

Kevin Francis now faces capital murder charge

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Writer

AMARILLO — Pampa native son Kevin Francis is again charged in connection with the murder-for-hire death of his business partner, but this time he may face the death penalty if convicted.

Francis was convicted in March 1980 for asking around about a hit man to kill his business partner, Frank Potts. The charge then was solicitation of capital murder. That crime of merely asking about having someone killed for a payoff carries a maximum penalty of five to 99 years or life, and Francis received a 40-year prison term.

But if Francis is convicted on the new charge of capital murder, he faces a mandatory sentence of life in prison or death.

The 7th Court of Appeals in Amarillo overturned Francis' solicitation conviction last September because the court said the Amarillo trial judge's instructions to the jury were faulty. The state challenged the appeals-court ruling — Francis' lawyers demanded his release from Huntsville.

But Friday a Potter County grand jury returned a sealed indictment against Francis. The new charge of capital murder says Francis acted "as a party with George and Bedale Hicks" in Potts' murder.

The Hickses were convicted in 1980 for actually killing Potts. Each received 99-year sentences.

Potts was hacked and stabbed to death Oct. 8, 1977 inside his downtown Amarillo clothing store. The victim and Francis were co-owners of the store, Barney's Factory Direct Men's Clothing. Potts was stabbed 28 times.

Prosecutors say that Francis had Potts killed in order to collect a $175,000 insurance policy the partners bought just weeks before the murder.

The case against Francis has been controversial from the start. Former Amarillo District Attorney Tom Curtis refused to present the case to a grand jury, citing a lack of evidence.

But a special grand jury investigated the murder in 1979 at the request of the victim's widow, Polly Potts. During the jury's investigation, Curtis was ordered out and later forcibly removed from the jury room.

The sealed indictment Friday was again the result of a special session of a grand jury. The 251st District Court grand jury had its term extended before returning the capital-murder indictment.

When the original indictment was returned, Curtis refused to prosecute Francis. Special Prosecutor Mike Hinton was appointed to the case. He was assisted by Potter County Attorneys George Harwood and John Tull.

Tull recently resigned as Potter County Attorney and entered private practice, but he may again take the case as special prosecutor, District Attorney Danny Hill said Monday.

Tull said he would take the case. "That's probably the biggest case of my career, and I would love to see it through to the end," Tull said.

The present district attorney said he is not opposed to prosecuting Francis, but that Tull is more familiar with the case.

Hill said Francis will be returned from Huntsville to Amarillo for arraignment sometime next week.

White to plead for higher taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White, who has been unable to convince lawmakers of the need for new taxes and teachers' pay raises, launches a grass roots campaign today in an effort to build public support.

White travels to schools in White Settlement and Temple to discuss his proposal with teachers and parents, and begins a week-long advertising campaign on television Wednesday.

White wants to raise taxes on beer, wine, liquor, cigarettes, video machines, computer software, gasoline and utilities sold to industry. He says the new taxes are needed to fund a 24 percent pay raise for public schoolteachers over the next two years.

But White's plan has been met with a lack of enthusiasm in the House, and there are less than two weeks left in the regular session.

It will be the second time White has gone on television to appeal to the public to back his programs.

Speaker Gib Lewis said, "It sounds like a desperate man."

Press secretary Ann Arnold, who announced the $100,000 ad campaign at a hastily called news conference Monday, said the 30-second television

Mrs. Arnold said the new ads would begin airing on television stations in some cities Wednesday and the rest by Thursday. She said they are scheduled to run for about a week "in all 18 major markets" in Texas.

In the ad, White asks viewers to "Contact your legislators today, so that when our children read this chapter in Texas history, they'll learn the governor, the lieutenant governor, the speaker, the Legislature voted to put our children's education above alcohol and cigarettes."

Earlier this year, White sought public support through a televised ad for an elected Public Utility Commission — something the House voted against Monday, the same day his second television campaign was announced.

Mrs. Arnold confirmed the decision to go on television was made as a result of the lack of enthusiasm White received among lawmakers Friday after the governor announced his latest plan.

In the ad, White tells viewers, "Because oil and gas production is down, we simply don't have the dollars needed for education. But that's an investment we can't put off."

"I've proposed raising taxes on alcohol and cigarettes to take teachers from the bottom of the pay scale and educational excellence to the top."

Panhandle farmer says nuke dump would be met with violence

HEREFORD, Texas (AP) — A Panhandle farmer says that this small agricultural town could erupt in guerilla warfare, if federal officials decide to bury high-level nuclear waste under some nearby farmland.

"There are people, ordinary God-fearing people, who will fight you to their final breath to keep the dump site from opening here," Dale Kleuskins told U.S. Energy Department officials at a hearing Monday night.

Farmers and cattlemen in this rich, agricultural region oppose the waste site, and about 600 area residents attended the hearing in the Hereford High School auditorium.

The Deaf Smith County site is one of nine the Energy Department is considering for the $8 billion project, which would be used to bury almost 1.5 million pounds of nuclear waste each year a half mile underground.

A second hearing is scheduled today in nearby Tulia, which is also under consideration for a waste site.

The government plan would bury the waste in shafts drilled near the Ogallala aquifer, which supplies irrigation water for the High Plains.

Kleuskins is a member of People Opposed to Wasted Energy Repositories, a Hereford group fighting selection of the Deaf Smith County site.

