Sore May Be Thoughts of A Failing Warrior

One day during the recent Republican convention in Cleveland, Senator William E. Borah disappeared from the crowded hotel lobbies and was discovered perched all alone on a railing by Cleveland's lake front, looking out over the railroad yards, the harbor and the blue reaches of Lake Erie.

The senator had strolled off alone to get a little fresh air and quiet. He found both, and enjoyed them in solitude. Around him lounged the assorted down-and-outers who make that particular stretch of waterfront their hangout. And the senator sat there and looked out at nothing in particular—an elderly statesman with deep lines in his face and a droop to his shoulders, communing with himself.

It might be interesting to know just what his thoughts were. For Senator Borah, in his moments of introspection, must have ample food for reflection. He is close to the end of his career. It has been a notably distinguished one; and it contains a rather tragic moral about the fate of the man who makes his fight too late.

Senator Borah speaks for what might be called the older America; the America that distrusted the go-getter and the grabber, that lived by a simple creed of antique freedom and had a sturdy self-reliance, a confidence in the ability of the ordinary American to take care of himself unaided.

But in his career as spokesman for that America, the senator missed a lot of fights.

He missed one in 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt went across the land like a knight-errant tilting against privilege and greed. In that year Senator Borah swallowed William Howard Taft—swallowed him with a wry grimace, but swallowed him none the less.

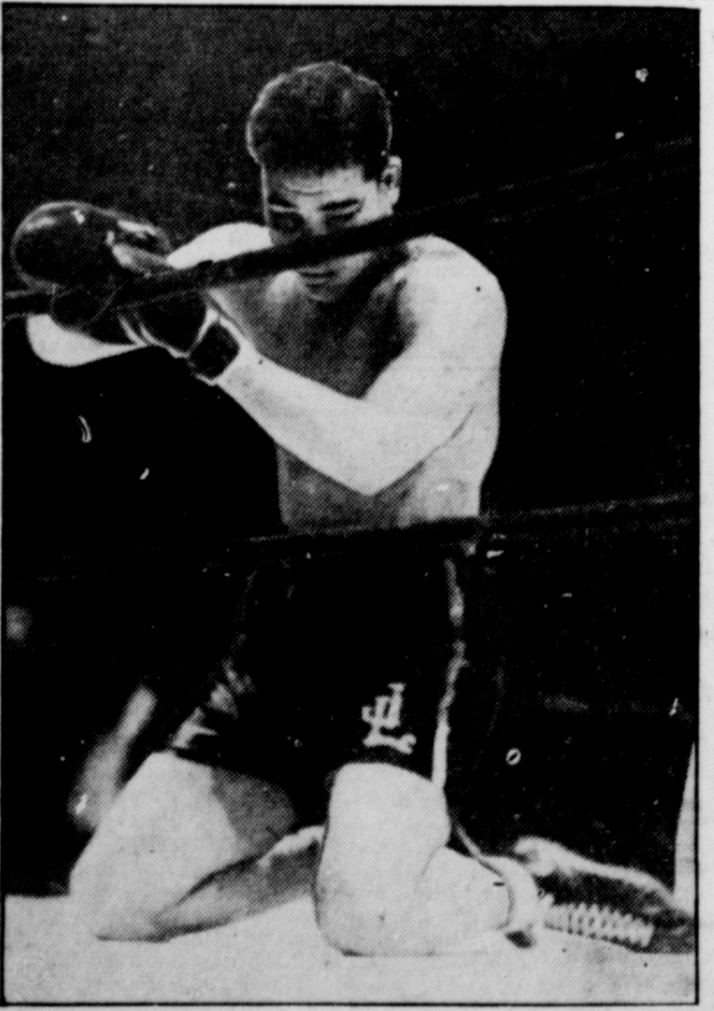

He missed another in 1924, when old Bob LaFollette spoke up against the House of Have and took his predestined licking. Old Bob could have used Borah's help that year; his cause looked remarkably like the cause Borah had always espoused. But Borah's spear never appeared in the LaFollette battle line.

Came 1928, and Senator Borah went down the line for Hoover. The crowd behind his life—or most of it. But somehow Borah was in Hoover's corner all through that campaign. Nor did he help unseated that crowd in 1932.

So, at last, in 1936, the old warhorse went out to battle... and found himself just a little too late. He found that the play had been taken away from him by a group of middle westerners, led by a man who, as a youngster, led by a man who, as a youngster, had taken the Bull Moose bolt which Borah had been too careful to take.

The long-overdue liberalization of the Republican party had begun—and Landon, not Borah, was the magic name. It would be interesting to know just what the senator thought, as he played hokey from the convention to muse by the shore of Lake Erie.

AT END OF THE TRAIL?

