New Platforms Make Better Springboards

No one can really get his teeth into this year's presidential campaign unless he begins by understanding once and for all that the party platform nowadays is not at all what it used to be.

Once it was something for a candidate to stand on. Now it is in the nature of a springboard—something for him to dive from.

It no longer pretends to be an all-inclusive definition of its party's aims and beliefs. Instead, it is the irreducible minimum, the foundation on which the candidate can erect just about any kind of edifice he chooses.

That is why it is so easy to be disappointed with the platforms adopted in Cleveland and Philadelphia, and so necessary to wait and see how the candidates will declare themselves on specific issues as the campaign advances.

For these platforms were designedly framed to be all things to all men. Their makers, indeed, seemed to pride themselves on that fact.

In each case they tried, apparently, to put together something that would hold out hope to the liberals and reassurance to the conservatives; something that would permit their candidate if elected, to go in almost any direction without doing violence to the compendium of party beliefs.

A platform of that kind obviously is hardly worth the trouble it takes to put it together. Its existence indicates that one of two things must be about to happen to us: either we are about to discard platforms altogether and depend solely on the pronouncements of the candidates, or our two major parties are about to undergo a re-shuffling that will enable them to return to the old practice of making platforms that mean something.

We have come fairly close to the first close to the first step already. The ink was not dry on the Republican platform before Governor Landon undertook to clarify some of its vaguer points; at Philadelphia, President Roosevelt's speech was infinitely more important than the collection of phrases Senator Wagner's committee put together.

And yet it might be a safer bet to expect the second possibility to come true. For this year's platforms merely reflect the confusion and the cross-purposes which exist in the parties that wrote them. They are vague and wishy-washy because the parties do not know quite where they are going.

A party which is half-conservative and half-liberal cannot be expected to declare itself plainly on issues of conservatism and liberalism. That is the fix of both parties are in.

If the next few years see them regaining their traditional unity—a process immensely helped by the Al Smith walkout—we shall, once more, have platforms that mean something.

It is a development we need very badly. Campaigns should be contests of philosophies rather than of men.

LET'S KNOW TEXAS AND TEXANS

In this column answers will be given to inquiries as to Texas history and other matters pertaining to the State and its people.

Q. How did Coronado's expedition keep distance so accurately?

A. A compass of "needle" was used to get direction and men were employed to measure distance by "foot paces" and keep records thereof.

Q. How did James B. Bonham happen to be the last man to enter the Alamo before its fall?

A. T. Colorado.

A. He had been sent with a message to Col. Fanning, and on March 3, 1836, made his way back through the enemy lines to report that no help could be expected from the Gonzales men reached the Alamo.

Q. Who organized the Bethel Baptist Church near Clayton that celebrated its 93rd organization anniversary recently?

A. D. Nacogdoches.

A. Rev. Isaac Reed, the church location being about one mile from its present site.

When was Anahuac founded?

E. B. Cuero.

A. It was established as a Mexican military post in 1820 near the mouth of the Trinity river, and because of its location, Austin thought it would become an important trading point, commanding the trade of the Trinity river and a considerable portion of the Neches and San Jacinto river territory.

Home Refineries Use Bulk of the Oil From Texas

By H. J. STRUTH Petroleum Economist
Sixty-seven per cent of the crude oil produced in Texas is converted into manufactured products by refineries located within the state, according to figures just released by the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association of Texas. This information is substantiated by figures for 1935, compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Mines and the Petroleum Administrative Board, Washington, which show that Texas produced 391,097,000 barrels of crude last year of which 262,925,000 barrels were utilized by home refineries, the products of which were shipped to other states or consumed within the state.

on grease and dirt, alone, costs the wool growers $750,000 a year in sending its wool to market." The neighboring State of Oklahoma, according to 1935 figures of The Petroleum Administrative Board, refined 57,422,000 barrels of crude oil in its home refineries, but shipped out to other states a total of 126,000,000 barrels. This means that Oklahoma utilizes only 29 per cent of its raw material against 67 per cent which is consumed by Texas oil refineries. A balance sheet of the Texas oil industry shows that crude oil is shipped to 20 other states as well as to numerous foreign countries. Texas also receives crude oil from Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico, as well as some foreign oil, a portion of which is re-shipped in interstate and foreign commerce.

miles east of the Japanese coast during a voyage from Houston to Yokohama. "Its mighty funny now to think of being reported dead but when I sailed into Yokohama and read that I was dead it made me very sad on account of my family," said Klainin. The storm, he related, brought the Houston sea captain a scroll of honor for standing by a Japanese vessel in distress. The foreign vessel was out of fuel oil and asked to be towed. A storm came up and the tow rope broke. In the midst of the typhoon, the Eglantine circled the troubled Japanese craft to aid in case of emergency, while high seas de-commissioned the Americans' radio. After waiting vainly for a reply from the Eglantine, company agents reported the captain and crew were lost at sea. Klainin is the master of the S. S. Millions Die in Grasshopper War Grasshoppers by the millions perished in the fight waged against the plague by farmers of nine states, but millions more came on to take their places in the worst infestation since 1932. Here is seen a huge pile of "hoppers caught on a farm near Emporia, Kan., by means of the "dozer," shown inset. The trap is dragged over fields, open end forward, stirring up the pests. When they try to leap over it, they hit the backboard, drop into a tray of oil, and die. From the Rockies to the Mississippi and from Canada to lower Kansas, the pest army swept forward.