"There are a few words that will have to become a part of your vocabulary in 1987 if the test shaft and repository are started here," Dale Kleuskins said. "Words like: 'direct confrontation, armed resistance, sabotage, guerilla warfare

"What will that do for the image of nuclear power — which is, after all, the real reason why we are here tonight? Do your plans for the repository include armed patrols or escorts for trucks carrying waste? If they don't, you'd better add them."

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, who also spoke at the hearing, asked the Energy Department representatives to stop all test drilling in the area until some guidelines are drafted.

Hance criticized what he said was the lack of information about the plan to put atomic garbage in shafts drilled a half mile underground.

Under a bill passed this spring by the Texas Senate, any project such as the DOE's proposed drilling near Hereford must guarantee that no wastes be leaked into the aquifer, which supplies irrigation waters for farmers from Nebraska to New Mexico.

The bill, sponsored by Canyon Democrat Bill Sarpaulis, requires the state Department of Water Resources to approve any plan to drill shafts through Texas' part of the aquifer. The measure is pending in the House.

The area around Hereford is some of the state's richest farmland, and also supports about 1 million head of cattle.

School gunman had previously threatened cabinet members

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

BRENTWOOD, N.Y. (AP) — A mentally ill man who shot and wounded a student and principal, then held 18 students hostage in a social studies classroom before killing himself, was a loser seeking revenge for his dismissal two weeks ago, officials said.

Robert O. Wickes, whose troubled life ended a few minutes before midnight Monday after a siege that terrified students and their parents, had also been watched by the Secret Service for making threats against the Reagan administration, his lawyer said.

Dressed in Army fatigues and carrying a .22-caliber rifle, Wickes held police in this Long Island community at bay for about nine hours. Many of his student hostages became sick or faked illness to gain permission to leave.

Others were released one at a time in return for a local radio station agreeing to play song requests — including the Beatles' "Penny Lane" — and his own "epistle to the world."

Wickes, 24, described as a paranoid schizophrenic, had been angry at East Junior High since May 5, when he was fired as a substitute teacher's aide because of a fight with Louis Borgos, a 15-year-old student.

He returned Monday, Borgos' first day back after a suspension for the incident, and shot him and Stephen Howland, the school principal.

Howland was released from the hospital several hours after the shooting. Borgos was listed in stable condition.

But Wickes, who vowed he was making his "last stand," carried out his suicide threat, shooting himself in the head with his rifle. He was pronounced dead shortly before midnight.

The siege began in Room 201 about 12:45 p.m. with 18 student hostages. Although the students had called Wickes "the big duck" and often made fun of his clothes and mannerisms, no one laughed at him Monday.

"He walked into the classroom with this gun and tried to push our teacher out," said Angelo Bravo, 15. "But before he could, she grabbed the phone and contacted the office. She said 'Call the police.'"

"He told all of us to get down on the floor. We did. We were all pretty scared," Bravo said.

Just then Howland arrived at the door. Bravo said Wickes turned and shot the administrator in the face.

"Then he told everyone to lift up their faces. He saw Louie (Borgos) and asked: 'How long were you suspended?' Louie said, 'One week.' Then he shot Louie."

The wounded youth, shot in the abdomen, gasped for air. "I'm having trouble breathing. Can I leave the room, sir?" asked Borgos.

Wickes approved and Wilfred Mercado, 15, dragged Borgos to safety. None of the other students were hurt. After he let half the students go for a variety of excuses, Wickes dug in for the long haul.

He issued the "epistle," which said in part: "I cried and no one heard. So now I cry on you, you dirty swine. You turned your back so now I reciprocated, you see ... power wins. Even so, I will paint the road with carnage."

His lawyer, Gerald Lotto, said Wickes was a "paranoid schizophrenic" who had been watched by the Secret Service because of threats against Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State George Shultz.

Wickes said he wanted "no cops" and told the students: "I'm not leaving here alive. You kids messed up my career."

As time wore on, Wickes released more hostages, but only after the radio station played the tunes he had requested or read his statement.

Pair indicted for hammer attack here

By LORI-ANN D'ANTONIO
Staff Writer

CLARENDON — Two men who were charged with the beating of a man on Interstate 40 in early April were indicted by a 100th District Grand Jury here Monday.

In a special session of the Grand Jury, Kendall Novelli and Richard Wayne Vaught were indicted on charges of attempted capital murder after they allegedly beat Jesse John Doiron with a 2½ pound hammer and threw him out of his van on I-40 April 5.

Doiron suffered a ruptured spleen, broken ribs, a concussion, multiple internal injuries and lacerations on the right side of his head. Doctors at Coronado Community Hospital in Pampa worked for nearly three hours to try and repair his injuries, and he was in the Intensive Care Unit for several days.

When the attack occurred, law enforcement officers theorized the attack may have occurred in Gray County, since Doiron was thrown out on the highway just east of Groom.

However, Donley County sheriff's deputies discovered that Doiron had allegedly been assaulted on the south side of the county line, placing the attack in Donley County. That particular section of I-40 curves around the county line, and since the attack occurred in the eastbound lane on the south side of the highway, the case became a Donley County case.

The two suspects were found in Fayetteville, N.C. with the van they took from Doiron. The alleged theft of the van makes the crime attempted capital murder rather than attempted murder, since the attack occurred during the commission of a felony.

Doiron said he met Vaught and Novelli in Clines Corner, N.M. when he stopped to fill his company-owned van with gas. They asked for a ride, and he agreed. The three spent the night in Amarillo on April 4, and left Amarillo that morning.

