Rugged Individualism Is Taken Seriously

One of the worst bits of luck the United States has had since the war is the fact that the term "rugged individualism" has become the catch-line for a bad-natured laugh. The expression has been used by the wrong people and in the wrong way; so much so that when you try to make use of it now, the ordinary man at once suspects that you are weeping over the plight of some poor, put-upon billion-dollar industrial giant which isn't able to pay its president a bonus of more than a half million for his year's work. But when you clear away all this accretion of torism, the term remains an excellent thing. It stands for something we have always prized highly in the American character; a quality of sturdiness and independence which had led Americans to believe doggedly that they could work out their own salvation without relying on someone else to carry their burdens.

This trait is about as much work keeping as anything we possess. And it is encouraging to see it blossoming, of all places, on a co-operative farm in a poor corner of the Mississippi cotton belt.

Here is a farm where 24 southern families are making an experiment in co-operative effort. These families came from the bottom of the heap—ex-sharecroppers and down-and-out tenants, who had reached the stage where they might be expected to go running to the nearest relief station for permanent places on the dole.

Sherwood Eddy is the man who is guiding this group back to self-support and sturdy citizenship. The little group has bought its land at $5 an acre. Getting free lumber and the use of a sawmill, it is putting up houses at a cost of $33 apiece. As money becomes available, it hopes to buy the nucleus of a small dairy herd, establish hog and poultry farms, and get some looms with which the members can weave cloth.

For the present, of course, the project is being supported by voluntary contributions from outside sources. Ultimately, if plans work out as Mr. Eddy hopes, it will be entirely self-supporting; more than that, it will establish a new way of life, with its members standing steadily on their own feet, meeting their own problems, paying their own way, and lifting themselves out of insolvency and dependency to self-respecting citizenship.

It may seem strange to find rugged individualism on a co-operative farm; yet that, in its purest form, is what this venture is. These southerners are not asking the erection of a great, paternal government to see that they don't go hungry. Given a little help just at the start, they aim to take care of that themselves.

They are putting the old American spirit to work in a new way. In their work there is a broad hint that the ordinary American will be fully able to work out his own salvation if he is given half a chance.

People Paying For Client Placement Opponents' Drive On Farms Urged McDonald Charges

HENDERSON, June 6.—"I want to tell you—not about an old spinning wheel in the corner, dreaming dreams of the long, long ago—but about a big, roll-top desk that is closed in the State Land Office," said W. H. (Bill) McDonald of Eastland County in a speech here Saturday in his campaign for State Land Commissioner. "The stack of mail grows higher and higher day by day and the dust gets a little deeper in the unoccupied chair. There is a spider at work and, in just a few more days, he will have completed the task of spinning a web clear across that old-fashioned desk in the corner." "The man who ought to be there is the chief deputy and he is the first man in the history of Texas to hang on a fat, appointive office while making a race for public office." "Instead of being at that desk looking after the interests of the school children of Texas, he is out shaking hands and making political speeches." McDonald pointed out that as chief deputy his opponent draws a larger salary than the land commissioner. The speaker reiterated his opposition to the use of convicts in drilling for oil on state lands.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON WITH RODNEY DUTCHER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON—Senator Borah has decided that he won't campaign for Governor Landon if the latter is nominated for the presidency. Something may happen to change Borah's mind. But it will have to be something more than the recent overtures from Landon representatives who have invited the Idaho senator to help write the Republican platform. Hoover roped in Borah in 1928 by giving him virtually a free hand with the platform. Planks covering dry law enforcement, corruption, and publicity for campaign expenditures were inserted as the senator desired them. The farm plank finally adopted incorporated enough of Borah's ideas to cause him to support it on the convention floor. The plank prepared by Borah which wasn't accepted was the one condemning the Coolidge administration's Latin American policy. But Borah now feels platform planks aren't very nourishing. He became the chief G. O. P. campaign orator in 1928, but after four years of Hoover he was so disappointed that he took no part in the 1932 fight. He now is said to regard Landon as a candidate backed by the du Ponts, Hearst and reactionary eastern bosses. He expects to "take a walk" and keep out of the presidential campaign. He has no thought of endorsing Roosevelt, who he regards as an enemy of the Constitution. The senator isn't committing himself publicly, however, and the Landon forces haven't given

