Both Parties Abandon Old 'Laissez Faire'

About the time that the tumult and the shouting die in Cleveland, we are apt to discover a woebegone and forsaken human being perching disconsolately on the steps of the convention hall.

For one thing seems clear, as the preliminary stages of the presidential campaign are gotten out of the way: The old conception of an America in which government kept its hands completely off the machinery...

It really has been a good many years since we gave anything more than lip service to this conception. We have had the Interstate Commerce Act for quite a while...

But this year's campaign throws the fact into high relief.

This is not to say that there are not violent differences between the parties, and among different leaders within the parties, as to the extent to which the government should interfere and protect.

But the point is that practically no one in either party is speaking for a return to that old conception of a government which had neither the right nor the power to interfere in the economic lives of its citizens.

Consider, for a case in point, the perennial farm problem.

One party has one solution for it, the other party has another. Both of these solutions may be just a little hard to understand, in view of the average politician's weakness for trying to do indirectly what the courts won't let him do directly...

The point is that both parties agree that this problem is a responsibility of government which government must meet.

They offer us, not a choice between action and no action, but a choice between two kinds of action.

This might be a minor point, except for the fact that we tend to pitch our arguments in the old key. We talk of "rugged individualism," for instance, as if it were possible for us to get back to the early days of the republic...

The campaign would be much more sensible if we realized clearly that we just can't do that, and wouldn't want to if we could.

The great problem of the day is the problem of the extent to which we can preserve our individualism in the face of an unavoidable growth of governmental activity.

Until we recognize the problem for exactly what it is, we won't have much chance of solving it intelligently.

Michigan motorists are warned to leave accident victims at the scene until police arrive. Until then, though, it would be considerate to visit them daily.

WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—If any of the kids start asking, "Hey, mama, what is politics?" during the conventions, you might give them a little lesson by telling what has been happening in Louisiana, domain of the late Huey Long.

Almost unnoticed, the government moved the other day to dismiss criminal income tax evasion charges against Seymour Weiss, chief henchman of Long, and four other Long politicians in New Orleans.

Considering all the grim and earnest effort the administration applied in its attempt to break up Huey's machine by those income tax prosecutions—including the hiring of such men as former Prohibition Administrator Amos W. Woodcock and ex-Gov. Dan Moody of Texas as special prosecutors—it is interesting now to hear the explanation of the abandonment given by some of the late Huey's heirs.

The administration, they say simply, has been very anxious for "harmony." In any event, the end of the criminal income tax cases comes on top of a remarkable succession of decapitations of federal officials who represented the pro-administration group of Democrats and were appointed against the late Huey's bitter opposition.

One by one, Jim Farley is knocking off the men who a year ago were carrying the Roosevelt banner in Louisiana and is replacing them with politicians designated by the Long machine.

THE Long people explain that the bitter fight between Long and Roosevelt was Huey's personal feud, that lacking a great lead, they're powerless to carry it off anyway, and that they're quite content to dominate Louisiana without looking about for most fields to conquer, as Huey did.

So the Louisiana delegation will be whooping it up for Roosevelt at the Democratic convention, the Long machine politicians have gotten all about Huey's proposed third party, and the two Louisiana senators, John H. Overton and Mrs. Long, have been playing ball with the administration.

And, by way of returning the compliments, the administration is replacing its former loyal appointees.

HUEY'S so-called political heir professes not to be especially interested in the Rev. Gerald L. Smith's proposed merger of the "share-the-wealth" movement with the Townsend movement.

Protective copyrights on "Share the Wealth" and "Share Our Wealth" were taken out by Earl F. Christenberry, former secretary to Huey and now secretary to Allen J. Ellender, Huey's former speaker in the Louisiana legislature, who will come here next January for a six-year senatorial term, is pledged to raise the "Share the Wealth" torch and carry on, although no one suggests he will be anywhere near as effective as Huey was.

NEW YORK.—Wild Bill Melhorn calls golf a game of contradictions. Melhorn's bunk is spilled by golf theorists on the subject of so-called correct technique than is written about all other games combined.

Take your contentment, and the latter is inborn. No teacher can coordinate your reflexes. In golf it means that there must not be a tense muscle in your body when you swing. It's a matter of temperament, I suppose.

There are no definite right or wrong way of doing anything in the swing, providing the hands function properly at impact. This accounts for the wide difference in styles of the stars as regards uptake, arc of swing, position at finish, etc.
