Aviation Has a Big Year

It's as safe in an airliner these days as it is in a baby's crib. Or at least it was during 1939, according to a fistful of heartening statistics released by the Air Transport Association of America.

Domestic airlines carried 1,400,000 persons over a total of 620,000,000 passenger miles without even scratching the nose of a single person. Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association, was probably right when he said that this was the "greatest increase in safe travel of any class of passenger service for any similar period in the history of transportation in the United States."

The safety record becomes even more remarkable in view of the fact that the number of passenger miles flown both by domestic and international lines originating in this country increased from 335,000,000 in 1938 to 880,000,000 last year. Mail and express shipments also increased according to the report.

The increase in passenger travel is directly linked to the enviable safety record set by commercial pilots, mechanics and all others who are responsible for the safe flight of transport planes. The increased enthusiasm for air travel enabled airline executives to dip into the black ink bottle again for the first time in several years. For the past several years, airlines have been operating at a net annual loss of $2,000,000, Colonel Gorrell said.

It is also true that the confidence of the public in air transportation is making it possible for airlines to rely less on mail contracts and express business and more on passenger services. Only five years ago, about 70 per cent of the business handled by transport ships included mail and express shipments, and passenger service comprised only 30 per cent. Last year, 60 per cent of the commerce handled by commercial aviation firms was in the form of human cargo.

While safety played a prime part in vitalizing passenger business, the airline firms also bestow a certain amount of deserved credit upon the smooth functioning of the Civil Aeronautics Act and on the Air Traffic Conference which opened up a system of coordination among the various lines.

Aviation is still a growing industry. No one would contend that it has reached the peak of its efficiency, the pinnacle of its ability to serve the public. Fifteen years ago there was no scheduled passenger service. Twenty-five years ago, most people still regarded the flying machine as something with which only a fool would play.

Yet, despite its comparative youth, aviation has already set a record which no other mode of transportation can claim. There were airplane accidents in this country in 1939. But they did not happen to the trained pilots of the transport companies. The airlines have proved that, given good equipment, and expert personnel, there need be no fear of accidents. It is the best kind of publicity aviation can possibly get.

TEXAS PROHIBITION SENTIMENT WEAKER, SURVEY OF LOCAL-OPTION VOTING SHOWS

AUSTIN, Texas.—Is prohibition sentiment stronger or weaker in Texas today than it was in the days before State-wide prohibition was voted?

"Definitely weaker," Austin observers are saying, after making a comprehensive survey of sentiment as reflected by local-option elections.

The State's status as of January 1, 1940, is contrasted with the only truly comparable period — 1919, preceding State-wide prohibition. Geographically and from the standpoint of population, those who believe the sale of alcoholic beverages can be successfully prohibited are in the minority.

Here is the statistical picture: Although there were 154 counties which were "dry" in 1920 and that was before State-wide prohibition—only 117 counties are dry today, and all but three of these were dry before State-wide prohibition came in Texas.

Presuming a 1919 population of 4,663,000, as shown in the 1920 census, and today's population 6,421,844, the 1938 official estimate, the actual gain or loss in strength of the two schools of thought is as follows:

In 1919, there were 1,240,445 Texans living in "dry" counties, whereas today the number 4,310,595, a gain of 3,070,050.

In 1919, the population of dry counties totaled 3,422,174, as contrasted with 2,411,339 today, a loss of 1,010,835.

Hold Substantial Lead. Not only have those favoring legalized sales overcome the lead which prohibitionists held two decades ago; they have forged far ahead, winning and holding a substantial majority since repeal. This progress on the part of those favoring legalization was through actual expressions of the people in their only forum: At the ballot box; similarly, the losses recorded for the prohibitionists were through elections.

In other words, when prohibition was repealed in Texas, the entire State returned to the exact status it held in 1919. A county which was dry in 1919 could sanction sale of alcoholics, after repeal, only by an election; contrariwise, a section where sale was legal in 1919 could become dry only by election. Since 229 elections have been held since repeal—not counting numerous beer elections while beer alone was legal—the picture today is believed a fair reflection of the will of a majority of Texans.

Moreover, under the Texas local option laws, voters may change their minds as often as once every year. That they have changed their minds is shown by the shifts, pro-and-anti, in results of elections held since August, 1933, when the first step toward repeal—the legalization of beer—was voted.

True Opinion Shown. In the opinion of those who believe in legalization, this process of shifting sentiment over four years since repeal has been one of readjustment and "leveling out" until the true popular opinion substantially as it exists today is shown. How this readjustment process has applied to beer is shown in the records of elections between January 1, 1935, and January 1, 1940. Accurate records were not maintained prior to 1935. On January 1, 1935, there were 150 counties where beer sales were legal. Since that date, three counties have legalized beer; 16 counties have returned to prohibition, leaving sales legal today in 137 counties. Out of the 16 counties which returned to prohibition, all were dry prior to 1919; in 13 of them, majorities voted against repealing prohibition when that question was before the State in 1935; in five, majorities voted against the original beer amendment. Thus, as between 1919 and local option before State-wide prohibition prevailed, and 1940, under local option, the drys have shown heavy losses.