How 'Hoppers Blighted U.S. Corn

This small section of cornfield, with stalks stripped or entirely destroyed, reveals at a glance the story of tragic ruin, costing millions, visited upon the cornfields of the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma by the grasshopper scourge. In the picture above, one row had been almost entirely denuded of stalks and the row at the right also was ravaged by the pests. At a time when farmers already were facing poverty, with cattle starving and fields burned out in the great, spreading northwest drouth, the grasshopper plague was an unusually bitter calamity.

Centennial Midway Has Wide Variety Of Attractions

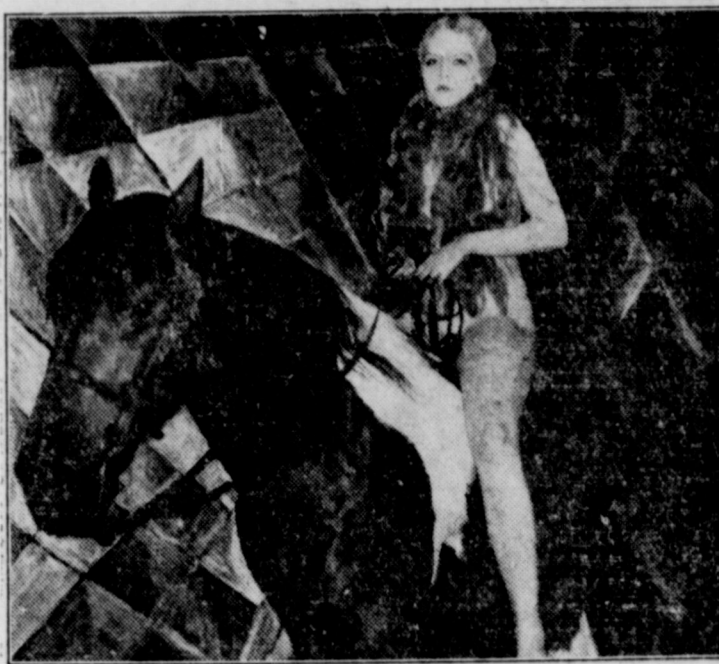

By JAY WELLS
United Press Staff Correspondent
DALLAS, Texas.—"And why, you ask, have artists and sculptors from the days of ancient Greece down to the Texas Centennial Exposition glorified the nude body of a woman?"
"I will tell you—it's because it's beautiful to behold."
"Step right up, ladies and gents! We appeal to your artistic sense—and we also appeal to your twenty-five cents. Step right inside—you get so close to these beautiful ladies that it's uncomfortable."

"Everyone admitted except the youngsters under 18, and the old men over 80. The youngsters just don't understand it, and the old men just can't stand it!"
And if you believe this spiel of the dark-haired Paris Peggy, and are captivated by the way she rolls those eyes you pay two-bits and are on your way to see the Midway at the Texas Centennial Exposition.
Peggy and her pals hold forth in the Streets of Paris, where Mona Leslie does the apple dance (only the apple is more the size of a basketball) and Captain Bradley dives backward from a 100-foot tower into a 6-foot tank of water tude that he absolves the management from any responsibility if he misses.

Maybe you don't care for Mona Leslie—although most people do. All right, step right down to the Streets of All Nations. Mile, Corrinne is the main attraction there. Back in Kaufman, Texas, where she grew up, Corrinne was known as the little Boese girl. But at the Centennial, and in New York and in Havana, she is Mlle. Corrinne, originator of the apple dance—and a little gal who thinks that clothes are all right in some kinds of dances but not worth a whoop when you want to pack 'em in.

This midway at the exposition isn't just a nudist show, however, even though any description of it must begin with the undraped 'orm.

Over at Admiral Byrd's Little America clothes are very much in style. Artificial ice and a cooling system that really works give the pole.

From the pole to the jungles is just a step. King King, billed as the biggest ape in captivity, rattles the bars in one exhibit. The Monster, a hairy sort of man who lets big snakes bite him and who swallows the small ones, performs in another.

Distorted human beings who drive nails through their cheeks, and pegs through their noses make you shiver in Bob Ripley's Believe-It-or-Not exhibit.