Ring experts—those same individuals who are hiding under beds after predicting that Max Schmeling didn't have a Chinaman's chance after knocking out Joe Louis—indicates that the Bomber's surprise defeat marked the end of his ring career. The above picture, taken as Joe hung on the ropes after his knockout in the twelfth round, would influence such a belief. Bewilderment and resignation are written all over the Detroit negro's heretofore impassive visage as he fumbles foggily for support.

Here is the Record of the New Deal as it Appears to Unbiased Observer

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

Washington Correspondent PHILADELPHIA. — Pointing with pride temporarily will become Pennsylvania's chief industry when the Democratic convention opens here June 23.

The nomination of Roosevelt and Garner is a matter of such routine that the Democrats will have little to do but brag about the achievements of the New Deal in the last three years and four months.

The "glorious story" will be belabored, crooned, chanted, and chirped in keynote speech, nominating speeches, platform, and in practically every other utterance of the convention.

Upon the invitation of both parties and in the words of Al Smith when he was campaigning eight years ago, "Let's look at the record!"

Banking
New Deal orators will take you right back to that famous day in March, 1933, when the last bank closed as Roosevelt was inaugurated.

Nothing can obscure the fact that F. D. R. handled that crisis in such manner as to restore national confidence when it was most sorely needed. And although 4,600 banks had failed in the previous three years, there hasn't been an important bank failure in the first three years of the New Deal and banks now have public confidence, because nearly all deposits are insured under federal law.

Unemployment
On the other hand, although millions of people have gone back to work, the nation still worries about its "ten million unemployed." The Republican platform promises re-employment in a vaguely phrased program of generalities and it is to be feared that the Democratic platform won't be much more helpful.

Technological unemployment is an increasingly big problem and the threat of a permanently huge body of unemployed is common talk.

Farm Relief
AAA was NRA's rural cousin, aimed at increasing prices by regulating and adjusting basic crops, surpluses of which had forced prices down and ruined many farmers.

Gross farm income, up to $13,500,000,000 in 1920—when many farmers made their land investments—had sunk to $5,500,000,000 in 1932. It was more than $8,000,000,000 in 1935, although AAA must share credit with the great drought of 1934.

Since the supreme court killed the agricultural adjustment act, the AAA has embarked on a huge soil conservation benefit program, which even the Republicans endorse in principle, claiming it as their own idea.

Relief
Most spectacular of the New Deal efforts have been the programs to carry out Roosevelt's promise that "nobody shall starve." Relief remains a vital problem and it's a big campaign issue, chiefly because it costs so much money and its administration has been bad in too many spots.

It has cost about $8,000,000,000 under the New Deal to date and the end is far from in sight. Nearly 25,000,000 people continue on relief rolls. Roosevelt originally accepted federal responsibility for all of them, but more recently, with establishment of WPA, he has unloaded seven or eight million "unemployables" back on the states.

Many states and cities were on the verge of bankruptcy when the original policy was adopted and some of them are now no better able to care for the load.

Recovery
The NRA came, floundered, and finally was killed by the supreme court. Few mourn its passing. Planned as a machinery for shortening hours, raising wages, and thus stimulating industry through creation of added purchasing power, it soon became primarily a device for the non-to-compatible object of raising prices and profits.

Public Works
WPA permits a large degree of local control, which is responsible for some of the worst scandals in its administration, although there has been no genuinely energetic New Deal effort in Washington to keep relief out of politics.

Vast sums have been appropriated for public works and handled by Secretary Harold L. Ickes ad, administrator of FWA. This effort was slow in starting and never gained its maximum possible effectiveness, although it has made a large contribution to business improvement.

The program is usually regarded as sound and valuable, although political interference from the White House—as in the cases of the Florida Ship Canal and Passamaquoddy—has permitted a few questionable projects.

Since March, 1933, this group of 10 Democratic leaders, shown with President Roosevelt, has played a major part in shaping administration policies. They are the members of the Roosevelt cabinet.

National Debt
The national debt has increased by $10,000,000,000 during Roosevelt's term and that can be charged against relief in one form or another.

Pickup
Without the unprecedented increase of government spending, most economists agree, there could have been no such business improvement as has been had. Some experts believe the entire pickup may be attributed, in effect, to that 10 billion dollars of added debt.

What happens is that the money "squandered" by the government is spent at once by the recipients, that this added consumption stimulates production, that the corporations skim off the profits—and the New Deal hopes to skim off enough of the profits to keep this "round and round" system operating.

They argue that the faster the money goes around, the greater the profits will be and the greater the percentage of the federal "take" that can be applied to reducing both annual deficit and national debt.

Big Business
The New Deal has managed to incur the almost universal hostility of business and industry, and although there's a tendency among New Dealers to attribute this to a "greedy" profit instinct, there is no question that many honest business men are sincerely alarmed by uncertainty as to Roosevelt's future policies.