In this column answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people. As evidence of good faith inquiries must give their names and addresses, but only their initials will be printed. Address inquiries to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.
Q. To whom does the Elizabeth Ney Art Museum at Austin belong? B. A. L., Taylor.
A. To the Texas Fine Arts Association, of which Mrs. Roger Roberdeau, Austin, is secretary.
Q. What will be the height of the San Jacinto battlefield monument? R. T. L., Nordheim.
A. 564 feet, which is nine feet higher than the Washington monument at Washington, D. C.
Q. Where was Springfield and what became of it? R. O. G., Round Rock.
A. It was half way between the present towns of Mexia and Groesbeck, near the dam now being constructed on the Navasota river in Fort Parker State Park. When Limestone county was organized in 1846, it was made the county seat and remained such until 1873, when the county capital was moved to Groesbeck following the building of the H. & T. C. railroad, which left Springfield off its route. Once a prosperous village, its inhabitants have moved to other places.
Q. Who was John C. Duval? R. G. L., Pontotoc.
A. A Kentuckian, who came to Texas late in 1835, with a company organized at Bardston, Ky., to aid Texas in its struggle with Mexico when war became evident. He was with the Fannin forces that surrendered near Goliad, but escaped the massacre of March 27, 1836, and later wrote "The Adventures of Big Foot Wallace," and "Early Times in Texas."

Race Shows More Than One Record Broken Recently

When technicians and research engineers had completed their checkup of the results of the Indianapolis motor car race of last Saturday, they found that more than one record had been broken. Louis Meyer established a new track record at 109 miles per hour and was the first man to chalk up three victories in this international speedway event. The next four cars to finish also broke the track record, established the previous year of more than 100 miles per hour. But what was of even greater importance to every motor car owner was the records of the performance of the cars. Tire safety and endurance and fuel economy were again demonstrated to be the outstanding benefits that will accrue to the average motorist from this supreme test of the stamina of automobile equipment. No better demonstration of the reasons justifying the confidence which these expert judges of motor car equipment place in Firestone tires could be given than the results of this race. Tearing along over the burning, rough brick track at speed, sometimes exceeding 120 miles an hour, Meyer and the other nine drivers to finish within the prize money, gave these tires much greater punishment than they could ever receive in many thousand miles of ordinary service without them showing any sign of failure. In fact, the same tires that took part in this grueling contest will be used again by many of the drivers in other races this year. Engineers say this annual speed test has contributed much to the peace of mind of the motor car owner as regards his tires for ordinary driving. Information and improvements made possible by study of tire performance under such grueling punishment and burning speeds has brought about developments that give the greatest protection against blowout and complete safety under all driving conditions. There was a time at Indianapolis when the tire performance was a great problem with the drivers. But for more than a decade, since Firestone developed Gum Dipping and the Balloon tire, race drivers have dismissed tire trouble as a subject to worry about. For many years now, not one of the cars using Firestone tires at Indianapolis has lost a second of time on account of tire difficulty. Drivers give full credit for the new records in speed and fewer accidents to Firestone tire developments. With the question of tire safety no longer a factor, drivers say their confidence and freedom from worry has greatly improved their driving ability and opportunities.

Awards In History Test to 59 Texans

AIR MAIL IN 1902 TRACED

OAKLAND, Cal.—Federal research workers have established that the second unofficial aerial mail route in the United States was established between Emeryville and Oakland in February, 1902. The aviator carried 1,000 pieces of mail and dropped them near the postoffice without landing.