But you don't like creepy-looking freaks? Fine, just step down to the Midget Village. The folks there are smaller than you and I, but you'll love them. When that pint-size cop asks you if you want to get your picture taken with little Mae West, tiny and darling, you pay a dime and a nickel and get the photo. If Mae West likes you, she may put her arm around you. And there's a girl who dances and sings "Goodie, Goodie" to equal any movie star.

If you're a movie fan, go to the Hollywood exhibit and see how movies are actually made.
In case you have trouble visualizing how a man looks when he dies in the electric chair, visit Warden Lewis E. Lawes' crime exhibit. Lots of women can't watch it—and some men can't, either—but if you can stand it you'll try to keep out of trouble forever after. They also point a moral down at the Showboat, with that old mellerdrummer called "The Drunkard." For downright entertainment, this correspondent lists the Drunkard at the top of the Midway attractions. You hiss the

Tiny Plane 'Takes Off' in Contest

Miniature gasoline-powered planes, such as that being launched above by Vernon Boehle, Indianapolis, rubber-powered and radio-controlled craft filled the air over Wayne County airport, Detroit, as 400 model plane flyers from every state in the Union, and from Canada, England, and France competed in the Wakefield International trophy contest. Most of the midget planes, so small they had to be fueled with an eye-dropper, were built of balsa wood, glue, paper, and rubber. Boehle, an alternate United States flyer, was one of those competing for the trophy given by Viscount Wakefield of Hythe, England.

villain, cheer the hero, weep with bartender leads "The Man on the heroine, and sing at the top Flying Trapeze."

Lights Transform Fair's Midway Into Fairyland

Spectacular as it is by day, the Exposition, Dallas' $25,000,000 Midway of the Texas Centennial World's Fair, is turned into a veritable fairyland when its lighting system is turned on.

"BARNUM Was RIGHT"

The one and only P. T. Barnum is alleged to have said many things that never found their way into our copy-books... things to which few of us wish to subscribe. But he uttered a profound truth when he said. "If you don't advertise your business, the sheriff will."

Firms which intend to stay in business, that is, firms which deal directly with the public, must advertise. By the same token, it is a sign that they mean to stay in business when they do advertise. For they are offering, through advertisements, the values in their stores.

You, the customer, will decide whether or not they are values. If they are not, it is "just too bad" for the firm that claimed they were. Don't you see, therefore, that no merchant can afford to misrepresent himself or his goods in print? Advertising merely magnifies a misrepresentation—brings the fatal day nearer.

Naturally, then, you can trust the advertisements in this paper. You can believe that the stores signing those advertisements want your trade, and are willing to earn it—with honest values and fair treatment. Read the advertisements. Patronize the advertisers. It is to your selfish interest to do so.

Colonial Brick Kiln Is Found
By United Press
JAMESTOWN, Va.—Discovery of a brick kiln at the site of early settlement here has dealt a blow to the legend of imported English bricks, according to Supt. B. Floyd Fickinger of the Colonial National Historical Park.
The long-standing belief that early houses here and at Yorktown were built from imported brick is credited to the trade

