Democrats Rescued Business, Jesse Jones Tells Delegates

An unusual feature on the Democratic convention program was a "selling talk" to American business on the party's declaration of principles, made by Jesse Jones, chairman of RFC, shown here at the convention with Mrs. Jones. The Texan, prominently mentioned as a presidential candidate in 1940, declared the Democratic party had rescued business in the last three years, praised the platform, and gave a ringing endorsement of President Roosevelt.

The probe was ordered after a woman witness appeared in court with her head shaved, a victim of the band.

Mrs. Mortensen had gone to a show and he waited her return and pleaded for a reconciliation. "I told him if he would straighten up and quit drinking we could get along and we patched up the quarrel. He came in to spend the night. Early this morning he arose and started beating us," she said.

Liberal Youth Force: Old Guard Retreat

The Old Guard, they used to say, dies, but never surrenders. It does, however, occasionally leave the field at the double-quick, with its suspenders flapping against its twinkling ankles; and when it does, the spectacle is a sight for gods and men.

That was the significant thing about the recent Republican convention. Its significance was doubled by the fact that the great retreat took place in Cleveland.

For the last Republican convention to be held in Cleveland—that of 1924, when Calvin Coolidge was nominated—showed the Old Guard at the height of its power.

It was fat, smug, and satisfied, then. When a little group of midwestern liberals made a valiant attempt to remind the party of its old progressive heritage, the Old Guard rolled over it without delay or compunction.

The contrast with what happened this year is one of the most striking things in American politics.

This year, as in 1924, midwestern liberals advanced to the field with banners flying. But the solid Old Guard phalanx that was all-powerful 12 years ago crumbled and broke before them.

It fought a few stubborn rear-guard actions, to be sure. There were moments when it managed to give the convention, superficially, an echo of bygone days. In the end, however, it left the field in disorder.

The Old Guard lived by the name of Abraham Lincoln and the philosophy of William McKinley. These may be excellent things to live by, but they do not have too much direct application to modern life.

You cannot meet the infinitely complex problems of a modern industrial civilization by reminding people that Lincoln was a great man of the people and that McKinley believed in the full dinner pail.

What happened in Cleveland was nothing less than a shift of power from this Old Guard group to a set of men who understand that they are living in a changed world and propose to do something about it.

Governor Landon is a new kind of candidate for the G. O. P. He is not the sort of man the party could conceivably have nominated in 1924 or 1928 or 1932.

He belongs to 1936, and the fact that he was the all but unanimous choice of the delegates before the balloting even started is an immensely heartening fact.

For it shows that the party is not going to die of hardening of the arteries; that it has in it the ability to change in the face of changing conditions.

The Old Guard has left the field. It may return, some day; but, before it does, Mr. Landon will teach it something.

Our impression that Dr. Townsend's OARP was on everybody's lips these days was strengthened when we heard it mentioned by several persons leaning over a boat rail.

The judges have spoken, in this case, to the effect that state sovereignty is a higher and holier thing than the states themselves had supposed or desired; a thing which, in this case, looks remarkably like a strait-jacket.

THIS CURIOUS WORLD By William Ferguson

No American-built airplanes went into battle during the world war. THE beautiful Shwe Dagon is located at Rangoon, in Burma, and is 370 feet high. The bell-shaped pagoda is covered with solid gold, and the peak is topped with jewels and tinkling bells. Some 1500 small shrines are snuggled around the base, representing gifts from other nations.

Additional gun emplacements will also be installed at Snyder Heads, while Rottnest Island and Fremantle will be fortified. A proposed Australian aircraft factory will be developed under private enterprise to a stage sufficient to meet any demands which the government might be obliged to make on it for defensive craft. The most immediate objective of the defense program is the completion of the coastal defense scheme extending from Brisbane

UNAWAY BRIDE

IN HERE TODAY wedding day MARCIA... SKILL, telling one of... SLYVIA, that he... but can't afford to... heart and bewildered... on the trip that was... a honeymoon... engineer, Phil is going... to ask CAMILLA HOWE... he has been devoted for... marry him.

Phil told himself that he was the master of his own mind. If he said that the provocative, tender lips, and wide gray eyes of a certain young lady should get out of his art gallery of faces, it should! Then he ran down to the water, and stared straight into that face.

"Marcia! You here?"

Marcia, glancing into his puzzled blue eyes, aware of the long, strong brown body, fashionably dressed in a light blue dress, and sea, could only nod. So Phil had come. Had come to Camilla because he knew that she would need him.

"I asked for you in Paris," Phil was saying, throwing his long body on the sand.

