Flies Kill Many People Each Year Health Head Says

AUSTIN, Tex. —Thousands of children and adults die every year from diseases carried by the fly. Typhoid, tuberculosis, summer complaint, cholera, intestinal diseases, and frequently death follow closely in the trail of the common house fly.

"The control of the fly menace comes at the top of the list of necessary public health measures which should be applied by every city and community in the state," urged Doctor Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer.

"The most effective measure for control is to prevent breeding," Doctor Cox said. "Flies breed in filth, and about eight days are required to complete a life cycle. During her life time of several months, one house fly lays from 600 to 1000 eggs. Thus it can easily be seen that in a season which usually begins in the spring of the year, the descendants from one fly number countless thousands.

"To eliminate flies, the breeding places must be destroyed. Manure piles, garbage, and other organic filth furnish the requirements of warmth, moisture, and food necessary for the propagation of the fly. Flies should be kept from contact with food or drink or utensils in which such food and drink are prepared and served. Likewise, they should be kept from access to privy vaults where they pick up infections, which they later spread to humans by contact with the food and drink, and by unwashed hands and utensils.

"See that your windows, doors, and porches are screened so that the stray fly from some careless neighbor will not molest your family. See that your grocer keeps meat, vegetables, and fruit screened from flies.

"Organize health measures to destroy the breeding places, control the flies' access to your home and food, and establish standards of cleanliness in your community that will eliminate the fly."

Coast Guard Is Offering Positions To Enlist Men

The United States Coast Guard Recruiting office, 1011 Electric building, Fort Worth, headquarters for Coast Guard recruiting for the Eighth Naval District, announces changes in its requirements for entering the Coast Guard Reserve, both in the enlisted status and applicants for officers training school.

The age limit of enlisting in the service has been changed to include all men 17 to 55 years of age, whereas it formerly included only men 17 to 35. The monthly beginners pay of apprentice seaman has been raised to $50, whereas it formerly was $21 per month.

The requirements for Reserve officers training candidates have been relaxed to include the following qualifications: Married men, now, as well as single, may apply if their wives consent. The minimum height requirement has been lowered from 5 feet 6 inches to 5 feet 5 inches. There has been a slight let down in the educational requirements in that an applicant must have had at least one semester course in mathematics of college grade and one semester credit in trigonometry from either high school or college. Previously, a full year of mathematics of college grade was required. Candidates must not be less than 20 years of age and not more than 30 at the date of appointment, and must have at least a Bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university.

Applications for enlistment, or more information concerning the Coast Guard can be obtained from the Coast Guard Recruiting Office located at 1011 Electric Building, Fort Worth, Texas.

CORRESPONDENT TELLS OF HIS EXPERIENCES IN THE BATTLE OF MALTA

Twenty-four hours aboard a British warship of a Mediterranean convoy under attack by Axis planes provided Henry T. Gorrell with more hair-raising action than anything in this veteran United Press correspondent's career covering world news beats.

Gorrell once was threatened with execution in Spain by a Moorish firing squad, he was with the British during their last ditch stand in Greece. But Gorrell, in a letter to colleagues on the United Press cable desk in New York, said all his other adventures were pale by the sea battle which he watched from the flag deck of a British cruiser.

Gorrell was the only correspondent with the allied convoy which ran the gauntlet of German planes Italian motor torpedo boats, Italian warships and Axis submarines June 13 to 15, to carry vital supplies to Malta.

"I accepted an opportunity for that assignment with a naval unit based on an undisclosed mission," Gorrell said in describing his experiences, "and soon learned that I was to see even more action than I had bargained for."

Gorrell was assigned to Admiral W. G. Tennant's cruiser and was informed that his "battle station" would be the flag deck of the vessel.

"I still had no definite knowledge of our mission as we nosed out into the Mediterranean," Gorrell said, "but the admiral's guarded remarks gave me to understand that he hoped to come to grips with the Italian fleet. He was most cordial, and in reply to my questions, promised that I'd probably have a box seat for some excitement."