"The Universal Car"

ONE NAME comes quickly to mind when you think of "The Universal Car." The description is distinctively Ford. No other car is used by so many millions of men and women in every part of the world. Everywhere it is the symbol of faithful service.

That has always been a Ford fundamental. Something new is constantly being added in the way of extra value. Each year the Ford has widened its appeal by increasing its usefulness to motorists.

Today's Ford V-8 is more than ever "The Universal Car" because it encircles the needs of more people than any other Ford ever built. It reaches out and up into new fields because it has everything you need in a modern automobile.

The Ford V-8 combines fine-car performance, comfort, safety, beauty and convenience with low first cost and low cost of operation and up-keep. It depreciates slowly because it is made to last. There is no other car like it.

Only the Ford V-8 Gives You These Fine-car Features

1. V-8 ENGINE PERFORMANCE	3. SUPER SAFETY
2. WITH ECONOMY	4. MECHANICAL BRAKES
5. SAFETY GLASS ALL AROUND	6. CENTER-POISE
7. AT NO EXTRA CHARGE	8. RIDING COMFORT

BEGIN HERE TODAY
GAIL EVERETT, ambitious to become a designer, comes to New York and—due to a stroke of luck—meets MADAME LIZETTE, proprietor of an exclusive shop. Madame proves temperamental and difficult to work for.

DEREK HARGREAVES, young artist, is interested in Gail, and offers her friendly advice. Presumably she sees RICK SEARLES, whose sister, ROSEMARY, was her roommate at school.

Meanwhile, in Arizona, MARK CHAPMAN, long a wanderer, returns to find his old home in the hands of the Travers Mining Co. He does not know the whereabouts of his piece, Gail, the girl who has become so important in representing the Travers company.

Gail goes with Derek to a reception at the home of the Traverses. MRS. MORITON, LUCILLE TRAVIS asks Derek to paint her portrait.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XVI
NATALIE PRESTON stopped at Gail's door and knocked, but received no answer. She knocked again and still there was no response. "I suppose some of the Searles have come for her," Natalie murmured rather bitterly. It was just like her cousin Mabs to telephone when Natalie was at dinner with Gail. Mabs had said she was at Grand Central station. Natalie had gone down to wait with her cousin between trains—she even stopped to eat dessert—and then Mabs had discovered that her train didn't leave until 4 o'clock!

Going to her room, Natalie took off her dress and slipped on a filmy negligee of chiffon and lace (she had bought it for a trifle at a sale in the store) and picked up the Sunday newspaper. She turned at once to the "Personal Notices." Why she always looked at them first she couldn't have told you. Yet there was something exciting in reading these curious ads that might mean a complete change in fortune for some unsuspecting man or woman. Carefully she looked at each one, inwardly commenting on them. Then she gave a queer, staccato-like cry as she read:

"Information wanted about Peter Everett or his heirs, formerly of Hudson View Gardens, New York. Suitable reward will be given by a friend. P. O. Box 11, downtown."

Then Natalie went to her desk and wrote an answer to the advertisement, dressed again and went outside to mail her letter.

"Did you notice this in the newspaper yesterday?" Giles Harding's secretary asked as she handed her employer a paragraph cut from the personal column.

The old lawyer took the clipping from her and read:

"Information wanted about

Peter Everett or his heirs, formerly of Hudson View Gardens, New York. Suitable reward will be given by a friend. P. O. Box 11, downtown."

"Well, what's the meaning of that, I wonder?"

"I've thought of several things, but of course it may just be that some old friend has got around to wondering why he hasn't heard from Peter Everett lately."

"Yes, but I think there's something more to it. I'll keep it here on my desk. Anything else interesting in the column?"

"No, nothing today."

"All right, thank you," and Giles Harding turned to his mail. But his thoughts were with the advertisement. Picking up the clipping, he suddenly decided to call Miss Cranston.