Left Paris when you did and came here? Funny that she could think of so few things to say. The water is beautiful today. Want to swim? I'll race you to the raft."

She was crazy to think that Phil looked disappointed—her mind was playing freak tricks.

They raced to the raft where a chorus of eager voices greeted them.

"Hi, Kirkby, it's good to see you again!" That was Bob.

"Hello—sort of old home week," Marcia noticed the lack of warmth in Phil's return greeting. No wonder, she mused. He wouldn't want Bob around as a rival when he had come to plead his case with Camilla.

man. She might as well see what he wanted. Or he might even pass her. Some people ran for exercise, not to get away from people or catch up with people. She stopped and waited. The man called, "Marcia?"

"Phil!"

He came up to her. There was water and sand around them. Miles of sky above them. No lights except the beacon on the lighthouse, some where far at sea. Quite suddenly Phil's arms had gone around her and his lips were pressing hers.

WHEN he dropped his arms, in the dim waterlight, she saw that his face was white and drawn. "Forgive me, Marcia. That was the last thing in Heaven or earth I intended to do."

"But—why?" she asked so gently that the words went drifting down the empty beach.

"Why?" He repeated the word almost fiercely. "Why? Because you love another man and—"

"But I don't, Phil," she interrupted softly. "I love you!"

"You—what?" Even the darkness did not conceal the surprise on his face. "Say it again, Marcia—no, don't say it! You must!"

"But I must," she repeated steadily. "I love you. Not Bob."

She was not prepared to have Phil drop down on a rock, put his head in his hands—she was not prepared for the shudder that went through his body.

"Marcia, Marcia darling," he said a minute later when he had grown quieter. "This is Hell! I love you. I went bicycling to figure things out because I thought it was no good. And I've got a duty to perform by somebody else—don't misunderstand me. I'm fond of Camilla. I thought I loved her. Maybe I can—" But his voice belied the hopelessness of his own belief.

"What are we going to do?"

It was Marcia who asked the question, in a little while, eyes on a sailboat that was little more than a blur on the ocean.

"Forget each other, Marcia, my dearest. What else can we do?" He who had been so strong and capable could offer no solution this time. The girl who had asked the question knew that.

"Forget each other," she repeated. "But anyway, Phil, I'm glad you told me. I'm glad you love me! It's something—" She smiled crookedly. "Something to pack up for a rainy day."

"Will you do something for me?" he asked in a strange, tense voice.

"What is it, Phil?"

"Go away tomorrow. Early. This is going to be plenty hard as it is."

THE water at Nice was very black that night. It stretched away, acres and acres and acres of it. The stars were bright, but there was no moon. Marcia, in a frothy blue dress, had been quiet at dinner. No one had noticed, she decided, because everyone else had so much to say. Even Camilla, for whom everyone was supposed to be sorry, was merrier than usual. But Marcia understood that. Phil had come back, and Camilla must feel safe again.

After dinner, Marcia went upstairs and changed to a white sports dress and some white walking shoes. She grabbed a woolly white coat, slipped out a side door, and started on a walk along the beach. It was too hard to stay in the house where the music, the laughter, the light voices, wove a spell that drew a young man with eyes that were bluer than she had remembered and another girl closer and closer together.

She had not gone far when she became aware that she was being followed. She began to walk faster, then to run. It was lonely and she had been warned to beware of vagrants. One encounter with lawlessness in Paris had been enough. Then she decided that she couldn't outrun a man. She might as well see what he wanted. Or he might even pass her. Some people ran for exercise, not to get away from people or catch up with people. She stopped and waited. The man called, "Marcia?"

"Phil!"

He came up to her. There was water and sand around them. Miles of sky above them. No lights except the beacon on the lighthouse, some where far at sea. Quite suddenly Phil's arms had gone around her and his lips were pressing hers.

WHEN he dropped his arms, in the dim waterlight, she saw that his face was white and drawn. "Forgive me, Marcia. That was the last thing in Heaven or earth I intended to do."

"But—why?" she asked so gently that the words went drifting down the empty beach.

"Why?" He repeated the word almost fiercely. "Why? Because you love another man and—"

"But I don't, Phil," she interrupted softly. "I love you!"

"You—what?" Even the darkness did not conceal the surprise on his face. "Say it again, Marcia—no, don't say it! You must!"

"But I must," she repeated steadily. "I love you. Not Bob."

She was not prepared to have Phil drop down on a rock, put his head in his hands—she was not prepared for the shudder that went through his body.