A flag lieutenant checked Gorrell's equipment.

"I was issued an anti flash hood—a fire proof covering to protect me against flames from explosion or incendiaries—fire proofed gauntlets, steel helmet and one of the cumbersome but comforting life preservers which have become known to sailors as "Mae Wests."

Gorrell told how enemy aircraft spotted the fleet units the first night out.

"It gives you a decidedly uncomfortable feeling," he said, "to hear airplanes circling above you in the dark to see them drop occasional flares and to know that the enemy is keeping tabs on you until daylight and available bases make possible to attack."

"The real nature of our assignment was revealed the following day when the ship's captain, a veteran of Crete, stepped to the ship's loud speaker system and informed us:

"We may face the entire strength of our enemies in air, surface and undersea craft, but we shall hit them hard. We are out to help Malta. From now on every man must snatch sleep only as he can."

Gorrell's letter told how he then stood on the flag deck and watched the ship strip for battle.

"Everything unnecessary, and everything inflammable was thrown overboard."

"The first attack came that afternoon. I watched ten JU 88's appear as specks on the horizon and then bear down on us. An officer standing beside me remark-

A Few Mistakes Could Throw U. S. At Nazis Mercy

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. —A few mistakes, mediocrity in command at critical moments, and apathy in the masses would throw us at the mercy of the Nazi and Jap, supreme court justice Robert H. Jackson told members of the State Bar of Texas at their annual dinner last night.

Jackson accused the Democratic peoples of acting with unaccountable tardiness and lethargy, and said that winning the war must over shadow every other consideration.

He urged that Americans take a more active interest in the history of their country to counteract the Nazi taunt that the fires of Democratic enthusiasms are burned out. Enlightened public opinion is necessary for intelligent government, he said.

ed that this was a fine way to spend Sunday.

A red flag was hoisted warning of the attack and calling all hands to battle stations."

"The bombers came over at high altitude dropping bombs in salvo for half an hour. From my vantage point aboard the cruiser I could see the fleet zig-zagging in all directions amid geysers of the exploding bombs. The destroyers seemed literally to be spinning around on their sterns. There were no hits and the red flag was lowered signaling the end of that attack."

That one seemed bad enough, with the roar of exploding bombs merging with the din of our anti-aircraft fire and depth charges. But a second attack, an hour later, proved even worse. Dive bombers were sent over for the second thrust, and I rushed back to the bridge. I learned then that the penalty for trying to see so much action all at one time is a stiff neck. But I forgot that when I saw two Stukas plunge into the sea after direct hits by our anti-aircraft fire, and several others spout smoke and streak away toward their bases in Crete. During this action one of the merchantmen in our convoy was hit and began to settle into the ed on the lookouts, navigators and water. Our destroyers stood by to pick up survivors.

"The attack continued throughout the night. There was a wave of high flying Dorniers, whose bombs fell close enough to drench me with water as they exploded, then a new attack by dive bombers, joined this time by E-boats and submarines. One torpedo was sighted coming at us from starboard. I stood on the bridge watching its silver wake in the high light and was conscious of wondering whether this was it. But the cruiser heeled over sharply and the 'tin fish' missed us by a matter of feet."

The final attack, Gorrell said was made by E-boats at a.m. and involved another narrow miss by a torpedo.

"Looking back on that assignment," he added, "I was most impressed by the hardships imposed (Continued on page 3)

Eight Americans Failed To Return From July 4 Raid

LONDON, England, July 7 —The names of eight American fliers who failed to return from their mission in the Army's initial attack on Nazi airdromes Independence Day, were made public today, with the news that Maj. Gen. Carl Spaatz had been named commander-in-chief of the United States Air Forces in the European theatre.

War Shortage Of Teachers To Mean Crowded Rooms

AUSTIN, Tex. —The war-created shortage of teachers in Texas schools is certain to mean more pupils per teacher and less possibility for individual instruction.

