Artillery Guards Cotton Mill Gates in Strike

With a strike in progress and violence feared, artillerymen of the North Carolina National Guard camped inside the grounds of the Lorny cotton mill at Gastonia with their guns trained on the gate where a riot occurred recently. The strike, directed by Communist leaders from New England, drew out about half of the mill's 2200 employes, but many have since returned to work. It is the largest cotton mill under one roof in the world. The soldiers and their guns are shown above.

DOUBLE KILLING PUZZLES POLICE

By United Press.

FORT WORTH, Tex., April 29.

Police and county officials Monday were still mystified over a double killing Saturday night and a pistol duel Sunday night in which two persons were seriously wounded.

President Joseph M. Weaver of the Rotary club presided at to-day's meeting, it being the first time he has been in the city on Rotary Day for several weeks.

At the suggestion of Rotarian Beaty, President Weaver directed the Rotary committee on aviation to meet with the Eastland Lions club at their meeting at the Connellee tomorrow at noon for the purpose of discussing with them plans, for the establishment of an airport for this city.

Mrs. Joe Gibson furnished music for today's meeting, rendering several numbers on the piano.

The program committee for mext Monday's meeting is composed of "Jinks" Garrett, Julius Krause and John Knox. This committee will arrange a program in keeping with National Mosic week.

Visitors at today's meeting were Dr. Johnson, Ranger; Jim Matthews, B. H. Peacock and J. M. Edwards, Rotarians from Ranger; TRUCK OVERTURNS.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Writer WASHINGTON — Reports from London of a "world oil trust" to control the world supply of pet troleum are inferesting, if true, and not at all surprising. The tendency toward international arrangement combinations in production and distribution of minerals and other raw materials seems to be one of the most important factors among recent developments in world history. American and British oil interests have been fighting one another for markets and reserves for many years. But each has proved too powerful to be permanently defeated. Protracted warfare of this sort, with its intermittent price wars first in one sector and then in another, have been expensive. Also, it seems that the generals have decided, rather futile. Also, it seems that the generals have decided, rather futile. JUST as industries have organized nationally, many of the larger ones are now beginning to organize on an international scale. When business becomes international and foreign markets become an important consideration, overproduction and price-cutting in foreign lands become just as ruinous as they have often proved in our domestic economic situation. complete list of any of these international agreements is available because in many instances the interests involved have refused to acknowledge them. OUR own official worries about such agreements between other countries have only become acute when they involved some commodity important to us which we did not produce, as in the case of rubber. they have often proved in our domestic economic situation.

Unless the producers of one nation have a near-monopoly of a commodity they cannot set their own price when a surplus exists. They must accept the "world price" just as the American farmer must depend on the price of wheat as fixed at Liverpool.

Now, if the oil kings of the world have organized to control prices they are only following the lead of other producers along the road to profits. Cuba has at does not produce.

"I don't believe she'll come," he said, "and I don't think you should ask her to. Pam's not the sort of girl to be mixed up in this kind of trouble."

he paused and rested on insinuation.

"Marrying for money," Stephen supplied the words for him. "Pamela knows better."

"But my dad may need to be convinced," Harpld told him. "And your letting Pamela announce the engagement last night looks as if you were rather keen on rushing things."

"Is that the way it looks to you?" Stephen spoke caustically.

"Harold squirmed. "I'm thinking of how it will look to dad," he answered uneasily. Stephen noted his evasion.

"I'd don't give a damn what you or your dad think," he retored hotly. "I wouldn't care if Pamela hadn't a cent ..."

"You can bet she would," Harold cut in, "and I'm warning you —she may not have if dad takes an unfavorable view of the way you became engaged to her. And there's this," he added, waving his hand to indicate the cell.

"Tell Pamela that," Stephen said, "and then tell her I'm waiting for her. We'll both find out what she thin's."

Harold got up to go. Stephen had given him a good idea.

"Tell Pamela that," Stephen said, "and then tell her I'm waiting for her. We'll both find out what she think's."

Harold got up to go. Stephen had given him a good idea.

"Well," he said vaguely, "anything I can do . ."

There isn't, thanks." Stephen said curtly and turned away.

He did not see Harold again, for that night Huck warned the boy to keep away from him and Harold dared not disobey. Neither did he see Pamela that day, though he waited and watched for her with feverish expectancy.

Harold had gone straight to her with a plea that she have nothing further to do with him. "Dad will cut you off without a cent, Pam," he told her. "You were foolish to become engaged without his consent. Wait until he gets back, then you can fix it up with Stephen if you want to."

Pamela looked at him from under haughtily lifted eyebrows.

"Don't get so fussed, dear," ske and the words, "at the found in the though, though at first it was only a maddening confusion of words. Stephen's name and the words, "charged with being an accomplice in the theft," stood out with startling clearness, however, and Mildred's brain reeled under the force of the shock they brought to her. For a moment she swayed as though she would fall and a woman, passing, caught her arm.

"I'm all right; just a little dizzy," Mildred said, steadying her self.

The woman went on, not wanting to miss her train.

Mildred read the story again. But this lime, when she came to the end of it, she acted swiftly. She list get to Stephen at once, witnout a moment's delay.

"Mildred" He came to her with outstretched hand when the turn-key opened the door of his cell to admit her.

He looked haggard and slightly unkempt, but Mildred held no cri-of fixing up anything with a man who's been arrested."

Harold was taken aback. Even he, who knew her so well, had not been prepared for this display of callow heartlessness.

"You mean," he stammered, "It's good to see you," Stephen said, "but this isn't just the place for nice girls, I guess."

"Certainly not. Who wants to see the inside of a jail?"

Harold almost sobbed with relief.

"God, I'm glad to hear you say that," he told her. "I was afraid you would do it to spite me if I told you to stay away. But I had to warn you, Pam. I know dad wouldn't stand for it. And you would be a grand flop as a poor man's wife."

"Oh, Stephen," she cried, "Stephen, I didn't know until a little while ago. Why didn't you send me word?"

"It's good to see you," Stephen said, "but this isn't just the place for nice girls, I guess."

"Tell me how it happened," Mildred urged, and pulled him down beside her on a bench. "Maybe I can help you."

Stephen plunged abruptly into his story. He did not mind relating it on this occasion. It was a relief to have someone to talk to and in the telling of it he managed to convince himself that it was really as preposterous as he had begun to fear it might not be. Mildred was unconscious of holding his hand, utterly unaware of the commiserating pressure she margal and some of the commiserating pressure she word?"

scheme on your car now

AT small cost, we can make your present car like new through recoloring it in modern Duco color harmonies. off you want the newest color schemes adopted by the leading automobile manufacturers you can duplicate them.

Perhaps the finish needs only a little Duco retouching. In any case only durable du Pont products are applied. Every step of the work is prescribed by the famous du Pont Process, a method worked out with the great manufacturers. Your automobile is returned to you as though from the factory-smarter than ever.
