THESE concessions have to be considered in the light of two things.

First that they are conditioned upon acceptance of a nine-point program which, sound and enlightened for the most part, is economically unworkable in at least one detail. The union demands both price control and wage increases. That won't work.

Second, the fact that the whole problem of overtime pay is one of cost, we can produce under the present day scales. The men will work Sundays, holidays and nights at a price. So it isn't a matter of production primarily. The trouble is that even this rich nation is going to be hard-pressed by the size of the bill we are contracting in order to supply the entire anti-axis world with food and weapons. The relatively small income waived by these men whose normal shift includes Sundays, or an occasional holiday, doesn't scratch the surface of the real problem.

Give credit to the U. A. W. for a fine gesture. But let's look this gift horse in the mouth and see if he will prove worth his keep after we get him in the barn—if we do.

To satisfy President Roosevelt's war production program, we must divert so much capacity to military purposes that the remaining plant and materials will not be able to make more than $56 billions worth of civilian supplies.

BUT in the coming fiscal year, civilians will have at least $110 billions with which to buy such goods.

Therefore we start with the picture of civilians at an auction, all anxious to buy the commodities offered for sale, and each with more money than he can spend.

If you've ever been at an auction where everybody had relatively plenty of money, and was enthusiastic about the items offered, you don't need to be told what will happen.

Unless the setup is modified by some type of controls, prices will skyrocket as each of us tries to outbid the others for the commodities on sale.

This tendency will be exaggerated by the fact that much of the new money is in the hands of men and women who haven't been prosperous for so long that they have no ideas of saving.

The quantity of civilian goods available will be just about that of 1933, at the depth of the depression. The quantity of money, seeking to pay for such goods, will be about double what was available in 1933.

This unbalanced economy hasn't yet reached its culmination, both because employment and payrolls have not attained their peaks and because the shutoff of most civilian dispensables has not become established.

NEVERTHELESS, price inflation already has made strides. The cost of living generally has risen close to 15 per cent since the war began. The cost of food has gone up almost 20 per cent in a year. Numerous individual table items—important ones, too—have risen from 25 to as much as 65 per cent in a year.

LOUISVILLE.—Eddie Arcaro is shooting for something a jockey hasn't accomplished in the Kentucky Derby in 100 years—winning rides in consecutive years.
Not since 1902, when Jockey Winkfield came down in front on Alan-a-dale, has a boy piloted two Derby winners in a row. Winkfield booted His Eminence in 1901. Isaac Murphy hit the top aboard Riley in 1890 and Kingman in '91.
Murphy and Winkfield were Negroes, which further stresses the fact that the turf lost a heap of riding talent when white boys made things too unpleasant for them.

HARD boots believe Arcaro will break the spell on the Green tree Stable's Devil Diver. Arcaro had his pick and took the son of St. Germans over Shut Out, which he rode when the finest racing son of Equipoise ran Col. Edward Riley's Pines Me into the ground in the Blue Grass Stakes.
A year ago, Eddie Arcaro was looking over his shoulder as Whiplaway completed his remarkable last quarter to break Twenty Grand's record and give future Derby winners 2:01 2/5 at which to shoot for a mile and a quarter at Churchill Downs.

ALEX GORDON claims Man o' War would never win a race today.
"They'd never get Man o' War near one of those stall gates, let alone into one of those traps," says the veteran trainer who trotted out Nellie Morse to win the Preakness in '24. "Big Red would kill himself. He went to the post to run, not to be put in some crazy contraption."
A horse objecting to the gate is taken to the outside once and then is banned for 10 days. He doesn't return to the race until he satisfies the starter that he'll behave.
Gordon contends Man o' War would be barred for life.
From that, you easily might gather that Alex Gordon doesn't think much of the gate.

GORDON, like most other old horsemen, hesitates to pick a winner. He realizes that Green B. Morris, famous trainer of 20 years' or more ago, was right when he remarked: "The time to give an opinion on a horse is one year after he's dead."
"If I knew anything about horses," smiles Alex Gordon, "I'd be a millionaire."
"All I need would be $2 to start with."

Alameda School Have A Banquet Plan Exercises

A very unique program featuring songs and poems of "Mother" was presented at the chapel exercises by the seniors of Alameda High School Friday morning, with a number of mothers and fathers present.