To offset that certainty, a University of Texas project has been set up to enlist schools in an experiment in individual- versus-group instruction. Dr. Hob Gray, professor of education, has announced.

The project is a part of a five year research program in improvement of classroom instruction, and is co-sponsored by the Texas Association of School Administrators.

More than 50 schools have already voiced interest in the project, Dr. Gray revealed, and it is hoped that at least 100 will be enlisted before the fall term begins.

Method of conducting the experiment will be to set up in each class two well-balanced groups of students. One will be taught by the traditional group method, while the others will receive individual attention. Individual and group conferences with the teacher will be arranged, and students will be encouraged to study subjects in which they are most keenly interested.

Results of the experiment will be published next spring, Dr. Gray said. The project has been approved by the state teachers association, which fears that the present teacher shortage will cause the abandonment of individual instruction methods.

The Home Talent Program Is On A Big Comeback

AUSTIN, Tex. —The home talent program is on its way back to the center of the American recreation stage, a panel of speakers discussing "Defense Recreation" declared recently at the University of Texas.

Recreation is rapidly becoming concentrated in the home, neighborhood, and community, the speakers said, and is expected to remain there for the duration.

Speakers on the panel were Misses Bernece Hooper, visiting professor of physical education, Dr. D. A. Zanzig, professor of music, Gordon Minter, assistant professor of drama, and James Moll, instructor of drama.

"There may be laws against sight-seeing buses and against using tires for non-essential purposes, but there are no law as yet against using your feet," Miss Hooper commented. "American people can learn to go places on foot again, and to enjoy the walk."

Community or neighborhood programs were suggested as the best means of bringing people together. A "cafeteria type" program, in which a variety of activities are kept going, was advocated.

"We don't have to have experts in every field of recreation activity to keep community programs going," Minter asserted. "The object of recreation is to have fun, and neighborhood baseball games or dramatics or sing-songs need not rival professional performances to be good recreation."

The speakers brought out the point that communities without municipal recreation departments can still have worthwhile programs by using volunteer workers.

British Columns, Supported By American Built Tanks And British And American Planes Break Up Axis Columns And Force Withdrawal Of Southern Flank

The Nazi high command today claimed capture of the Don river city of Voronezh and a successful attack on an Allied Arctic convoy in blows at the Russian Front, but in Egypt the Axis columns were forced back again on the desert front west of El Alamein.

An advance of about 125 miles from the Kursk area to the Don River by masses of German infantry, tanks and artillery was acknowledged by Moscow and it was emphasized that the Russian position on the Voronezh Front was critical.

Late dispatches from the other fighting fronts showed—

Egypt—

British imperials, aided by American and British planes and fresh American-built tank units, broke up Axis columns and forced the enemy to pull back his southern flank west of El Alamein.

There was still no decisive change in the battle front, however.

Arctic—

German claims that an American heavy cruiser and 28 of 39 merchant ships carrying supplies to the Red Army were sunk en route to Murmansk were probably exaggerated.

Russia—

Politics Versus National Security

This is a highly controversial topic. It is easy to get a hot argument on any of its several sides. But those on the inside, with no personal or political axes to grind, say that the sooner we institute nation-wide gasoline rationing, the quicker we can win this war.

The story is that all the best informed administrators, up to and including President Roosevelt, realize we are wasting irreplaceable rubber every hour we permit automobiles to operate for non-essential purposes.

They know that a tire burned out in the midwest, southwest or far west—where gasoline is plentiful—has been diverted from war use just as definitely and finally as a tire worn out on the eastern seaboard.

They are convinced that it is silly even to think about getting enough synthetic rubber for two or three years to relieve the situation.

Through general surveys, as well as from isolated emergency situations, they have obtained evidence that a crisis is on the way in the transportation of workmen to war industry plants. The tire stockpile is utterly inadequate to do more than defer production stoppages based upon this cause.

We have neither the time, the manpower, the materials nor the money with which to construct sufficient housing within walking distance of war plants, and move there the workers who now depend on automobiles to get to and from work.

