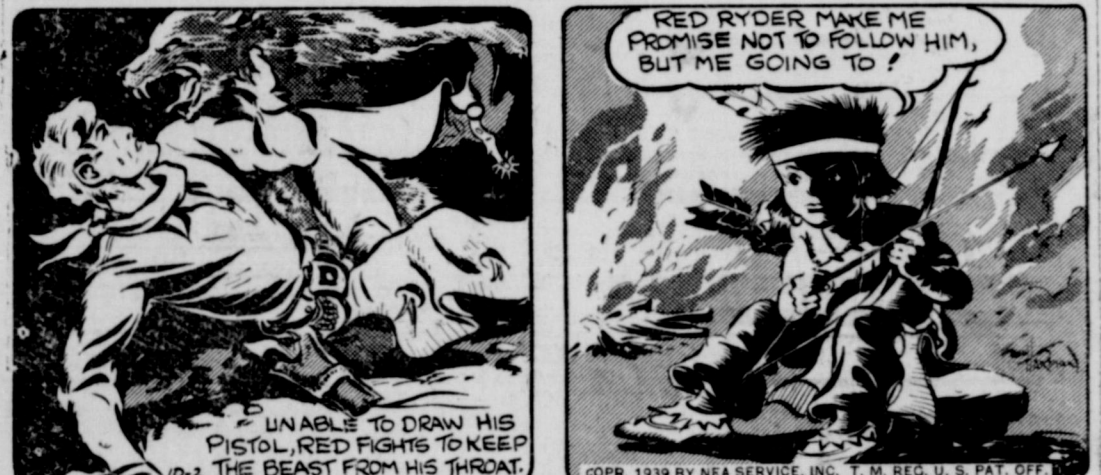

Remembering, Marian pressed a hand over her eyes. Why hadn't she listened? Why had she been an obstinate fool? When she dropped her hand, the fingers were wet. They had been so young—they'd had such a wonderful chance—and muffed it.

S.M.U. Offense Is To Be Even More Baffling In '39

By Leo J. Turner
United Press Staff Correspondent
DALLAS, Texas — Southern Methodist University's football offensive, always more or less baffling to opponents, is going to be even more annoying this year if Coach Matty Bell's plans work. Bell has the boys wondering at his secret practices ordered early in the season, but from reports leaking out of the barred gates at Ownby Stadium the Mustang menor "has something."

with Captain Chelsea Crouch calling signals from a wing back position. Preston Johnson, swiveling open field runner with an accurate toe, is slated for the other half-back job with beefy Bob Bilvillo at full.

The best passing combination puts Cliff Hagerman, a sophomore at half instead of Johnson. Malouf's aerial completions to Hagerman with a slippery ball on a muddy field had Coach Bell grinning. "I've got the best backfield material in the Southwest conference," Bell boasted.

"But my line—that's a different proposition." The Methodists are light, averaging around 190 pounds. But Bell claims it will be the fastest team per man that he has coached. Bob Bacaus, 180-pound right end, won second place in the 220-yard dash in the conference track meet last spring. Bob Collins, a six-

Peanut Butter Is Paying Way For College Student

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Peanut butter is paying the way of eight students through Little Rock Junior College.

W. H. Travis, "father of farm chermurgy in Arkansas," conceived the idea when he talked with fathers and mothers from rural sections who brought produce to a local curb market, and found that many children from farm homes could not hope for higher education.

He found there was no peanut butter plant in Little Rock. Thus, the students could make and sell peanut butter without competing with another Arkansas industry. Travis broached his plan to Dean E. Q. Brothers of Junior College. Brothers was enthusiastic, and even authorized a small loan from the school to assist in establishing the plant.

The eight boys and girls operating the plant come from rural families in the vicinity of Little Rock. They work five hours a day in the plant which is located at a local curb market, and attend classes in their spare time. They are paid at the rate of 25 cents an hour.

Historian Declares Stars Upon Barns Is Not A Hex Sign

TELFORD, Pa.—A popular belief that a star painted on Pennsylvania-Duth barns put a "hex" on cattle has been denounced by John D. Souders, 75, Menonite historian and president of the Franconia Historical Society.

"The Menonites and other early settlers of Pennsylvania came across the sea for religious reasons," Souders said. "The barn symbols are nearly all derived from the star or tulip design. The tulip is a simplified version of the Rose of Sharon.

"From the Bible the early settlers took literally the quotation of Christ's statement, 'I am the Morning Star and the Rose of Sharon.' Thus, they interpreted him as saying these beauties of nature are shining examples of divinity in everything.

"The settlers felt their religious urge so deeply that they wanted to advertise it to the world. Here was their first chance. Living in a free country they could paint their bold symbols in bright colors upon their red barns. They are not hex signs."