The attack allegedly occurred on the highway when the hitchhikers asked to stop, and Doiron did. They then hit him on the right side of his head with a hammer, he said, and tried to push him out of the van. As they began to drive away in the van, Doiron became tangled in the seat belt and was dragged along the highway and possibly run over, according to deputies.

Doiron flagged down a Texas Highway Department snowplow and was taken to CCH in Pampa by the Groom ambulance. Vaught and Novelli were found and arrested April 12 in North Carolina, where Vaught had told Doiron he was going.

After they were found and apprehended by Cumberland County deputies in Fayetteville, officers discovered that the man who called himself Andy Stein was actually Kendall Novelli, who had escaped from a California prison camp in January of this year.

Novelli was serving time for burglary and vehicle manslaughter in the California Department of Corrections Rainbow Fire Camp, a minimum security camp in Jamestown, Calif.

Vaught and Novelli were arrested March 18 in Palos Verdes Estates, Calif. for burglary of a habitation, and released on personal recognizance bonds. They then jumped bail and left California.

Doiron County Sheriff Jimmy Thompson and Texas Ranger Bill Baten of Pampa went to Fayetteville to pick the pair up, and drove them back to Clarendon. They were arraigned on April 18 before Justice of the Peace Bud Lovelady, who denied them bond. They have been confined to the Donley County Jail since then.

Doiron, who was released from the hospital on April 18, will probably have to return for the trial of Vaught and Novelli, Baten said. No trial date has been set yet.

Burned tot still in critical shape

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) - A 4-year-old Georgia boy burned over his entire body in an arson fire at his home remained in critical condition today at a Galveston hospital.

Tony Thompson was transferred over the weekend from Augusta, Ga. to Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children, where doctors will try to restore his skin with a relatively new procedure.

The child was in critical and stable condition, said a hospital spokeswoman who asked not to be identified.

Doctors plan to remove layers of the boy's burned skin and put it in a liquid where it will be cultured and grown before being reattached to the patient to start regeneration of new skin.

The procedure is relatively new but has proven successful in recent cases, doctors said.

The boy received third-degree burns all over his body in the Wednesday night fire that destroyed his family's home near Tennille, Ga., said Mack Rogers of the Washington County, Ga., sheriff's department.

The fire was started by man who broke into home, poured a liquid on the floor and set it on fire, Rogers said.

Mrs. Walker's former husband, 38-year-old Richard Walker of Oconee, Ga., was charged with first-degree arson, Rogers said.

The Walkers' 5-month-old son, Richard Walker Jr., also was burned.

It was too dark to see O-rings on crippled jetliner: mechanic

By ANNE S. CROWLEY

MIAMI (AP) - Two Eastern Airlines mechanics said it was too dark to see whether tiny rubber oil seals were in place when they serviced a jumbo jet before it nearly ditched in the Atlantic Ocean when all three engines stalled.

The seals, known as "O-rings," were missing on the Eastern L-1011 during a flight May 5 when oil leaked out and the engines quit.

The plane dropped to within 4,000 feet of the ocean but made it back to Miami after pilot Richard E. Boddy and co-pilot Steven C. Thompson managed to restart the tail engine. None of the 172 people aboard was injured.

The National Transportation Safety Board was to continue taking depositions from other Eastern employees today as it investigates the near-ditching.

Mechanics Lynn H. Burris and James A. Sunbury, who worked on the jet during the overnight shift before Flight 855 took off for Nassau, Bahamas, told the NTSB on Monday they could not see whether the O-rings were in place on the oil plugs they installed in three Rolls Royce RB-211 engines.

"It was dark on the ramp," Burris said. "You have the headlights from a small tractor and the ramp lights, but it's still very dark."

Each engine gets one oil plug, or chip detector, which is fitted with two rubber O-rings. The magnetized plugs are changed after 25 hours of flying time to detect any metal chips that have accumulated from wear inside the engine, officials say.

Sunbury and Burris said they had never before got a chip detector without the O-rings and did not closely check those they received about 2 a.m. on May 5, partly because they were labeled "serviceable" - ready for use on a jet engine.

The plugs were in frosted plastic pouches, Burris said. "You could see that there was something in it, but you couldn't see what it was," he said.

Both mechanics had flashlights. Both said it was their responsibility to be sure the O-rings were on the plugs before installing them. Yet neither man did.

"It was just outside the engine cowl and there wasn't any light," Sunbury said. "I just slipped it (the plug) out of the package and slipped the other one in."

The mechanics have been suspended by Eastern Airlines for 30 days and notified they will be reassigned to different jobs after they return, pending a new certification exam.

Safety board chairman Jim Burnett asked the men if they would have noticed the absence of rings in daylight. "Yes, sir," each replied.

In other testimony Monday, Eastern officials revealed there had been a dozen previous in-flight engine failures because of oil seals that were leaking, misplaced or missing.

Kenneth Wilson, Eastern maintenance chief at the Miami terminal, said the 12 previous failures were "system-wide" and not easily traceable.

"Because they were so scattered, most of us weren't aware of them," Wilson said in a sworn deposition.

"Unfortunately, this incident had to bring it to our attention," Wilson said. "It's a routine, simple procedure that's done so frequently, I don't think anyone realized the magnitude of the problem we had."

He told the safety board that Eastern is repackaging the O-rings together with the plugs on which they fit. That way, he said, a mechanic should remember to replace the seals before inserting a new plug during engine maintenance.

Past practice, he said, was either to slip the rings onto the plugs or to keep them in separate packages.