Perhaps the reason the President has not already ordered national-wide rationing of gasoline, in order to prevent general use of tires, is that this is an election year.

Mr. Roosevelt is not running for re-election, of course. But all members of the House and a third of the senators must face their constituents in November. They may have convinced the President that for their sakes he must delay such presumably unpopular moves as nation-wide gasoline rationing until the votes have been cast.

We, on the outside, can only accept the facts obtainable from the insiders, so long as they stand up against every available crosscheck. The menace of the rubber shortage meets such tests.

On that basis, with the utmost of sympathy for the oil industry and the nation's motorists we do not see how Mr. Roosevelt can weigh the fortunes of individuals, who like being members of Congress, against the nation's security in this war.

If the rubber situation is as critical as Washington says, and as we believe, we do not see how nation-wide rationing of gasoline, purely as a measure of rubber conservation, can be longer delayed.

"Those men who manned the guns and kept our ship running on what seemed the brink of hell appeared to be super-human," Gorrell said, "and yet they proved themselves very human indeed when, during attacks that seemed to offer little hope of surviving the avalanche of bombs, torpedoes and gun fire, they hummed familiar ditties such as that British favorite: 'She was poor but she was honest, victim of a rich man's whim.'"

How to Make Your Iron Last Longer *

Electric irons, like many other household appliances, are out of production due to the war. You'll want to take good care of the one you have so that it will last for the duration.

Keep the iron cord plugged in tightly, for a loose plug makes the contact points corrode and lessens the efficiency of your iron. If your iron is the non-automatic type, be careful not to let it get too hot and be sure to disconnect it if left unused more than a few minutes.

If your electric iron doesn't work properly, take it to an electric shop for repairs. You may be able to save money and you'll also be cooperating in the program to conserve metal.

WILLIAMS Rebuilds The Radio On A Ferry Plane Despite An Injury

By United Press
LONDON.—Despite the fact the blood was flowing freely from his injured hand, Alexander Sutton, 19, of Glasgow, a wireless operator on board an American bomber being ferried to Britain, dismantled his radio when it broke down and reassembled it unaided.

The bomber was about half way across the North Atlantic when the radio went wrong. It was midnight, and there was little light by which to make repairs.

Knowing that the captain of the plane depended on getting wireless bearings, Sutton decided to dismantle the whole set.

He had memorized the blueprint and he started in almost pitch darkness to carry out the difficult task.

After two and a half hours, he of Commerce, Breckenridge; Doris Perlstein, Globe, Ranger; Glenn Jochim-on, Modern Dry Cleaners, Eastland; Mary Croom, Hamills, Ranger; Estelle Williams of Ranger, Community Public Service of Ranger, Gwendolyn Tanner, Paramount Hotel, Ranger; Ellen Rains, Dunns Hatchery, Cisco.

got the set going again, but the captain was astonished to see the boy saturated in blood. He had gashed his hand while dismantling the set and the fact that the bomber had been flying at over 20,000 feet had caused the blood to spurt freely from the wound.

The sleeping car was uncomfortably overheated as the Newfoundland train sped through the sub-zero night. It was blowing into a raging blizzard in the heart of the Toppals section of the 547-mile trail from St. John's to Port-aux-Basques, sailing point for the Cabot Strait crossing to Canada.

That afternoon a cable had arrived from Ottawa informing him that the State University, located just outside Chicago, had wired that it was believed the man whose identity the department sought had been a star athlete there prior to graduation in 1929.

Dawson decided to try another cigarette. He got into his dressing gown and slippers in the cramped quarters and weaved his way down the bumping aisle between green-curtained berths to the small combination washing and smoking compartment at the end.

The swinging door separating the smoking compartment from the rest of the car proved inward with a cold draught evidently caused by the door at the far end of the car being opened.

Dawson hoped that it was the conductor—he'd have a talk about the heating system. But fully a minute passed by and nobody appeared. The door into the car had opened, there was no doubt about it. Impatiently he stood up and looked through the glass down the aisle.