"Marcia, Marcia darling," he said a minute later when he had grown quieter. "This is Hell! I love you. I went bicycling to figure things out because I thought it was no good. And I've got a duty to perform by somebody else—don't misunderstand me. I'm fond of Camilla. I thought I loved her. Maybe I can—" But his voice belied the hopelessness of his own belief.

"What are we going to do?"

It was Marcia who asked the question, in a little while, eyes on a sailboat that was little more than a blur on the ocean.

"Forget each other, Marcia, my dearest. What else can we do?" He who had been so strong and capable could offer no solution this time. The girl who had asked the question knew that.

"Forget each other," she repeated. "But anyway, Phil, I'm glad you told me. I'm glad you love me! It's something—" She smiled crookedly. "Something to pack up for a rainy day."

"Will you do something for me?" he asked in a strange, tense voice.

"What is it, Phil?"

"Go away tomorrow. Early. This is going to be plenty hard as it is."

When this point is reached it is not difficult to neglect payment altogether.

Softball Rules Prohibit Runner Passing Another

By JOE HUGHES Today's rules are two more sections of Rule 27. One deals with the base-runner attempting to score and the other with base-runners who pass a team-mate on the base-lines.

Section 14—The base-runner is out if, with one out, or none out, and a base-runner on third base, the batsman interferes with a play being made at home plate.

Section 15—The base-runner is

Outfits That Are Fun to Wear

These are the days of bathing suit and beach wear suits. If you didn't go out and complete your vacation wardrobe a month or two ago, you can have fun doing it now. Not only should you enjoy your belated tours to sports departments, but telling your more energetic friends about the marvelous bargains you've found ought to be pretty amusing, too. These bathing suits are fashioned from soft woolen. The one on the left comes in a rather conservative chenille weave. The other is a woolen pebble matelasse. Both can be ordered in a variety of flattering colors. Both have uplift-effect bodices which makes the wearers' waistline seem twice as slender.

out of he passes a preceding base-runner before such runner has been legally put out, he shall be declared out immediately.

When one carefully reads and considers structure of Section 14 there comes that question, "Why won't the rule apply when two are out?" The rule is devised so that the team committing the offense will suffer to the greatest extent. That extent would be to declare the base-runner on third "out." However, if two are out then refer to Section 6 of Rule 19 which will provide that the batsman be called out. He, then, is the victim of his own actions. In the other case the base-runner is entirely innocent. Section 15 needs no explanation.

The rule is stated very clearly. It may be noted however that it is not an appeal decision.

Burrettes Wound Up Week With Win Over Ranger Team

The Burrettes of Eastland closed a successful busy week Saturday when they engaged the Ranger girls in a 5 o'clock game which they won by a score of 8 to 4. The game was part of the Lone Star picnic program and many of the spectators witnessed their first game of softball played by girls.

While the Eastland girls won by superior batting and base running, it was Miss Stafford in left field for Ranger who carried off the honors in the field when she raced over to the left field foul line and grabbed a hot liner from the bat of Captain Pee Wee Jennings. It was a gem of feminine softball that got a roar of applause from the crowd.

Ranger did all her scoring in the second inning when a home run by Lane, a double by Stafford and a single by Franklin, mixed in with three walks produced four runs.

Jimmie Mitchell, the diminutive tow-headed bundle of dynamite that guards first base, led off in the first inning with a four-base clout. Edith Rosenquest was then safe at first on an error by the right fielder, Pee Wee Jennings walked and when Ranger third baseman let Helen Rosenquest's hot grounder get away from her, the ball rolled into the far open spaces of left field and by the time the ball was retrieved, all runners had scored. In the second with two down, Jimmie walked and stole second. Eddie was safe on an error at second and Pee Wee then scored Jimmie on a neat single. Jeannie lined to short for the third out. Three more runs crossed the pan in the third on four successive singles by Kellert, Horn, Lawrence and Coleman, aided by an error by the pitcher.

The Burrettes played and won four games last week. On Tuesday the Throckmorton girls play a return game at Eastland and on a week from Tuesday night the Dublin girls play at Eastland.

County Keeps a Rural Library Plan In Service

By United Press ELDORA, Iowa.—Hardin county, Iowa, claims the distinction of being the only county among 3,073 in the United States, to provide library privileges for its farm families.

The experiment dates back eight years, when the county board of supervisors entered into a contract with three municipal libraries, at Eldora, Iowa, to furnish books to schools and rural residents. The books are provided in periods at a cost of six cents a volume and three cents a volume to the libraries. So successful was the experiment that the contract was renewed to continue in 1938.