"All chip detectors in the stock room will have spare rings in the envelope with them," Wilson said, "so there is no confusion on the part of the individual receiving them."

Afterward, he said, mechanics will run a jet's engines for 30 seconds to two minutes while checking for oil leaks. There had been no set time for the test in the past, and the mechanics who worked on the L-1011 testified they "motored" for only about 10 seconds while one of them looked for signs of leakage.

"We've done some tests in the past two weeks," Wilson said. "After about 15 seconds, if there is going to be an oil leak, it would appear. To allow for a margin of error or safety, we set it at 30 seconds."

ARGYLE, Iowa - On one side is the multiflora rose, a thorny fighter with the ability to dig in and hold on. On the other side is the farmer, armed with herbicide pellets to kill the scrawny, spreading bush. The farmers are considered the underdogs in this modern-day war of the roses.

On Iowa's farms today the subject is roses

By CYNTHIA BENJAMIN

ARGYLE, Iowa (AP) - Battle lines are being drawn across the pastures of southeastern Iowa for a modern day war of the roses.

On one side is the multiflora rose, a thorny fighter with the ability to dig in. On the other side is the farmer, armed with herbicide pellets to kill the scrawny, spreading bush. The farmers are considered the underdogs.

"I was spending all my spare time grubbing them out, but they kept gaining on me," says farmer Albert Storms, a veteran of the rose campaign.

"They have ornery thorns, just like a fishhook. If they get into your skin, you've got to work them out just the way they came in," he says. "They can really tear clothes up."

And to prick the farmers' pride is the fact that they once deliberately planted the scrawny bush at the urging of the federal government.

A native of Japan, the multiflora rose was introduced to the United States more than 40 years ago. It was touted as a "living fence" that would also control erosion. Seeds were grown in state-owned nurseries and planted by government employees.

The rose is found in nearly every state east of Nebraska, as well as parts of Oregon, Washington and California, but is not considered a major problem in most of them, says Robert S. MacLauchlan, a national plant materials specialist with the Soil Conservation Service in Washington.

Besides Iowa, states currently having problems with the plant include Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio and Missouri, he said.

In Iowa, the Soil Conservation Service grew the plant experimentally and found that it was ideal for cultivation as fences, ornamental shrubs, and wildlife breeding grounds.

The conservation service also reported that the rose would not spread in Iowa because the climate was too cold. That was the "big mistake," according to Thatcher Johnson, Iowa's deputy secretary of agriculture.

Instead, seeds which passed through the digestive track of birds could, and did, germinate. Within 20 years, pasture lands in almost every state in the nation were being choked by the hardy rose.

The multiflora rose is capable of growing up to 10 feet high, with 15 foot stems that bend down to the ground. Prickly, hooked thorns on the stems make it more like a blackberry briar patch than a rose bush, although the plant produces white or pinkish flowers characteristic of its breed.

"It makes a good fence, that's for sure," Storms scoffs. "It gets into your pastures and gets so big and tall and spread out that the cattle won't go near it. And it chokes out all the grass."

Last year, in response to a request from Des Moines County officials, the state Department of Agriculture and the Iowa Conservation Commission declared the rose a noxious weed.

"It is like many other well-meant introductions such as kudzu in the South and like the carp and the European starling," a position paper issued by the two groups said. "Like these mistakes, it is too late now to ever hope to totally eradicate the plant."

In Iowa, the rose's deepest inroads have been in the southeastern part of the state, where winters are just warm enough for the rose to thrive.

While no figures on infestation are available, the rose is believed to have affected almost all pasture land in at least seven counties - Des Moines, Lee, Keokuk, Jefferson, Van Buren, Louisa and Henry.

The solution is "high-quality pasture management," says Herb Davison, the Lee County district conservationist.

The rose will not spread, he says, if the fields that surround it are mowed, cultivated or chemically treated.

"Unfortunately, in this part of Iowa, many of our pasture acres are owned by small landowners. They are not spending the limited time or money they have taking care of their pastures," he says.

So far, the federal government has not provided much help in Iowa.

"The burden pretty well comes down on the shoulders of the landowners," Johnson said.

Tordon 10K, a clay-based herbicide made by Dow Chemical, has proven effective in fighting the rose, agriculture officials say. But it comes in pellets that must be applied by hand, a time-consuming practice and a difficult job if the prickly rose bush has become dense.

Storms says he has found herbicides more effective than digging up the rose bushes and their roots, but he still has "a ways to go" before his 130 acres of pasture land are free.

"People who aren't fighting the rose are going to be out of luck in a few years," he says. "They won't even be able to walk through their place - it will just be wilderness."

Vote switch revives blue law repeal

AUSTIN (AP) — Repeal of the Blue law still has a chance of passage this session, says the sponsor of a bill given new life in committee when a member who was previously opposed to it decided to switch his vote.

Rep. Bill Ceverha, R-Richardson, had been unable to spring his bill from the House State Affairs Committee where the vote to send it to the House floor had remained locked at 7-8.

But Rep. Smith Gilley, D-Greenville, said Monday he would change sides because "the overwhelming majority of the people I represent want the Blue law repealed."

Gilley said he had been against the bill "mostly because of personal convictions."

Ceverha's bill would allow local-option repeal of the so-called Sunday closing law. He said the committee would likely vote the bill out today or Wednesday.

Earlier Monday, Ceverha had declared the bill dead for this session because he was unable to sway any of the eight committee members opposed to the bill.