Suddenly Dawson was on the alert. Down near the end of the car a muffled man was pulling apart the curtains of a lower berth in stealthy fashion—and it was Dawson's berth!

For a split second he caught a flash of white face as the figure hurriedly withdrew from the empty berth and took a quick look toward the smoking compartment before wheeling and rushing out.

Dawson was yards behind and the chase was difficult due to the motion of the train. Between two cars he lost one of his slippers on the snowy platform but kept going on one bare foot. Abruptly he halted three cars beyond his own. The man had vanished—either he had slipped into a certain berth already passed or was in a berth still further back.

Returning to his car, Dawson went directly to the berth he had occupied and switched on the light. He whistled softly through the monotonous clackety-click of the wheels.

His pillow was badly slashed by what must have been a sharp knife.

"Now what in hell was that for?" Dawson muttered to himself.

The next day he kept strictly to himself aboard the train. This behavior was prompted by thinking things over during the early morning hours following the knife-slashing episode. He realized that in the dim light he hadn't seen anything that might prove a clue to the would-be killer's identity.

If he acted like a person looking for somebody the following day it would only serve to put Mr. X on his guard.

There was only one thing to do. Act indifferently in the hope that it would mislead the killer to try again.

However, nothing unusual happened during the long day as the Overland Express puffed through the bleak country. It was running four hours late as a result of the long fight against the blizzard.

Port-aux-Basques, a lonesome little fishing village now ten times busier than in pre-war days, was reached shortly before midnight. The train pulled in directly onto the wharf beside which a fleet of fishing boats, their sailless masts towering forlornly above the tops of the cars, rested at anchor. Down the wharf, waiting for the passenger and cargo load from the train, was the ice-breaker Caribou, a sturdy veteran of many rugged battles on the turbulent Cabot Strait.

THE railway company had reserved a cabin for Dawson and he went to it after hurriedly reporting to the purser. It had four bunks, two at right angles and two parallel to the door. He nodded approvingly at the lay-out, then stepped out on deck. There was a dark corner directly above the deck onto which the gangplank led and he wanted to study the passengers as they came aboard.

It took less than half an hour and Dawson found grim humor in the fact that one of those passengers was apparently boarding the boat to murder him yet he could only guess at which one or ones it could be. But impending mental pictures of them all might come in handy later on.

About 1:30, Dawson wandered into the corner of the lounge where the purser was completing his endless forms for the company's records and the Canadian immigration authorities. A group of American and Canadian soldiers homeward bound on leave had started a poker game while another was blowing lazy tunes out of a mouth organ.

"Pardon me, Mr. Purser," said Dawson, "I was expecting to meet up with some old friends tonight—has anybody asked for the whereabouts of my cabin?" He gave his name.

The purser shook his head. "No sir—nobody has asked for you. But it might not have been necessary—your pal or pals could have seen your name on this big sheet and noticed the cabin number beside it."

Dawson nodded. "Uh-huh, that's probably what happened." Mr. X would hardly have done anything so risky as to ask for his victim's cabin number.

With every sense alert, the investigator lighted his pipe, walking slowly and deliberately down the passageway towards his cabin.

The Caribou had cast off and was already grinding into the ice with strong, tireless luges. From a nearby cabin came sounds of some poor landlubber in distress after the first few rolls.

At his cabin door, Dawson paused, opened it just enough to switch on the cabin light and pushed the door, meanwhile bending down to pick up his lighter which he had purposely dropped. With one fast movement of his head, his eyes swept through the interior of the cabin and up and down the passageway . . . nobody anywhere.

Inside the cabin, Dawson shoved a small suit case beneath the blankets of the lower bunk parallel to the door. It wasn't enough to form the shape of a sleeping man and he picked up the blanket rolled at the bottom of the other lower berth. As he did so, a package dropped onto the cabin floor. Quickly he picked it up and read his name printed in bold, black ink letters.