So he put through the call, and was surprised to learn that Gail Everett was now living and working in the city.

NATALIE'S letter reached its destination—the office of the Travers Mining and Development company. As the manager read it, he smiled rather grimly. Pressing a button that brought the office manager, he said as the handsome, well-dressed, middle-aged woman appeared, "I'd like to talk to you for a few minutes, Mrs. Barton. Just sit down."

"The fact of the matter is, the Travers Mining and Development finds it imperative to secure some land out west, but the owner has died, and we don't yet know about his heirs. I put an advertisement in yesterday's newspaper and have received this answer." He handed Mrs. Barton the letter Natalie had written.

"Evidently there are some heirs," Mrs. Barton commented, laying the letter on his desk.

"Yes. Now I want you to invite this woman to meet you at a hotel and ask her to lunch with you. Talk to her and get all the information you can, assure her that it is on account of friendship you are anxious to get in touch with Peter Everett's family. You understand what I mean?"

"Yes, I do."

"All right, Mrs. Barton. Now about the reward, I'd be willing to pay as much as $100 if you get the information, but of course you'll have to judge about that yourself. Perhaps it would be well to offer not more than $25 or this person, whoever she is, may become suspicious."

"Very well, I'll make an appointment and I'm sure I can find out all you want to know."

NATALIE was thankful that her mysterious correspondent had invited her to lunch at such a fashionable hotel. There was no likelihood of encounter. Gail there in the middle of the day. As she taxied across town Natalie had no misgivings about her errand.

So when Natalie entered the hotel she was not surprised when an attractive, middle-aged woman approached her. "Is this Miss Preston?" the woman asked in a pleasant voice.

"Yes, and you're Mrs. Barton?" Natalie exclaimed.

"Yes. I'm so glad to meet a friend of Peter Everett's."

"You know," she went on, when they had settled themselves at a small table, "I really hesitated to put that advertisement in the paper, for somehow I always feel as though those advertisements are for lost heirs, and of course I've no fortune for the Everetts." She smiled disarmingly.

"Well, I don't imagine Gail is looking for one."

"I'm going to tell you exactly why I advertised. Years ago my father and Peter Everett were quite friendly. My father is an artist, too, though he's quite an old man now, and an invalid. He often asks about his old friends, but after Peter Everett went abroad we lost all trace of him. Now, I'd like to be able to tell my father something about his old friend. Father spends so much time in bed and gets so tired of things, I'm always thinking of surprises for him."

"How sweet of you. I'm sorry to tell you, though, that Mr. Everett has been dead for three years." Natalie graphically repeated the story Gail had told about her father.

"Oh, that's too bad! I must keep this from my father. It's better to let him think he's still traveling in Europe than that he's gone. But hadn't he any children?" she asked kindly.

"Yes, one daughter—Gail."

Miss Barton smiled in such a disarming way that she soon learned where Gail was living and where she worked.

"Well, I'm certainly glad to have met you," Mrs. Barton concluded, opening her handbag. "I wonder if you'd accept $25? You know I offered a reward. Do you think that's enough?"

"Why, yes, more than enough. I don't feel right about taking it, for Gail's a friend of mine, and knowing how few friends she has in the city I'd have been glad to tell her I'd gotten in touch with some of them."

"Oh, well, you can always use a little extra money." Mrs. Barton handed her the bills.

...you'd find that the crude oils used in refining Sinclair Motor Oil were already millions of years old. Sinclair Engineers have found that, by and large, the oldest crudes make the best lubricants.

You'll see how true this is when you use Sinclair Motor Oil in your car. You will find that it doesn't evaporate and distill out in the heat of fast driving. And you'll notice, too, the lack of wear in your engine even after thousands of miles of driving.

Ask your Sinclair dealer for either Sinclair Opaline or Sinclair Pennsylvania Motor Oil.

their state, an honored citizen of the state and great first and second executive officers of the United States," said Mr. DeLoache.