Yet Roosevelt's one outstanding aim has been to patch up the capitalist system so that it will work better in the future than in the past.

For better or worse, the New Deal has taken too many steps with progressive, forward-looking, and reformist intent to be listed here. And convention orators can point out, the do-nothing attitude of conservative Republicans has been replaced by a do-something policy which has been felt, if not effective, on many fronts.

Planning
National planning, regional as with the TVA and scattered nationally as in the Resettlement Administration's land conservation and utilization program, has been attempted on a relatively broad scale.

Security
A big social security program has at last been enacted, although most experts think it is faulty. The Roosevelt administration has given labor an unprecedented number of "breaks," assuring the support of most labor organizations in the campaign. A stock market regulatory law has been enacted, but those who hoped for its effective operation have been somewhat disappointed.

Under the reciprocal tariff program, several treaties have been negotiated and the administration is proud of them, although the Republican platform denounces them. The public utilities holding company act is commonly considered one of the boldest strokes against monopoly ever undertaken by any administration. It may also be remembered that Roosevelt speeded repeal of prohibition.

Court and Constitution

The supreme court has knocked out a succession of New Deal laws by virtue of the conservative majority on the court—including NRA, AAA, railroad pensions, and the Guffey coal stabilization act.

Its decisions will be an issue in the campaign. Strangely, the decision which aroused most popular resentment was that against New York's minimum wage law for women and children which denied the states power to regulate wages and hours.

Governor Landon proposes a remedial constitutional amendment, if necessary, and the position the Democratic platform may take as to the court and the Constitution is a matter of intense interest.

The Republican party has made the worst possible case against the New Deal. The Democratic party will now make the best possible case for it.

The average voter will have from June until November to decide between the two extremes.

As evidence of good faith, inquirers must give their names and addresses, but only their initials will be printed. Address inquiries to Will H. Mayes, Austin, Texas.

Q. What were the Texas race track admission receipts in 1935 and what part did the state receive?
A. Admission receipts were $2,372,606 of which $56,327 went to the state. Parimutuel betting machines took in $21,453,273 during the same period.

Q. Was there ever a "Camp Radzinski" in Texas and why such a name? E. T. Burnett.
A. It was an outpost of Fort Belknap in what is now Young county, near Eliasville, established in 1858 and named for Lieut. Radzinski, a Pole who had served as an engineer on the American-Mexican Boundary Commission before appointment to the Army.

Q. How long was the present Alamo building used as a church? G. G. Fannin.
A. About 62 years—from 1762 to 1924. It was known then as Mission San Antonio de Valero.

Q. How did the time in which the message encircling the world announcing the opening of the Texas Centennial compare with previous records? B. T. Mason.
A. The time was two minutes and five seconds as compared with a former record of three minutes.

Q. To what extent do levee districts exist in Texas? J. S. Shelbyville.

A. There were at the close of the last fiscal year 70 districts, representing an investment of $18,003,817 and enclosing 371,750 acres. These are mostly in the Trinity and Brazos rivers and are under supervision of the State Reclamation Engineer, R. J. Mahon.

Texas Livestock And Ranges in Good Condition

Range conditions are the best since 1932. Due to the effects of the good general rains received during May, summer and fall grazing is virtually assured in most sections of the state.

Livestock are in very good condition and losses were light. Ranges: Cattle ranges for the state as a whole are in very good condition. The prospects for summer and fall grazing are good. The condition on June 1, 1936, was 88 per cent of normal, compared with 74 per cent a month ago, 79 per cent a year ago, and 8 per cent the 10-year (1926-1935) average on June 1.

Although good general rains fell in practically all sections of the state during the latter part of May, there are areas in the northwest Panhandle, Trans-Pecos region, and southwest Texas where subsoil moisture may be a little short. Surface stock water and soil moisture are ample in most sections, and 80 per cent of the Gulf Coast region received excessive rainfall during May, and dry, clear weather is essential for the production of a better quality of grass.

Sheep ranges are in good shape. Sheep ranges are in good shape are very good. The condition on June 1, 1936, was 90 per cent of normal, compared with 73 per cent a month ago, 79 per cent a year ago, and 88 per cent the 10-year average on June 1. There is good soil moisture in the entire sheep area to make ample feed.

Livestock: Cattle condition on June 1, 1936, was 85 per cent of normal, compared with 80 per cent a month ago, 77 per cent a year ago, and 86 per cent the 10-year average on June 1. Cattle are in very good condition, and a good crop of spring calves was dropped.

Sheep condition on June 1, 1936, was 87 per cent of normal compared with 81 per cent a month ago, 81 per cent a year ago, and 88 per cent the 10-year average on June 1. Sheep are in good condition and have made rapid progress since the good rains during May. Ewes are in good condition, and a very good crop of late lambs was dropped.