Used Car Sales Are Keeping Pace With 1940 Models

Sales of used cars by Chevrolet dealers are keeping pace with the heavy deliveries of new 1940 models of passenger cars and trucks. From every section of the United States and particularly from that area of North Texas included in the Dallas Zone of Chevrolet reports of increased and increasing used car activities and sales are being received from Chevrolet dealers. In line with improved general business conditions in this section, sales of new 1940 model Chevrolet passenger cars and trucks have increased in almost unprecedented proportions and this has brought into the used car stocks of Chevrolet dealers a choice of late model passenger cars and trucks representing unusual values in used cars. These trade-ins are quickly and thoroughly renewed in accordance with outlines and suggestions from the Chevrolet Motor Division and are offered to the public bearing the Red O. K. Tag, a copyrighted feature of Chevrolet and representing cars with an O. K. that counts. Facilities of Chevrolet dealers for carrying out the requirements of selling used cars with the Red O. K. Tag are checked regularly by factory representatives and the used car buying public have learned that Chevrolet dealers' used cars represent the ultimate in quality for satisfactory service and long life.

Soil Conservation Fund Reductions Hit Great Plains

AMARILLO, Tex.—Reduced Federal funds for soil conservation work envisaged in President Roosevelt's budget recommendations present a poser for Great Plains farmers.

If gains of recent years in checking soil erosion are to be maintained, dust bowl farmers will need to co-ordinate and expand local efforts, according to H. H. Fennell, regional conservator of the soil conservation service.

Although a cut in appropriations for the soil conservation service will result in a proportionate reduction in serpie personnel and material aid to farmers, Fennell believes that increasing local responsibility can protect the progress of the conservation program.

Average Age For Criminals Is Rising

FORT WORTH, Tex.—Edward E. Conroy, special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Dallas, told a Fort Worth civic club recently that the average age of criminals in the United States is rising.

The FBI agent found it gratifying that "we can no longer pin most of the crimes on youth." Since 1930, he said, the average age of desperate criminals has risen from 18 to 22 years.

Conroy also declared that the public mistakenly blamed foreign-born Americans for too many crimes. Most criminals are native-born citizens, he said.

NYA Boys Win and Girls Lose In Cage Contests At Olden

Ranger NYA boys won from the Olden Hornets in a basketball game at the Olden high school gymnasium Tuesday night, while the NYA girls lost in their first game of the season to the Olden girls. The score in the boys game was 44 to 31 and the Olden girls won by 31 to 30.

Coach Hughes of the NYA cage teams was well pleased with the showing made by both teams, as the NYA girls had worked out but once prior to the game Tuesday night. Suits for the NYA girls have been ordered, but have not arrived as yet.

Elbert Bennett was high point man for the NYA boys, with 10 points and Hendricks of Olden was high point man on his team with 11 points to his credit. Holt of Olden scored the most points for her team in the girls' game and Imogene Norris of the NYA girls held high point honors for her team.

BLACKOUT

BY RUTH AYERS

COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, the operation was the real Mary Carroll and happiness. She writes about the operation. Vincent accused her one night, drawing away sharply. "Is there some crazy idea in your head that makes you think I'm not on the level with you?"

"No—no, of course not. It's only—well, I'm not over what happened yet."

But deeply within her, Mary knew something was different. She fought off her strange feeling.

THE next morning, her thoughts still perplexing her, Mary took her drawing board to Hyde Park, hoping to forget the scene with Vincent in finding something amusing to sketch.

Newsboys were shouting. Mary read the apron banners they wore. "Moravia Sinking Reopened."

It had come, then! Miss Babcock was right. There was to be another investigation into the mysterious sinking of the ship. She would be a witness.

She bought a paper, reading hastily through the story. The name of Anna Winters leaped up before her eyes. She read— "Among those to be called for questioning will be Anna Winters, 23, of Bournemouth, now living in London."

For a minute, Mary thought of Anna—so beautiful and ethereal in the flame red dress on the night the Moravia went down. Then she brushed all thoughts aside except of the coming hearing at Scotland Yard. She'd promised Miss Babcock she'd tell all she knew. Was there, after all, so much to tell? The young man on board who'd followed her, Carla Marchetta's friend. The sight of the periscope in the water before the final crash.

Mary was flushed and breathless when she reached her room. "Oh, hello, sorry to startle you." A commanding figure in well-tailored uniform rose from the chair. Gilbert Lenox!

Mary threw her hands to her face. "Oh, Gilbert!"

He stepped to her and drew her hands away, staring at the new-found loveliness.

"Jove, you're stunning! I knew you must have been beautiful, but I'd no idea it would be like this." He was studying her face, his eyes hungry. "Look at me!"

Mary's dark lashes swept up. She felt the pulse in her throat beating wildly. "Do you know now?" she whispered.

Gilbert drew back, his hands thrust into his pockets as if he were keeping them purposely clenched. "Once you tried to tell me something in the hospital, I began slowly. 'I couldn't understand it then. Now I know what you meant. You're the girl in the

BRUCE CATTON IN WASHINGTON

He avoids the necessity of having to ask for a raise in the debt limit... he hands in a sharply reduced budget... and he puts the burden for both things on the shoulders of Congress. If there isn't plenty of buck-spin on that one, just try to think of a trickier one.