Rep. Mary Polk, D-El Paso, had tried another tack when it appeared last month that Ceverha's bill would not budget and introduced a bill that would put the issue before voters in a statewide referendum.

In April, she was confident that a different panel, the House Committee on Business and Commerce, would send her bill to the floor, but she said support for her measure fell away.

"Two good solid 'yes' votes changed," she said Monday. She blamed the switch on lobbying efforts by automobile dealers.

Ceverha said lack of activism on the part of repeal advocates was responsible for previous inaction on repeal.

"It's the old thing of not enough pressure being put on the Legislature to pass it," Ceverha said. "The people for repeal, which is mainly the discount stores, I guess, just aren't motivated enough. You can send out polls and people will say they're against it, but people in general won't take affirmative action."

The Blue law is often called a Sunday closing law, but actually it prohibits sale of a long list of items on both days of the weekend. Some stores stay open on Sunday, but rope off areas where the prohibited articles are displayed. Some close Saturday instead of Sunday.

Repeal sponsors thought they had a better chance this session than in the past after a referendum on the Republican primary ballot showed strong support for getting rid of the Blue law.

Mrs. Polk said if the bill dies this session, she has "interim plans."

"If I had a business, I would rope part of it off on Saturday and not sell those items and rope off another part of it on Sunday and say you can't buy those items," she said. "I would confuse the issue so much, it would be impossible to tell what I was doing."

Such action, she said, would "make the public angry."

"We've been so unsuccessful in repealing this law," Mrs. Polk said. "I'm willing to try something else in the interim — a little civil disobedience."

House rejects elected PUC members

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White's campaign to start electing instead of appointing the Public Utility Commission failed to impress House members who overwhelmingly rejected the idea.

Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, tried to amend a PUC "reform" bill extending the life of the commission to include election of the PUC's three members.

"Trust the people that elected you," Gibson told the House. But his amendment lost 104-39.

The Senate rejected White's plan for an elected PUC in April.

Ironically, legislators who argued against the White plan pointed to the governor's recent "excellent" appointments to the commission that regulates electric, telephone and water rates.

Rep. Elton Bomer, D-Montalba, sponsor of the bill Gibson was trying to amend, said gubernatorial appointees are more qualified than elected commissioners would be.

"The governor has done an excellent job" in picking PUC members, he said, arguing against the White plan.

Earlier, Gibson had complained to reporters that Speaker Gib Lewis lobbied against an elected PUC, but Lewis denied any involvement.

Lewis said he met with House members Monday regarding the bill, but that he did not tell them to vote against Gibson's amendment.

"I told them to help Mr. Bomer and stay with the bill," Lewis told reporters. He said some members told him they planned to vote for the Gibson amendment.

"I said that's fine and dandy," Lewis said. "I did not tell them to vote one way or another on an elected PUC."

Gibson tried another amendment that would elect a PUC chairman and allow the governor to appoint two other members. It, too, failed.

The bill was passed 129-17. It needs another House vote before going to a conference committee where differences in the House and Senate versions will be reconciled.

White began pushing for an elected PUC shortly after his election last year. He took his plea to Texans in a television commercial earlier this year.

After the House vote, he issued a statement that said he was "extremely disappointed" in rejection of an elected PUC.

"But I believe this issue created some of the political pressure necessary to win approval of other reforms incorporated in the bill," White said.

Utility lobbyists, who filled portions of the House gallery Monday, cheered the vote against an elected PUC.

Bomer said the bill would do more to guarantee fair utility rates than would an elected commission. He called it a "pro-consumer bill you'll all be proud of."

Texans "couldn't care less whether (the commission) is elected or appointed, just give them lower utility bills," he said.

Later, the House rejected 126-9 an attempt by Rep. Carlyle Smith, D-Grand Prairie, to put more controls on competing long-distance telephone companies. The bill contains a provision allowing the PUC to divide up the state between AT&T and Southwestern Bell to conform with a court-ordered plan for divestiture of Bell from the parent company.

House members also decisively rejected a proposal by Rep. Talmadge Heflin, R-Houston, labeled by one joking member as a "Scrooge amendment" that would have done away with "lifeline" rates — subsidized, lower bills for poor senior citizens and handicapped people.

"I'm against a welfare program hidden in the PUC," Heflin argued before his amendment was tabled 117-27.

Both the House and Senate versions of the bill call for a "public counsel" to represent consumers at rate hearings. However, the House plan puts the counsel in the Texas Department of Community Affairs while the Senate plan would set up an independent counsel.

Both bills would: — Limit the amount of construction work in progress (CWIP) that can be passed on to consumers.

Payload lofted

A giant helium-filled balloon rises to the Texas sky Monday after being launched from Palestine with a two-ton payload of scientific instruments. The 800-foot tall balloon developed a leak and the instruments intended to measure the ozone in the stratosphere were damaged, postponing the experiment. (AP Laserphoto)

Mission scrubbed after balloons fail

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — NASA officials are investigating the failure of two $55,000 balloons that scrubbed a mission to study the Earth's ozone layer and badly damaged more than $1 million worth of sensitive equipment.

One of the 800-foot-high, 450-foot wide balloons wrapped around some trees on launch Monday and the second began leaking half through its ascent.

Launches of two other balloons Monday afternoon then had to be cancelled, said Keith Hazlewood, director of engineering for the National Balloon Launch Center.

Each of the balloons carried two tons of scientific instruments in its gondola to measure the ozone in the stratosphere as well as dozens of other chemical compounds that could be depleting the levels of the vital ozone.