Mr. DeLoache, General Chairman of Transportation in Texas for the National Democratic Convention attributes the great interest in the forthcoming mass movement to Washington and Philadelphia to three factors. First: improved business conditions enable vast numbers of Texans to finance such a trip.

Second: The Centennial spirit is converting the trip into a Centennial Boosters Parade as well as an event of political significance.

Third: The ardor of Texas Democrats has reached such a high pitch of enthusiasm that every party member who can possibly attend is making plans to go on this pilgrimage.

And as a fourth and final reason, Mr. DeLoache emphasizes that never before have so many appealing features been combined in one tour of this type. "It is a New Deal in Transportation," says Mr. DeLoache, "observing a Democratic principle by giving Texas delegates and their friends the maximum in enjoyment at a maximum cost."

The Texas and Pacific from North Texas and the Missouri Pacific from South Texas, the line of the internationally famous Sunshine Special, has been selected as the official route.

Expert to Detail Canning Methods

Mrs. Alisse Chaptman of Dallas Texas, well known home economist of the Ball Brothers Company will be in Eastland on June 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13th at Mickle Hardware & Furn. Co., at which time she will give a free demonstration of the proper modern method of canning meats, fruits and vegetables in glass. Mrs. Chaptman is a graduate of East Central State teachers' College in Oklahoma and was formerly connected with the extension department of Oklahoma A&M College. During her years of experience she has specialized in the art of canning.
Mrs. Chaptman has done extensive work in the Culinary Department working with different clubs interested in the progress of better foods for home uses. This demonstration is being sponsored through the courtesy of Ball Brothers Company, who, for over 50 years, have manufactured Mason Jars for canning of fruits, meats and vegetables, under the U. S. Government approved methods of steam pressure, hot water bath and open kettle canning. Attendance prizes will be given.

You that have not as yet attended one of more of these services are missing the very things that the Church of Christ of Eastland had in mind for you in arranging this series of meetings. Services are held 12:15 to 12:45 p. m. and at 8:15 p. m. at night.

AMOUS FLAYSPOT OF STARS LOCALE FOR 'PALM SPRINGS'

The gay life of Palm Springs, playground of West Coast millionaires and movie stars, forms the setting of Paramount's "Palm Springs," produced by Walter Wanger, at the Connellee Theatre today.

The name of Palm Springs has become synonymous with the Riviera, the Lido, and other world spots as the ultimate in luxurious idling.

Like an oasis out of the Arabian Nights, this modern community is the winter stamping ground of film stars, industrial magnates, diplomats, social leaders and cosmopolites from everywhere. Here, during the fashionable "season" that lasts a few months, celebrities can enjoy every luxury of the richest metropolis and at the same time remain within sight and sound of scorching wastes.

Hotels, dude ranches, homes of motion picture notables and millionaires, and pleasure haunts dot the sands into which even Indians hesitated to venture not so many years ago.

"Palm Springs" offers in the stellar roles Frances Langford, Sir Guy Standing, Smith Ballew, Spring Byington and E. E. Clive. This is the first time that the inside story of Palm Springs has been told on the screen.

Mrs. J. O. Earnest left Saturday afternoon for Meridian, Texas, where she will attend a homecoming of former students of Meridian college.

Campaigns Started For and Against New Amendments

By GORDON K. SHEARER
United Press Staff Correspondent
AUSTIN.—Campaigns for and against constitutional amendments already have begun. They will be voted upon Nov. 3.

Gov. James V. Allred has declared that he favored the amendment to curb the governor's pardoning power. Liquor dealers met recently in San Antonio and announced opposition to the compulsory state liquor monopoly amendment.

School teachers are receiving literature regarding the amendment to authorize a state teachers' retirement fund. One candidate for the legislature is sending circulars to the teachers in his section, including the statement that his hold-over opponent "unfortunately was not present when the submission of the amendment was acted upon."

