To Do Hard Trick, First Step Is to Realize Difficulty

Attorney General Frank Murphy has assigned himself one of the most difficult of all tasks. The best hope for carrying it through lies in the fact that he cognizes in advance the difficulties, is preparing for them, and is determined to see them through.

He has assured the National Conference on Civil Liberties in the Present Emergency that "we can prevent and punish the abuse of liberty by sabotage, disorder, and violence without destroying liberty itself."

He is certainly right about that. The United States proposes to have its laws obeyed, by citizens and alien. Any repetition of the plottings and sabotage, the reign of terror attempted by alien influences in 1916, must be rigorously prevented.

Nevertheless, that is no license for engaging in an indiscriminate witch-hunt, creating a panic furor of deportations and persecutions instead of prosecutions.

Murphy was a Detroit lawyer during the first part of the World War era, until he enlisted to go to officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan and later overseas and into the army of occupation.

"I do not believe that a democracy must necessarily become something other than a democracy in order to protect its national interests," he said, promising prompt action against all subversive activities.

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON—The real story back of the Clark resolution for a Senate investigation of foreign propaganda efforts in this country is that it represents an effort by the isolationists to find out whether the American government has secretly given "assurances" of aid to England or France.

On the face of it, the resolution introduced by Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri—simply calls for the appointment of a committee of seven to investigate what, if anything, foreign powers or their agents have done to influence America's action on the arms embargo.

It is worded broadly enough, however, to empower such a committee to go into the whole subject of transatlantic communications both ways.

A CERTAIN prominent New Deal senator, who has been active in the fight to get the arms embargo repealed, recently bet $10 that the European war would be over by Oct. 21, 1939.

SERIAL STORY

JOAN OF ARKANSAS

BY JERRY BRONDFIELD
COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Dr. Samuel L. Hornbeak, whose name is synonymous with education in the Southwest, is now in his sixty-first year of active work in Trinity University, Waxahachie, Texas.
Two years ago the veteran educator was stricken with almost total blindness, but even such a handicap as this could not stop him in the field that he chose as a life work. Aided by his gallant wife who has proved the most comforting companion that life had to offer him, Dr. Hornbeak is going about his work of administration and instructing this year with the enthusiasm of one much younger in years.

The first academic degree awarded the "Grand Ole Man" was the A. B. from Trinity University when the school was located in Tehuacana. In 1890, he became dean of the university, and in 1908 after the school had been moved to Waxahachie he was made president. Prior to his election to this post of honor, he had been superintendent in the State School for the Blind in Austin.
After a successful career as president of Trinity, Dr. Hornbeak resigned and again became active in instruction, being assigned to the professorship in economics and the social sciences. He holds that position today.

YESTERDAY: Webber's stellar defense blocks Cornell's attempt to spoil Tech's perfect record, and Keith and Dan pace Tech to a 20-0 victory. Joan is active in the homecoming queen election. At a meeting at the Gamma house she hardly notices Dan. He's hurt, but he doesn't know that she looked anxiously for him before leaving.

CHAPTER XIII
ELECTION DAY WAS A hectic one. Hardly anyone at the Alpha Nu house went to classes. Joan tore about madly, carting at least 50 students to the voting booths. Activity reached its height at 3 o'clock when a streamer, horn-tooting cavalcade of cars paraded through the university district. Polls closed at 4:30 and it was the final reminder.
Joan bounced into the dining room that night looking fresh as a daisy.
"Honest, I don't see how you do it," said Elaine. "You'll need a week to recuperate."
Joan laughed. "Not me. Kay's the one who's worn to the proverbial frazzle. Look at her, would you?"
Kay attempted a weary smile. It was more of a physical strain with the rest of them. With Kay it was emotional and she showed it. More than anything else she had ever wanted, Kay Granger wanted to be homecoming queen.
"Four more hours and it'll be over," said Joan. "They're counting the ballots at the Student Senate and a gang of us are going over to the Daily offices to wait for the results. Want to come along?"
Kay shook her head. "Thanks, but I don't think I'd be equal to it. Call me here, though, when it's all over."

KEITH, Tommy Peters, Joan, and a gay little redhead, Ellen Thompson, descended on the offices of the university Daily at 9:30.
Every time a telephone rang they jumped. Bob McAllister, managing editor and a good friend of Tommy's, joined them when they went outside for some air.
"Another 15 minutes should do it," he figured. "We've heard unofficially that Kay Granger and Kennedy are running neck and neck. And that Booth gal put up by the Independents is supposed to be running a strong third."
They heard a phone ring again and they rushed inside. A student reporter signaled to McAllister.
"Granger by 120," the reporter shouted.
"Yowee!" Keith howled, and grabbed Joan up and swung her around. Joan squealed and pounded him playfully around the head.