The program was as follows:
Origin of Mothers Day—Anson Little.

Reading, "Worthy Mother"—Marjorie Calvert.

Reading, "Mother's Songs"—Edward Henley, with songs, "Jesus Lover of My Soul", "Rock of Ages", "How Firm a Foundation", "Nearer My God to Thee," and "The Home Over There" by the Hi-Four Quartet.

Neldaree Griffith gave the Class History and Billie Jacobs presented the Class Deed to the class of 1943.

The humorous side came last with a "Mimic of the Teachers" in a faculty meeting skit, presented by seven of the seniors.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached Sunday night.

The schedule of activities for the coming week for the school includes:

Wednesday night, May 13 — Eighth Grade graduation exercises
Thursday night, May 14 — Senior graduation.

Friday night, May 15 — Tom Thumb's Anniversary, by the grade school pupils.

Midshipman at the Naval Academy are requested to take dancing lessons and after dinner speaking.

Midshipmen usually gain five pounds their first month at the naval Academy and 20 pounds in three years.

The Navy requires its men to mark their names on blankets in eight places for quick identification.

Secretary Of The Senate, Who Looks More Like Senator Than Senators Do Had Rather Have His Job Than FDR's

By RICHARD M. MORREHEAD
United Press Staff Correspondent
AUSTIN, Tex., (UP)—Genial Bob Barker, who has seen history made at the Texas capitol for 41 years, had rather be secretary of the state Senate than president of the United States.

Bob has been Senate secretary long enough to know whether he likes the job. He has held it continuously since 1917, and in all probability will keep it as long as he wants it. From 1903 to 1917 he was chief clerk of the Texas House of Representatives and for two years before that he worked for the state comptroller.

Does Barker ever have a thought of turning to some other work?

"No sir," he said emphatically. "I'd rather be secretary of the Senate than president of the United States."

Almost 68, Barker looks much younger and his appearance is as much a part of the capitol as the red granite dome itself. He is heavy (250 pounds) and jolly—"Father Falstaff" has been called. His long-cut hair, grey on top and silver at the fringes, is the envy of would-be statesmen. While the Senate is in session, visitors frequently ask: "Who is out soon enough and they know how to handle those fellows," he remarked.

"Do you think the quality of Legislatures is getting better?" he was asked.

"Well, it certainly isn't deteriorating any," he said. "I think you can safely say that the legislature is keeping up with the times."

Barker said that if his personal views were to prevail, he might make one change in Texas government. He would make the governor and other state officials elective for four instead of two years.

"The way it is now," he commented, "a fellow gets elected one year, takes office the second year, and the third year he has to run again. Makes it so he is running all the time."

Barker has served with John Nance Garner, who became vice-president of the United States, and numerous others who became nationally-famous. Pat M. Neff, now president of Baylor University, was speaker of the House when Barker first became its chief clerk.

He ranks Neff and Coke Stevenson, the present governor, as the two chief executives best fitted for the job. Both served apprenticeships in the legislature, studied constantly, and have ability to apply their knowledge.

Bob's stock of stories about Texas political figures is almost inexhaustible, and most of the yarns concern legislators' experiences. The secretary is known for his wit, mostly of an off-hand sort. He was in Dallas recently for the grand opera performances, and he came home praising the excellence of the "Barber of Pflugerville." Pflugerville is a tiny Travis county town totally unrelated to Seville, Spain, where the opera's setting is laid.

Persons who know Barker may not believe it but Barker once was a jockey. One tale is that his horse won a race, but was disqualified because Barker wasn't carrying enough weight. The metal was lost from Barker's saddle on the track.

Barker retains his interest in sports, including horse racing, but his greatest joy is fishing.

Few men in Texas have as many personal friends as Barker. They call him variously "Bob," "Mister Bob," or "Uncle Bob." He ran for public office once, for state comptroller in 1913, where his now-vindicated anti-prohibition views contributed to his defeat.

There are 31 members of the Senate, so Barker is known as the "32nd senator." When anybody inquires about the business of the Senate, the usual advice is "ask Bob."