Goats are in very good condition. The condition on June 1, 1936, was 88 per cent of normal compared with 83 per cent a month ago, 84 per cent a year ago, and 89 per cent the 10-year average on June 1.

JOLSON SONG HITS MAKE FILM MEDLEY IN SINGING KID Here's a "ree!" romance—something new in movie matrimony. Here, if you please, is a marriage between a "montage" and a medley.

All of which sounds a bit complicated, but, translated from film lingo, it simply means that a series of swiftly interblended screen picture flashes will be accompanied by a series of quickly changing snatches of various songs. The "montage" (quick interest picture scenes) has been used in countless movies. The song medley is commonplace. The conjoining of the two is new.

This novelty, quickly to register with audiences some snappy and happy reminiscences of Al Jolson's stage and screen successes down the years, has been recorded as the unusual opening of his latest First National musical, "The Singing Kid," which comes to the Connelley Theatre today.

The "montage" consists of screen flashes of special backgrounds, with Jolson in blackface in each case, of such hit shows as "Robinson Crusoe, Jr.," "Bombo," "The Singing Fool," and "Go Into Your Dance."

The medley, snatches of each chorus sung by the stellar showman consists of such old favorites as "Swanee," "Rokkabye Your Baby With a Dixie Melody," "April Showers," "California Here I Come," and, of course, "Mammy," "Sonny Boy" and "About a Quarter to Nine" chorus bars will be sung to the screen-play flashbacks.

"The Singing Kid" combines rollicking comedy with heart throbbing drama and spectacular musical numbers. Besides Jolson the cast includes Sybil Jason, Beverly Roberts, Edward Everett Horton, Lyle Talbot, Allen Jenkins, Claire Dodd and Wini Shaw. The Yacht Club Boys and Cab Calloway and his band also are featured.

Tickets Offered to Fort Worth Show

Through an advertisement in Tuesday's issue of this paper people of the community are offered to bargain books to the Fort Worth Frontier Centennial which will open soon. Books containing five dollars worth of various admissions are offered by mail or through local salespeople and organizations at three dollars.

Included in the three-dollar books are five general admissions to the Frontier grounds; two optional tickets which give a choice of two admissions to either Jumbo, Casa Manana, or The Last Frontier; two tickets to Sally Rand's Nude Ranch; Jumbo is the famous musical-circus extravaganza brought from Broadway in New York by Billy Rose. Casa Manana is the enormous cafe-theater where Paul Whiteman, Shirley Temple, Dick Powell, Fanny Brice, Ann Pennington and other stars of stage, screen and radio are scheduled to appear in person. The Last Frontier will depict the thrilling action of the Old West.

Ticket books can be ordered by mail from the Frontier offices in Fort Worth. The show also is desirous of securing ticket salespeople in this community. Special arrangements are available to organizations wishing to sell tickets.

Base Runner Out Upon Failure to Avoid the Fielder

By JOE HUGHES Section 6 of Rule 27 deals with the base-runner who obstructs the progress of a batted ball or who interferes with the fielder attempting to field the ball.

The rule is as follows: The base runner is out if he fails to avoid a fielder attempting to field a batted ball in the manner described in this rule, or in any way obstructs a fielder in attempting to field a batted ball, or intentionally interferes with a thrown ball, an infielder and hits a runner im-

Making Short Work of Dictation

That Yonkers, N. Y., L.N on women wearing shorts is proving a boon to alert press agents, even if it does keep comfort-minded girls out of the modest suburb's environs. The employes of Charles Atlas, New York physical culturist, saw a chance to make short work of cumbersome skirts and won his permission to wear shorts at the office. The press agent heard of it, so you see Atlas dictating to shorts-clad Ruth Laury. If the idea catches on in other offices, they'll have started a new fad.

We have used this rule, at Fire Department park, from most every standpoint. We have been accused of inconsistency but it is simply the lack of edge concerning this rule. The most part this rule is enforced when a base-runner is hit by a batted ball.

In the Putnam game last Saturday a batter was called out after he had hit a fly ball in front of the plate and then ran into the center who was attempting to field the ball.

TRY Our Want-A

There Are Sails And Sales!

A friend of ours is the wife of a seafaring man. She knows what "charting a course" means. She believes in it.

Her charts are the advertising pages of this paper. Before she starts a shopping trip, she plots her course. Here's a bargain in canned goods. There's a good buy in kitchen utensils. Here's a sale of shoes. Thus the fog of haphazard shopping lifts, and the course is clear. Time is saved. Money is saved.

"Certainly," she tells us, "I would no sooner start on a shopping tour without having read the advertisements than my husband would try to navigate without his charts and compass."

Even if you have never set foot aboard a ship, you can chart your shopping course. Read the advertisements on these pages every day. Follow them as a mariner follows the weather report and see how much simpler and easier shopping becomes. Remember, an advertised product is a reliable product—it has to be!