Gingerly Dawson unwrapped it and found a cardboard box. He lifted the lid and looked at the contents . . . a sudden nausea rushing over him.

It was a human hand—hacked off at the wrist. But what left his stomach feeling troubled was the horrible realization that he recognized that hand beyond any shadow of doubt.

The one badly twisted "baseball" knuckle and the partially twisted one told Dawson that hand had belonged to the hanged Lemoy Stabler!

McNutt Manifesto Fails to Move Manpower; Plant Site Board Has Transportation Blues

BY PETER EDSON
NEA Service Washington Correspondent

SOLVING the problem of how to move not only industrial but agricultural workers, as well, is one of the biggest of the stumbling blocks over which the War Manpower Commission is trying to drag its load. On May 21, WMC Chairman McNutt announced, with a flourish, an eight-point program "calling for immediate action." It was said these directives "would be helpful in focusing and co-ordinating the activities of the various government agencies... if the people of this nation would co-operate fully with their government."

After sounding off in this noble fashion, the Manpower Commission discovered they had no money to move migrant workers, and the Office of Defense Transportation didn't have any money, too. Thus, things are stymied. And ODT has not received the directive which WMC hasn't written.

ODT got a little preliminary sounding out of the railroads, and found the carriers would be glad to haul workers at the regular coach rates of 1.65 cents per mile in the south and 2.2 cents per mile in the north.

So everything is in a beautiful jam of status quo.

If the Plant Site Board had its job to do over again, a lot of the war production factories probably wouldn't be located where they are, because no one foresaw the rubber shortage and the resulting problem of transporting workers from home to job and back again.

Ford's huge Willow Run bomber assembly plant outside Detroit is the best case in point. All brains agreed the working force would get itself back and forth in private automobiles, using a beautiful 4-lane highway to Ypsilanti. But along comes the rubber crisis, and look what happens!

The Michigan Central railroad, which runs right past the plant, can't carry workers because it's too busy carrying war freight.

The Federal Public Housing Authority has to rush plans for 17 new projects, near the plant, to shelter some 20,000 families who will have to move closer to the job because by next year there simply won't be any way to get them to work except on foot or by short-haul busline.

One emergency bus system between Willow Run and Detroit has been running its buses half empty because workmen don't want to ride a bus to work as long as there is an ounce of gas in the tank, an ounce of rubber on the rims.

East Texans Make Good As Soldiers

LONGVIEW, Tex.—East Texans are making good soldiers in the 302nd Ordnance Regiment at Camp Sutton, North Carolina, according to Hubert M. Harrison, manager of the East Texas Chamber of Commerce, who just recently returned from a visit to his son, Lieut. Moulton B. Harrison, in camp.

"It was like a little bit of Texas set down in North Carolina out at Camp Sutton near the town of Monroe," Mr. Harrison said. "The men seemed in fine condition and spirit and rearin' to go. There is room in the 302nd Ordnance Regiment for about 235 mechanics and 180 men experienced in handling warehouse and machinery parts, clerks, typists and filling station men. The outfit was organized at Dallas by the National Automobile Dealers Association.

Lieut. Col. C. M. Johnson, formerly of Marshall, commander of the 3rd Battalion, told me that they were anxious to fill the outfit with Texans who would feel at home with their buddies from this state.

"Most of the 3rd battalion under Lieut. Col. Johnson were volunteers from Texas. Enlisted men are automobile mechanics and machinists. Officers are mostly automobile men and oil machinery men. There are some good places open in noncommissioned ratings. Col. W. R. Slaughter, regimental commander, spoke very highly of the spirit and efficiency of the East Texas soldiers.

"Any East Texan desiring to enlist in the 302nd Ordnance Regiment should apply to Lieut. P. D. Mitchell, formerly of Waco, whose office is at 904 Burt Building, Dallas."

Sweden has suspended motor coach transportation on Sundays to conserve tires, according to the Department of Commerce.

The Department of Commerce suggests it is essential that each manufacturer of war goods have a blue print of exactly what he will do immediately following the war.