Rep. George Moffett, Chillicothe, is making an active canvass to aid the cause of the amendment he proposed—to prohibit any county from having more than seven representatives unless its population totals more than 700,000.

Moffett said the wide divergence of Texas interests and its great size make it undesirable to have population as the sole basis for determining representation. He considers location an important factor.

With callipers, he has drawn circles about Texarkana, Dalhart and El Paso. By the circles he illustrates that Texarkana is shown by the map to be nearer the capitals of 15 states than it is to El Paso; that Dalhart is closer to North Dakota than to Brownsville and closer to the capitals of six other states than to Austin. El Paso is shown to be closer to Los Angeles than to Beaumont, Port Arthur, or Texarkana.

Lieut. Gov. Walter Woodul is leading the campaign to increase salaries of state constitutional officers. He is not a candidate for any of the offices affected, so he cannot be accused of selfish motives.

Similar amendments have been defeated repeatedly, though the low salary scale for officials is condemned frequently. The San Angelo Standard, newspaper advocating higher pay, said Governor Allred had a personal deficit of $2,000 for the year 1935, while attempting to live on his $4,000 annual salary.

Former Gov. Dan Moody is quoted as saying he could have "papered a room" with the notes and renewals he had to sign while he was governor.

The Standard points out that the governor is furnished with a living place, some servants, light and fuel, besides his salary. He is not furnished groceries. A modest garden of onions and turnips at the rear of the "mansion" helps to supply the table. The old building requires much service. Mrs. Allred has been seen sweeping the walk herself, in an effort to make the grounds attractive and presentable to Texas Centennial visitors.

The sturdy little trucks have been tried and proven on hilly highway and rough country road. Here one is shown in use at a hinterland farmhouse. They also are used widely for delivery work in the big cities. So great has been the demand for the 1936 line of streamlined GMC trucks that production is unable to keep up with orders.

In opposition to a state monopoly on liquor, William C. Edwards, secretary of the Texas Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association, claims that $15,000,000 a year has been put to work in Texas, as a result of the repeal of prohibition.

He itemizes: 6,262 persons employed, with an annual payroll of $8,378,760; rents and leases on 2,379 business buildings, totalling more than $2,000,000; taxes and fees, $4,950,000.

Profits are Found In Trilobites

By United Press
TOLEDO.—Trilobites, 60,000,000 years old, make a living for C. O. Miller of suburban Sylvania, Ohio.

Miller collects, then sells them to geology departments of universities all over the world. For 13 years he has lived comfortably from his trade in trilobites.

A trilobite is a marine creature which lived in the past ages. To the geologist it is a cephalopod which reached its maximum in the Cambrian and Ordovician periods. To the layman, the trilobite is a fossil which resembles an armored worm. Usually, there are three segments to the fossil, the head, the thorax and the abdomen. The trilobite it is assumed, could roll itself into a ball, tuck its entire body into a protective sphere, and scurry away.

Miller, whose face is burned to a ruddy tan from his fossil collecting, gathers his trilobites from quarries near Sylvania. He was led to the spot by a stranger, 13 years ago. Miller immediately recognized the fossils, for the been his hobby ever since he one in a Chicago museum. He a newspaper reporter, then. After he had sent some to Ohio State university, he commissioned as trilobite collector for the university.

Now Miller's Ohio trilobite to be found in every state in city in the nation except Utah has sent them to Paris, London, Rome, Persia, Spain and Poland.

Miller had a few of his Ohio on display when the Ohio Society of Science met at the university of Toledo. He didn't have a fixed price. A bystander put it: "Ask him what he'll take he'll argue with you."

Individuals, as well as universities, are prospective buyers seems a trilobite makes some of a souvenir. But people whom gain nothing except right to say, "I have a trilobite—just as they might say, "I Roman coin."

A Roman coin, 2,000 years costs about $500. A trilobite much older and costs much less.