An oil portrait of the secretary hangs in the Senate, the only employee so honored. It was dedicated last year, along with the portrait of the late Mrs. Coke Stevenson.

In acknowledging the honor, Barker said simply: "Evil things come quickly, but good things come slowly. This is the greatest thing that has come to me in all the years of my life."

Battling Thurman Arnold Ready to Fight For Revision of U. S. Patent Laws

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Service Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Plain-spoken, fearless Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, who socks labor unions with his left hand and big corporations with his right, has come out with suggestions of what he thinks the patent laws of the United States should be. For the past week or so, Arnold and the bright young men of his Department of Justice Anti-Trust Division have been appearing before the Senate Committee on Patents, delivering a sensational series of disclosures which purport to show how patent pools and patent monopolies have been used to curtail the production of strategic materials needed for the war effort—magnesium, machine tool steels, explosives, chemicals and so on. The recital is scheduled to continue, and a sad serial story it is, too. The important thing about the facts, however, and their real significance, lies in what the Department of Justice anti-trust lawyers think should be done to prevent patents or patent pools being used to create monopolies which act as restraints on trade.

Briefly, Arnold's proposals would give the government powers to police the patent laws to protect the public interest. Under the existing laws, the government only grants or denies the patents applied for.

DISPUTES over patents are settled in the courts, but what this frequently amounts to is that the disputants in a patent infringement suit get together and settle their differences by creating a pool of the conflicting patents which in effect gives the pool monopoly control. Arnold's drastic proposals for action against such patent pools is that the participants in the pool should be indicted for conspiracy in restraint of trade and, on conviction, the patents be cancelled.

The specific suggestions for the policing and control of patents, by authority which the government does not now have, are these:

1. Prohibit the granting of patents for use as instruments of business policy. That is, prevent the abuse of the patent privilege in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Corporations which violate the Sherman law can be dissolved. The same principle should be applied to dissolve patent pools which violate that law. This action can now be taken in the courts, but it is Arnold's contention that if the additional legislation suggested were passed, patents as instruments of business policy would not be taken out, and attempts to dominate a market through patent pools would thus be terminated.
2. Require that in every patent infringement suit brought before the court, the anti-trust division of

FRANTIC WEEKEND

BY EDMUND FANCOTT

THE STORY: Just after the weekend guests at Ferd's Canadian country place learn that one of the party, Fay Hanson, is a famous Broadway night club singer, young Peggy Mack sees the figure of a man in the moonlight. Her brother, Michael, Nigel Monkhouse and Ferd bring him in. He turns out to be Baldy Brien, in. He comes to take her back. Ferd, his aunt, and Peggy's older sister Myra are unconcerned. But Michael and Nigel are both in love with Fay. And Peggy has plans of her own.

"I JUST RAN AWAY"
CHAPTER IX
"YOU must be very clever," said Peggy admiringly, ignoring Myra's questioning eye.
Baldy Brien almost purred and was just about to expand again but Peggy got in first.
"Would you be my manager?"
Baldy stared at her. "Listen, baby, I'm in the show business, not running a girls' school. Run away. When you get your name in neon same place I'll come and listen to you, but I'm in it for dough—dough for me, and dough for them that can make it. I ain't a charitable organization."
Peggy looked at him with infinite scorn. "Sucker!" she said. "And I swallowed your line. Why, you couldn't see talent if it was pushed down your throat!"
Baldy started, surprised at this sudden attack. Then he bristled. "You're right, dead right, and I can't see it now."
He turned to attack Fay again and looked around the room in surprise. Fay had gone, so had Ferd, Michael and Nigel.
"Where are you staying?" asked Ferd's aunt quietly, realizing it was already late and that there were no hotels within many miles.
"Thanks very much," said Baldy. "That's kind of you, lady. I was going to take my forty in the back of the car, but if you insist, I gladly accept your invitation."
"I'm sure my nephew will enjoy you," said Ferd's aunt, after her first surprise at his self-invitation. "He has such strange ideas anyway, it will serve him right."
Baldy looked quickly at her but she was knitting placidly.
Out in the moonlight, incomparably beautiful in contrast with the recent minutes indoors, the three men and Fay were sitting on the wharf. One by one they had slipped off while Baldy was holding the floor and had wandered down to the quay.