The Payoff

NEW YORK.—No fantasy, this. J. Reid Spencer, the 70-year-old concert pianist whose misfortune it is to live near Ebbebs Field, has won a tremendous victory. Mr. Spencer, who hauled the Brooklyn management to court to compel it to cease the pregame organ music, has received assurances that Gladys Gooding will hereafter play pianissimo. This has caused quite a ripple on the Gowanus.

We take you to our favorite Flatbush pub, where the following animated conversation takes place:
JOE: I hold de Dodgers am going to play pianissimo?
MOE: Never hold de bum. Can he hit as good as Medwick?
JOE: Pianissimo ain't no ball player. Dat's music for Gladys on de organ.
MOE: Oh, I gets it. Gladys ain't gonna play de organ. She's gonna play de pianissimo. Dat's a little pianer.
JOE Naw. Some guy named Spencer was berling about de organ music. So de Bums promised to play concert music. Stuff by Methroven, Hams, Hidin' and some other guys.
MOE: Which one of dem Bums wrote de Jaisey Bounce? Gladys can sure use her left on dat baby.
JOE: I dunno, but what do you think of dat bum Spencer complainin' about de music? He must be a Giant fan.
MOE: Yeh, sounds like a Terry man to me. Dose peepul in New York is crazy.
Next week: East Lynne.

LEGAL NOTICE IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS, ABILENE DIVISION.

IN THE MATTER OF EASTLAND FREE SCHOOL INCORPORATION, EASTLAND COUNTY, DEBTOR.
No. 1924 in Bankruptcy.

PUBLICATION ORDER
NOW, on the 20th day of June A. D., 1942 came on to be considered the Petition of the Eastland Free School Incorporation, of Eastland County, State of Texas, an independent school district, Petitioner in the above numbered and entitled cause. The Court having considered the pleadings and papers filed herewith, and being duly advised, and having, by order entered concurrently herewith, approved said Petition as properly filed under Section 401, et seq., of Chapter 9, Title 11, United States Code, and it appearing to the Court that the proposed plan of composition affects materially the rights of the creditors holding tax supported bonds of Petitioner, and it further appearing to the Court that the following order should be entered.

IT IS THEREFORE, CONSIDERED, ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED BY THE COURT AS FOLLOWS:

That all such creditors of the Eastland Free School Incorporation, of Eastland County, State of Texas, are commanded to appear and file their sworn claims in this cause in person or by duly authorized agent on or before the 28th day of August, A. D., 1942, at ten o'clock (10:00) A. M.; that said proof of claim shall each set forth the name and address of the claimant, shall identify the bonds held by such creditors by name of issue, number, denomination and maturity date; shall describe all matured and unpaid interest coupons held by such creditor appertaining to such bonds and what if any, security is held by such creditor for such indebtedness.

All such creditors of the Petitioner, Eastland Free School Incorporation of Eastland County, State of Texas, are hereby notified that this cause is set for hearing at ten o'clock (10:00) A. M. upon the 28th day of August, A. D., 1942 at Dallas, Texas, at which time and place and at any adjournments of said hearing, the Court will pass upon and determine the issue presented by the Petition and answer which may be filed controverting any material allegations attached to the said Petition, and whether said plan of composition is fair, equitable and for the best interest of creditors, and does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any creditor or class of creditors, and whether a said plan of composition complies with the provisions of the pertinent statutes and has been accepted and approved as required by said statutes and whether all payments to be made by the Petitioner for services or expenses incident to the plan of composition have been fully disclosed and are reasonable and that the compensating agent is not to be compensated directly or indirectly by both the Petitioner and the creditors and whether the offer of the plan and its acceptance are in good faith and whether the Petitioner is authorized by law to take all action necessary to be taken by it to carry out the plan and all other matters in connection with said Petition and proposed plan of composition which may be presented to the court.

DONE AT DALLAS, TEXAS, this 20th, day of June, A. D., 1942.