There's this to think about, too—that third term angle.

Assume that President Roosevelt's budget is adopted. It covers the period from June 30, 1940, to July 1, 1941. The President who is in office next winter—the one who is elected next fall, in other words—is the gent who will have to do the worrying about what is spent after July 1, 1941. And that President will find himself with a public debt that is within whispering distance of the legal debt limit, and will either have to balance the budget or ask Congress to raise the debt limit.

Doesn't that sound very, very much as if Mr. Roosevelt figured that somebody besides himself was going to be President next year?

Meanwhile, it is worth noticing that the budget is based on hope. Relief expenditures are cut sharply. This the President frankly admits is based on the hope that the present business upturn will continue.

If it does, all well and good. If it doesn't—if a recession appears, or even if the curve of business improvement merely levels out and things stay as they are now—the money budgeted for work relief and for farm aid just won't be enough and supplementary appropriations will have to be asked for this spring. And if the President does that, he must either get back into his tight corner by asking for a raise in the debt limit, or get Congress to vote new taxes.

Obviously, the President is shooting the works on the hope that business is going to continue to gain.

Surgeon Allays War Gas Fears

By United Press
SAN FRANCISCO.—Gas and disease germs in warfare as a means of disabling the combatants is much more of a bugaboo than a menace, according to Dr. Philip J. Lipsett, reserve army colonel and instructor in surgery at the University of California's Medical School.

Col. Lipsett has made a 20-year study of this question both from a military and a medical point of view.

"The closest calculations possible of the use of poison gas during the World War," he said, "showed that it takes some eight tons of gas producing materials to kill one man in ordinary warfare."

"This virtually places gaseous warfare out of the reach of most nations as an instrument of warfare."

Col. Lipsett has found that out of more than 70,000 American casualties in the World War, only 1,400 could be attributed directly to gas.

"The after effects of so-called gassing," he said, "were so greatly exaggerated, as it was shown in many instances through autopsy that gas had nothing whatever to do with the cause of the death."

He quotes Col. Harry L. Gilchrist of the U. S. army, who headed a commission to investigate gas damage and reactions, and who reported that many of the so-called pulmonary and respiratory conditions attributed to gassing were due to other causes.

Col. Lipsett has ascertained that two other reasons also are calculated to keep poison gas or disease germs methods from ever being used on an extensive scale in future warfare.

"The economic drain caused by this particular kind of warfare alone would be sufficient to prevent its use, but does not constitute the principal objection to it on a purely war time basis."

approximately an acre in size. To improve the watering system at Huntsville the drainage ditches will be lined with rock masonry and reinforced concrete. A new filling system to carry water into the ponds is being built, under the direction of the Department's hatcheries' engineer. Most of the present ponds at Huntsville will be deepened.

Repair work on the large levee at the Olmito hatchery has already been started.

A drag line will be used to deepen the canal through which water enters the San Angelo Hatchery. Work there will start within two weeks.

The finishing touches are being put on the Medina Hatchery near Natalia. That hatchery is the latest addition to the Game Department's list of fish-producing plants. Four ponds were in operation during 1939.

South to Unite On Road Safety

By United Press

ATLANTA, Ga.—A new Confederacy is being formed in the South—not to fight and kill in battle, but to end the ever-growing menace of death on the highways.

Hundreds of tourists are killed and other thousands are injured every year through lack of uniform speed and safety laws and incomplete enforcement of existing regulations.

To curb this toll of motorists, Georgia Safety Commissioner Lon E. Sullivan has sought and found the cooperation of other state law enforcement officers in a drive on highway fatalities.

The south-wide safety movement is directed especially toward Alabama, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky, which catch the bulk of the annual migration to and exodus from southern seasonal resorts.

In Georgia, uniformed patrolmen are stationed throughout the day and night where U. S. highways 1, 17 and 41 enter the state, stopping every tourist car to accusers. Each tourist is sent on his quaint the driver with state traffic way with a booklet on accident prevention.

Payment On Banks Deposits To Be Made

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Within a short time the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is expected to begin payments to depositors of the Guaranty Bond State Bank, North Zulch, Texas, which closed on January 4, 1934.

The bank held total deposits of approximately $125,000 at the time of suspension and practically the entire amount is estimated as being insured. The bank had about 1,000 depositors at the time of its suspension.

This was the sixteenth closing of an insured bank in the State of Texas since the beginning of deposit insurance on January 1, 1934.

The traffic signal for Georgia is the first noticeable drop in temperature up north, the volume fluctuating until the north-bound rush in the spring is over. This state is the bottleneck for the three principal highways to Florida. U. S. highway 17 has carried as many as 6,500 cars a day through Georgia.

With the cooperation of other states, into which the traffic spreads after leaving the Georgia bottleneck, it is hoped that new uniform safety and speed laws and rigid enforcement can be effected and thus save the lives of thousands every year.