An investigation was underway into the failures, which were not unusual.

Hazlewood said in a telephone interview Monday night.

"NASA funds this balloon facility as a moderate risk facility and 85 to 90 percent rate is acceptable," he said.

"The launch today is part of the 10 or 15 percent of failures we have every year."

The balloons were being released simultaneously Monday morning when holes were spotted in the lower part of one of them as a crew chief prepared release its payload from a tractor beneath, said Bob Kububa, head of operations.

The $1 million payload was not released, but its safety cables snapped, dumping the equipment on some concrete, he said. The balloon flew a short distance before blowing into trees nearby.

The second balloon reached an altitude of 70,000 feet, 60,000 feet short of its destination, when it began leaking, Hazlewood said.

The balloon's payload parachuted back and was recovered in good condition near Center, about 100 miles to the east, he said.

The gondola of the first balloon sustained very heavy damage, said Bob Watson, science coordinator for the project from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"Balloon is a risky business and this is the only way to go about it," said Watson. "Studies from aircraft and satellite is no substitute."

He said damage to the instruments was "extensive to major. Not totaled, though."

The balloon's payload contained seven instruments — two from England and one each from Japan, Italy, the United States, Canada and France.

Scientists decided to launch the balloons despite ground gusts of 5 to 7 knots. The launch repeatedly was delayed because of imperfect weather conditions.

Ozone protects the Earth from the sun's ultraviolet radiation. Some chemicals — notably fluorocarbons used as refrigerants and propellants in some aerosol cans — can deplete or alter the distribution of ozone.

The tests are part of an international scientific inquiry into the causes and extent of ozone damage in the stratosphere and scientists from around the world have gathered at the Palestine facility.

Therapeutic Advances According to the American Cancer Society, about fifty drugs already have been found effective against cancer, and others are still being tested.

Six acquitted of pirating TV signals

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal jury has acquitted six former owners and salesmen of a microwave antenna company who were accused of selling equipment to pirate private broadcast signals.

The panel deliberated four hours over two days before finding the defendants innocent Monday on all 22 counts.

Acquitted were Pete Stone, 43; Rhea Laws, 28; Roger Chappel, 56; Ted Connor, 52; Scott Reynolds, 20; and Shayne Stone, 21; all former owners and salesmen of the defunct Pirate Video Microwave.

"I'm relieved but not happy," Laws said. "There is no law against selling microwave antennas. It was an attempt to legislate by indictment."

The defendants were charged with illegal interception of airwaves, copyright infringement and mail fraud. The copyright infringement and mail fraud charges stemmed from a program guide provided to customers.

Pirate Video sold antennas and converters used to pick up cable television signals without subscribing to the service.

Juror J.W. Reneau said the panel believed the laws weren't true to the facts.

"If we were to punish these people, we ought to punish all the sellers and users of the equipment," Reneau said.

Special Prosecutor Dan Kamin said he was disappointed, but not surprised, by the verdict.

"Pay TV is viewed as big business. Isn't there an innate distrust and dislike for companies perceived as big business?" Kamin asked.

But defense attorney David Berg said "overwhelming" evidence proved that there is no "clear-cut law" governing use of antennas.

"Without a law, you have no crime. That's exactly what we proved," Berg said.

During the month-long trial, Kamin told jurors that the defendants grossed $262,254 in sales while operating the business between 1981 and 1982.

"The technology involved in this case is new, but the law to be applied goes back as far as when God wrote across the stone tablets, 'Thou shalt not steal,'" Kamin said.

However, the defendants were assured by lawyers, other business operators and Federal Communication Commission personnel that there was nothing illegal about the business.

Extortion trial of Colorado woman delayed

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has delayed the trial of a woman accused in a $15 million bomb-extortion plot against Gulf Oil Chemical Co. until an appeals court decides whether prosecutors violated a promise of immunity.

Attorneys for Jill Renee Bird, 35, have argued she should not have been indicted because a Colorado prosecutor promised her immunity from prosecution in exchange for information from her common-law husband, John Marvin McBride.

U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald last month upheld Ms. Bird's indictment, saying McBride had no right to make the agreement in exchange for immunity.

However, the judge on Monday postponed Ms. Bird's trial until the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled on the matter.

Ms. Bird, McBride and three other men, all from Durango, Colo., were accused of threatening to blow up Gulf's Cedar Bayou refinery unless they received $15 million. The five were arrested in early October and indicted on 12 counts of extortion.

One defendant, Timothy Justice, 30, has pleaded guilty to two counts of the indictment and will be sentenced after he testifies for the government, attorneys have said.

McBride, 46, agreed to tell authorities where bombs had been planted if Ms. Bird was released and granted immunity from prosecution.

At the time the agreement was made, five bombs had been found at the refinery, located about 30 miles east of Houston.

One of the bombs exploded harmlessly, and four others were defused. Despite McBride's agreement, no other explosives were found.

In February, prosecutors argued that the deal with McBride never would have been made if they had known that all bombs had been found.

Caring for aged rests with us...

One indication of the advancement and humaneness of a society is the way it treats its elderly.

For a society to ignore its older members means that it places limited value on human life. It shows a lack of care for the future of a culture and those it comprises.

As attacks on the federal deficit continue, the Department of Health and Human Services also is reducing the amount of money that is channeled into programs for the elderly. To remedy the shortfall, communities will have to step in and take over the responsibility of funding programs for their older citizens.