The three men were smoking.
"Now I know," said Ferd suddenly. "Why you left New York."
"I wonder," said Fay. The moonlight cast soft shadows in the night. The air was warm. "Sometimes you do something suddenly and you don't care whether it is right or wrong. You only know that you must do it."
"But I don't understand it all," said Nigel slowly.
Fay laughed, a low soft laugh. A fish splashed somewhere out on the lake.
"Neither do I. It seems so quiet and peaceful here . . . after living so long in New York."
Michael interrupted. "But New York—singing with a band like Johnny White's— you haven't given it up?"
Fay laughed. "I haven't exactly given it up. I just ran away."
"Ran away?" said Nigel.
"Yes, Baldy is right. I had everything a million girls would give their eye teeth to get—and I ran away."
"You're going back?" asked Michael and there was a touch of wistfulness in his voice.
"I don't know." Fay's voice came slowly, and in the pause that followed the eyes of all three men rested on her.
ALL three were thinking the same thing—that here in the moonlight they wouldn't have minded staying silently for hours, just looking at her face as it was at that moment. It wore the lovely sadness of one who has seen every dream come true with a succession of miracles and then watched them all turn to dust and tinsel.
Then she shook her head and laughed lightly, throwing her thoughts away from her.
"I'll tell you. When I first began to be noticed it was wonderful, intoxicating. There was the applause, the praise—and money came easily. Then my agent told me the time had come to have a manager to build me up and he introduced me to Baldy Brien. He talks too much but he really is as straight as they come, according to his lights."
"What happened then?" asked Nigel.
"First you have a manager, then you have a press agent. Then you have to compete with Hollywood in hair, face and dress. You have to be a glamor girl. That means a dresser, it means endless hours for fittings, hair dressing, massage, voice lessons. It all costs money, and the one that earns it has to pay.

"First you are rich on fifty a week and it is all your own except the agent's cut. Then you go up to seventy-five and a hundred. By that time you find you have about forty left for yourself. Then it goes up to a hundred and fifty. By this time you have thirty-five for yourself. By the time it gets to two hundred you have twenty-five left and a horde of people with their hands held out." She sighed and paused for breath.
"But that isn't all," Fay continued. "Your agent, your manager, your press agent, your maid all want to earn their money and they all find things for you to do. They endorse this or that product for you and you have to get up early after working all night to pose for photographs for advertisements. The telephone begins to ring all day. This and that paper want photographs, some amateur has an idea for a series, somebody knows the nicest man who wants to meet you. Then there are rehearsals for new numbers and all the time you are earning more and more, and more people are taking bigger and bigger cuts."
A chuckle came from Ferd. Fay looked at him and felt that he understood. She went on, encouraged by the darkness and the silence of the men.
"You want to sing real songs and all the time you are plugging numbers that sound like every other number, all for half a dozen people who are interested in making money out of them. And all the time you feel you want to sing real songs. Then suddenly one morning the sun shines through your window and it is Spring for everyone except you, and you realize that you are just a glamorous fly in a vast web with hundreds of spiders after you."
Ferd laughed again. "So, if you have any sense you get up, slip out, and take the plane to Montreal."
"That's just what I did, and I'm still all muddled up."

THE next morning promised a hot day. A blue haze was hovering over the woods below the house and the distance was lost in mist.
Peggy leapt out of bed determined not to miss a single instant of the weekend.
"Where are you going?" said a sleepy voice from the other bed.
"To swim before breakfast," said Peggy, smiling innocently.
"Well, behave yourself," murmured Myra, shutting her eyes again. "And if I find you making eyes at that agent again I'll push him into the lake."

NTSTC Co-eds Favor Cool Cotton Styles

Denton Texas.—Anne Calhoun of Dallas makes a saucy gardener as she leans against a wheelbarrow and shows off her crisp cotton pinafore, a star of the annual Cotton Frock style show held at the North Texas State Teachers College this week.

The parade of cool cotton styles sponsored by the NTSTC Girls' Forum to make the campus cotton-conscious and to stimulate purchase of clothes manufactured from Texas cotton. At the style exhibit, co-ed models showed 1942 cottons in play clothes, street dresses, and formal wear as a climax to the week-long campus Cotton Week.