"Didn't I tell you?" she chortled.
"Boy, am I a politician or not?" Tommy Peters grinned. "We'll pass that up for the moment while I give out with a better idea. Let's go down and rout out her majesty the queen."
"Swell," Joan cried. "We'll just barge right in on her with the news instead of calling."
Ten minutes later they dashed up the steps of the Alpha Nu house.
"We won," Joan whooped. "Where's the queen—where is she?"
Someone appeared a minute later with Kay in tow. They swarmed around her, but she was so excited she could hardly speak.
"Cimon," said Keith impetuously. "We're going down town and do a little celebrating."
"I wasn't until they were headed down the avenue that Joan suddenly realized it was a week night and that Keith had to be in early. She reminded him of it.
"Forget it," he replied. "This'll be harmless enough and we'll check in at a respectable hour."
"But what if Coach finds out?"
"Nuts... no one'll know the dirt."
"Sure nuff," Tommy added. "And anyway, the varsity cheerleader is along to see that the varsity gets home."
First stop was a tavern across town. "Gotta toast the queen," Keith said. "How about Manhattan, or something, all the way around?"
"No, Keith," Joan laid a hand on his arm. "A toast is in order, but we'll drink it in something less potent."
"Don't be like that. This is an extra spec—" He saw the expression on her face and paused.
"Okay," he grinned. "Make it lemonade."
"Gee," said Kay. "Homecoming queen... can't believe it... pinch me, somebody."
Tommy Peters took her at her word, with added enthusiasm. She shrieked.
"Say, how about driving over to Elliston for hamburgers? Something different, hey?" was Ellen's contribution.
Keith whooped and climbed to his feet. "Just the right idea. They serve the best hamburgs in the state over there. Let's go get 'em."
Elliston was the next town on the main highway. 22 miles away. No one paid any attention to the time, until Joan happened to look at her watch.

"Keith," she gasped. "Look at this—1:30. If anyone finds out, you'll be in an awful mess with Slocum."
"Oh, hang Slocum," Keith grumbled. "I've been behaving too much anyway."
As he was getting undressed back at the house later on, Dan Webber walked in from the sleeping dormitory.
"Thought it was you," Dan said quietly. "What's the matter—your watch stop or don't you just give a damn about playing on a winning ball club? Jeppers, Keith, I thought you had more sense than this."
He seemed hurt, rather than angry.
Keith dropped a shoe heavily. "Look, boy scout, what're you trying to do—turn policeman?" There was marked irritation in his voice.
Dan leaned back against the door. "You know me better than that, Keith. But it's just a little unfair. Y'know, I want to go to the Rose Bowl just as much as you do." Keith didn't reply and Dan turned and left.

KEITH cut all his morning classes next day and Dan deliberately made it a point to wait for Joan after their history lecture.
"I want to talk to you a minute," he said simply, and she looked up in surprise at the tone of his voice.
"There was a time I thought you'd begin to develop some good sense, but I see I was wrong," Dan continued. "Maybe a little celebration was in order last night, but that was a lousy stunt on your part—keeping Keith out to 2:30."
She opened her mouth to speak, but he went right on. "All I hope is that no one else saw him tearing around like that. That nitwit Peters should have had sense enough to break it up by 12, but I'm still blaming you. If you had Keith's interests at heart as you appear to have you'd have seen he was in at a decent hour."
"But, Dan," she protested. "I did all I could. Why, if it hadn't been for me Keith would have—" She was going to tell him how she had prevented Keith from ordering drinks, but changed her mind. It would only make things worse.
Instead she turned abruptly and left him standing there.

combat grasshoppers and other pests, scientists at the University of Minnesota began extensive research based on the peculiar piscatorial practices of Oriental Isank Waltons. Experiments began three years ago when a member of the Chinese bureau of entomology, Ming Tao Jen, of Nanking, China, arrived at the university for advance study, bringing with him a half dozen varieties of toxic shrubs native to the Far East. Among them was milletia, the fish poison.
According to Dr. Harold H. Shepard, assistant entomology professor in charge of research, the plant is closely related to similar herbs found in tropical regions of South America. Natives there also use it as an easy means of obtaining a Friday repast, Dr. Shepard said.

The poison, apparently, disables the respiratory organs of the fish. Inasmuch as insects breathe through gill-like body vents, the plants are equally effective against them.
At times, Dr. Shepard said, Chinese have used milletia to combat locusts, cabbage beetles and the like.
Today, in the entomology laboratory at the university farm, research scientists are analyzing specimens of all such toxic plants to determine the extent and nature of the poison. The work is

New Instrument For Eye Surgery Speeds Up Work

By United Press
ST. LOUIS.—A new instrument, which is expected to enable surgeons to transplant a clear cornea to an injured or sightless one in about one-fifth the time it now takes for the delicate operation, has been developed by Dr. Meyer Weiner, retired St. Louis eye surgeon.
Formerly the operation required about an hour and a half and its chances for success were limited. With the new instrument the operation can be completed in 15 minutes and its chances for success greatly increased, it is believed.
Cornea operations have been performed for 45 years, but only in the past 10 or 15 years were they relatively successful. Cutting out the cornea segment for transplantation had to be done with ordinary surgical instruments and making the segment fit into the eye in which it was transplanted was difficult.
Instead of cutting and fitting by hand, Dr. Weiner's instrument enables the surgeon to cut and fit the segment by a precision instrument. It also enables the surgeon to obtain a segment with a beveled edge which must remain in place after transplantation.
The instrument, under Dr. Weiner's supervision, was used in the successful operation on the eye of a blind woman in a Los Angeles hospital last summer.

Chinese Angler Is Help To Science

By United Press
MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—When a Chinese goes fishing, he doesn't dig for worms.
Being somewhat of a pragmatist about his fishing, the practical Oriental doesn't bother with the lures, leaders, rods, reels, etc., considered indispensable to Occidental fishermen. He just chaps up a few shrubs and throws them in the water.
Then he sits down and waits.
Within a few minutes, the fish, poisoned by the shrub, comes gasping to the surface. And the Chinese fisherman picks up his dinner with ease.
Because fish so caught are edible and the poison apparently has no effect on human beings, university entomologists became interested.