Recently, officials at the Texas Department of Aging warned Odessans of impending budget cuts in programs for aged Texans. They suggested that a community foundation be established to continue funding these programs.

Such a fund could pool donations, memorials and fund-raising money, and a local agency for the elderly could allocate the money. It could make sure that our senior citizen centers are provided for and that other programs are maintained, such as nutrition programs, in-home services, senior Texas employment programs, retired senior volunteer services and foster grandparents programs.

The department of aging folks suggest that such a fund be a legal entity to ensure donors that their money will be handled professionally.

Communities like Odessa must take the helm and protect the programs we have for our elderly citizens. We must do it with our own money and people, and we must do it for ourselves.

They keep it all in family

Ability tends to run in families. Yet it seems something more than coincidence that the sons and daughters and other relatives of top White House people have found high-salaried jobs and choice overseas posts with the U.S. Information Agency.

They include Caspar W. Weinberger Jr., son of the secretary of defense; Monica Clark, daughter of national security adviser William P. Clark; Barbara Haig, daughter of former secretary of state Alexander Haig; and Steve Gergen, nephew of White House communications chief David R. Gergen.

At an annual salary of about $50,000, Weinberger Jr. will be making almost as much as senior.

Family friends of Vice President George Bush and White House chief of staff James A. Baker III are also among some 150 political appointees to USIA since the Reagan administration came into office, despite a hiring freeze elsewhere in the government.

A spokesman for USIA says the agency believes that the people in question are all qualified for the positions they have been hired for.

We believe it, too. We also believe their family connections didn't exactly hinder favorable consideration of their applications.

Some members of Congress want to look into what is already being called "Kiddiegate." We doubt if they'll look too deeply, though, lest someone begin checking on how many congressional family members and friends have been put on the public payroll.

It's time we took a new look at an old woman

By RUSTY BROWN

"For men, they created retirement plans, medical benefits, profit sharing and gold watches."

"For women, they created Mother's Day." If you haven't seen that ad, you will. It's part of a national campaign to increase awareness of the problems of older women - the fastest growing segment of the population.

The public service message also draws attention to and explains the efforts of the Older Women's League - known as OWL - an organization focused on midlife and older women.

OWL's chief crusader is 68-year-old Tish Sommers, about whom much has been written in the last decade. She's the one who created the phrase "displaced homemaker," for women like herself. At 57, she was reeling from a divorce. She felt yanked from the familiar: her identity, her lifestyle, her security. After 30 years out of the job market, her future was bleak.

A woman of great inner strength, she adopted the credo: "Don't agonize, organize." She co-founded (with Laurie Shields) the displaced homemakers' movement and initiated federal legislation that eventually funded job-training programs for displaced homemakers.

Our paths have crossed in the past and we met again recently when she spoke at a gerontological society convention. We talked, sitting at a picnic table in a downtown park, luxuriating in the warmth of the spring sun. Her hair, curly as ever, is more peppered with gray since we last met. Her energy is not as enduring. It's the cancer she struggles against.

"I've been in the fourth stage for four years now," she said, then changed the subject to one she preferred: her hopes for OWL, founded in 1980 at the White House Mini-Conference on Older Women. She has so many things she wants to do for older women:

Combat the sex and age discrimination that often prevents older women from getting jobs.

Correct inequities in private pension plans that can deprive a woman of her husband's benefits if he dies too young, if they divorce, or if she is not listed as his beneficiary.

Work for more fair and adequate Social Security benefits for women.

Make health insurance available to the approximately 4 million women, aged 45 to 65, who lose it because of divorce or widowhood.

Ms. Sommers learned of the latter peril personally. She was without health insurance following her divorce.

"Because of the high cost, I thought I'd wing it as a lot of women do," she says. "But when I was 64, the cancer I thought was cured returned. I couldn't get Medicare until age 65. Luckily, I had an understanding doctor and a small inheritance with which to pay the bills."

In addition to eliminating some of the financial risks for older women, she wants to improve the quality of their lives.

"Many are very isolated," she says "almost as if they were under 'house arrest.' Between their meager finances - 60 percent live on S.S. alone - and the crime in the streets, they stay at home with only a TV for company."

"I hope the 60 OWL chapters already formed will come up with some creative solutions to loneliness," she says, mentioning shared housing as an example. "Elderly women living alone should not be deprived of the touching, caring and sharing that make us warm and human."

She also wants to improve their public image. "We shouldn't be ashamed to call ourselves older women. We need to show others we can develop new skills and be involved."

She referred to a talk she gives entitled "Age is Becoming" in which she tells older women that they are evolving now as much as at any time in their lives.

"Being older," she says, "is not being over the hill. It's just a new hill to climb."

Time with Tish Sommers is a precious hour in the sun. Her mood is serene, and optimism shines through her words. Courage rests lightly on her shoulders.

A dunce cap for the teacher...

By PAUL HARVEY

A dunce cap for the teacher! April 26, educators were summoned to the White House, where they got their grades read aloud and their britches blistered.

A National Commission on Excellence in Education had been commissioned by Education Secretary Terrel Bell.

For most of two years, the Commission on Excellence has studied public schools without finding any "excellence."

Instead, the board's 18 members - and significantly, unanimously - agreed that our schools are suffering a rising tide of mediocrity. "low standards, lack of purpose, ineffective use of resources, failure to challenge students..."

The report says the deterioration of education is so pronounced as to leave our nation in danger. There has been a shocking collapse of student performance since the 1960s.