BEGIN HERE TODAY
CLAIRE FOSDICK sets out to drive to the lonely mountain home left her by her eccentric uncle, LYMAN FOSDICK. Claire is trying to decide whether to marry NICK BAUM, to whom she owes money. She also hopes to find a valuable and mysterious jewel owned by her uncle and believed to be hidden in the house.
Her car is wrecked by a log across the road. PAT MCGAN, an old friend, and BOB STEELE, young engineer, arrive on the scene and take Claire to the mountain home where EB SPRATT and his sister, SUSIE, are the caretakers.
Claire sees a curious arrow carved on the wall of an upstairs bedroom and, lured by a light, follows the arrow to the cupola. A mysterious bullet shatters the lamp. Next morning, EB sprang disappears. Bob Steele sets out for the village and is found seriously injured.
HANNAH, Claire's housekeeper, arrives. Pat, trying to solve some of the mysteries of the place, wanders into a deserted mine. An unseen opponent attacks him and Pat falls unconscious.
Claire sees Susie enter the rear cellar but when she follows Susie seems to have vanished. Later Claire questions her and is aware that Susie's answers are untrue. Alone, in the library, Claire hears a strange, tapping noise.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VIII
AS Claire, thoroughly alarmed, listened to the tapping noise, other ears besides hers also noted the sounds. Pat had shaken loose from the unconsciousness caused by his sudden fall.
Painfully he fished the cigaret lighter from his pocket and flashed on the feeble ray. The damp walls of another tunnel met his gaze. He got up and started to walk along this lower level.
Pat felt certain he had come a long way and was just flashing on the lighter again when the tapping sound that Claire was listening to in the library of the House of Long Shadows, came to his ears.
What was it? Pat shook himself free from his dark thoughts and pressed forward.
Presently he was coming into another, larger part of the mine. He found a rusty pickax. Carrying the tool, he pushed on in the direction from which he had heard the sounds.
At last he came to a blank wall. Pat drove the pick into the wall to test its solidity. Immediately an answering sound came.
"Halloo there! Halloo!" he shouted at the top of his lungs. But only the words rushed back. For an hour Pat dug away at the tunnel's end.
His watch told him it was almost evening, and there seemed no immediate prospect of being able to dig himself out. Wearily, his eyelids drooped shut.
MEANWHILE, Claire had run upstairs to Bob Steele's room. Hannah, wearing a large white apron, was sitting by the bedside. The girl motioned Hannah to come with her into Lyman Fosdick's room. "Listen! Do you hear anything?" She held up her hand.
"Sure I do," Hannah answered after a minute. "Is that what you heard the night you came?"
"Yes," replied Claire. Then, as the sounds stopped, she told what she had found in Dan Dallas' cabin and about Susie's mysterious disappearance.
"What'd I tell you?" Hannah's tone was triumphant. "She's in cahoots with that fellow and don't you be forgettin' it! I'll bet the two of 'em are on the track of the same thing you're after, and if the truth was known, she ain't any too glad to have you showin' up here. Yet your Uncle Lyman left her something when he died, didn't he?"
"A very generous income for the rest of her life," answered Claire.
"An' yet she ain't satisfied!" Hannah snorted.
"You stay with Mr. Steele and I'll go down and have a look around. If Dan Dallas is coming back from the village, he ought to be here mighty soon."
"If Pat would only come!" sighed Claire. She turned slowly back to the bedroom, and Hannah went downstairs.
True to her prediction, Dallas' tall figure could be seen swinging off the main road. Hannah watched him a minute from the porch, then walked quickly to the wagon, broke off a small stick, and went on to his cabin.
OPENING the door of the cabin, she stepped behind it, unfastening her big apron. In a few minutes the man's footsteps crunched on the gravel outside. Then he stood framed in the open door. As he turned to close it, Hannah's apron was thrown over his head. At the same time, Hannah's large foot tripped him. The next instant he was on the floor with the woman's muscular weight on his head. Hannah commanded sternly:
"Lay still now, or you'll wish you had. Better do as I say!"
"Okay. Dan's voice sounded smothered. "Only, for gosh sake, get off my neck."
For a moment Hannah hesitated. Then she got up and pulled the apron off, holding it over her arm to conceal the aspen stick she carried. "Just keep both hands on this table where I can see 'em."
Dallas looked at her with new respect. "That was mighty neat," he complimented her.
Hannah grinned grimly. "A trick I worked once in the early days on a heathen Injun who figured he'd run his war path through my ranch house."
"Well, what do you want now?" asked Dallas.
"Where'd you get that silencer that rolled off your roof while you was gone? Does it fit that gun over there?"
"I don't reckon it does," he answered. "I ain't had time to find out. I'm telling you straight, I wasn't the one who used it. I found it in the aspen grove after I loaned the gun."
"Loaned the gun?"
"Yep. Eb borrowed it. Said he wanted to get a hawk that had been bothering his chickens."
Hannah sniffed, disbelievingly. "And that would be when?"
"The afternoon Miss Fosdick and her friends came up here."
"An' when'd you get it back?"
"Susie brought it home with me early the morning after Miss Fosdick had been fired at. I didn't know what had happened until the men and Eb came to my cabin. They found the gun had been fired, but Eb didn't have any chance to explain them. It was when he went down to the tool house after breakfast, that he told me he hadn't used the gun himself, and didn't know who had."
"And you think that sounds like a good alibi?" asked Hannah.
"No," he answered. "I don't. But it's the truth, just the same."
After waiting a minute for him to speak, Hannah backed toward the door, evidently satisfied that she could get nothing further from him.
He watched her with a grin. "Goodby," he called. "Come again."
As Hannah hurried up the path to the house, Nick Baum came suddenly around the curve of the road.
"Why, I wasn't expecting to see you, Hannah!" he smiled. "Is— is Claire still here, by any good chance?"
"Yes, she is, Mr. Baum," Hannah replied.
She led the way to the front door, and motioned him in hospitably. Just then Susie came into the hall. She gave a slight start of surprise at sight of the visitor.
"I'll go tell Miss Fosdick you're here, Mr. Baum. Of course you'll be staying for supper," Hannah said.
"Thanks, but I've got to go on to the 'village this evening," he answered. "Just thought I'd drop in to ask Eb Spratt about a man I'm going there to see on business."
"Nick!" exclaimed Claire from the doorway.
Hannah went upstairs, leaving the young people alone. Tenderly Nick Baum took both the girl's hands in his.
"Haven't you anything to tell me yet, Claire?" he asked, looking deep down into her eyes. "I've missed you so while you've been hiding from me up here."