The report denounced what it called "a smorgasbord of electives in high schools...all appetizers and desserts..."

So the commission wants tougher school standards, longer school days and a longer school year. The commission wants high schools to require four years of English, three years of math and science, three years of computer science and three years of social studies.

And more homework: "much more homework." The commission seems to have overlooked nothing - but it did overlook a very significant something.

When President Reagan read the commission's scathing report on education, he called it a mandate to dismantle the Department of Education, restore prayer in schools, and help parents send their children to private schools.

He also failed to mention a substantive factor in the deterioration of American education since the sixties.

Improving education will cost more money, the commissioners concede. They, like the president, believe that this is a local, not a national, responsibility.

If state and local governments are to re-assume their responsibility to finance and govern schools, then they must be permitted to finance "and govern."

And that brings us to the "grand omission," to the one significant factor in the deterioration of American education which these 18 commissioners "neglected" to mention.

This further reform will require that the Supreme Court reverse itself, in the national interest. If local governments are now to re-assume the responsibility for educating our children they must not be constrained by federal government requirements which are prohibitively costly and counter-productive.

The American system of education for 20 years has been going downhill on a cross-town bus!

Cosmos according to Cooley...

By OSCAR COOLEY

The comet, IRAS - Araki - Alcock, which paid us a visit May 10, was totally unexpected. Man did not know it existed until its discovery on April 25 and here it was, the nearest comet to Earth in the last 200 years. This shows how little we really know about the universe.

The more we study this thing called the universe - Earth, Sun, Moon, planets, stars, comets, space - the more mysterious it becomes. Its vastness is beyond man's comprehension. "Near" as IRAS came, it was still 3 million miles away.

The number and variety of objects that people the universe are surprising, but the fact that each of these heavenly bodies has its place and stays in that place - the orderliness of the whole - is amazing. It is this order, or harmony which has engrossed man for centuries. Johannes Kepler, 16th century mathematician and astronomer, spent his life in demonstrating the order of the universe.

Kepler was a devout Christian. So was Isaac Newton. Albert Einstein was an active Zionist and made his first visit to America to promote Zionism. The essence of Christianity is the belief that God is responsible for the vastness and orderliness of the universe and that nevertheless, he knows and loves little man. "What is man that thou art mindful of him..."

The universe occupies space, but it occupies it not for just an instant but over time. Space and time are two vital factors, or features, of the universe. If it did not possess these features, it would not exist.

Time and space are peculiarly indafinable. How does one state their extent, their limits? We use the expression, "until the end of time." But one cannot imagine an "end" to time. "End of time" is just an extravagant way of saying "for a very long time." A similarly extravagant word we often use is "forever."

Space is on the same order: man cannot conceive of an end, or boundary, of space - a kind of jumping-off place. If I jumped off, what would I jump into? More space, of course. In short, there is no limit, or end, to space.

Pioneer 10, that spaceship which was sent up from the U.S. 11 years ago and which has traveled through the solar system and is now in outer space, will presumably travel on and on, never arriving at an outermost bound. (I am assuming it does not go near enough a star or other body that the gravitational pull of that body causes it to go into orbit around it.)

How can anything be limitless, as I have said time and space evidently are? This is part of the great mystery.

Everyone should study astronomy, or the even broader subject, cosmology. Your encyclopedia is a good place to begin. If you find yourself drowning in mathematical symbols, close the book and look for more popular treatments, such as those of Carl Sagan. But don't expect anybody to give you the answers to all the questions, for we don't have the answers.

So a coalition of insurance companies is helping to finance a recovery - of - stolen - property program undertaken by the Santa Ana (CA) police. It's an interesting concept, financing of police services by those who stand to benefit the most from them. Wonder how much "vice" enforcement would happen if those activities were financed by voluntary contributions rather than general tax seizures?

Speaks to UAW

Senator Howard Metzenbaum, a Democrat from Ohio, blasts President Reagan's economic policies as he speaks to the United Auto Workers convention in Dallas Monday. Some 5,000 persons, representing 1.1 million UAW members, are attending the week long convention. (AP Laserphoto)

UAW delegates reject requests for membership wide elections

DALLAS (AP) — Delegates at the United Auto Workers union constitutional convention overwhelmingly rejected dissidents' pleas that members be allowed to vote directly in the selection of the UAW's top leaders.

Meanwhile, the president-designate of the UAW, optimistic he will be elected Wednesday, said Monday in an interview that the UAW will remain virtually unchanged after President Douglas A. Fraser retires.

Owen Bieber, vice president in charge of the union's General Motors Corp. department, also said he will "have something say on Thursday" about GM's joint venture with Toyota Motor Corp.

In addition, the more than 2,500 delegates at the convention in Dallas overwhelmingly approved resolutions supporting full employment and legislation that would require a certain percentage of U.S.-made parts in cars sold in this country.

And the vice president in charge of the UAW's Chrysler Corp. department said officials from Chrysler plants nationwide will decide in July whether to start early contract talks with the automaker.

"Realistically, it would be extremely difficult — if not impossible — for a local union member or officer to mount a successful campaign against an incumbent," Bob King, chairman of the constitution committee report, said in opposition to a direct vote election system during two hours of debate over the issue.

Now, the union's top leaders, in a 26-member executive board body, select each new president, meaning candidates only have to campaign directly with executive board members.

Traditionally, the president-designate then is formally elected by convention delegates.

Regional directorships, which make up 17 of the 26 executive board seats, are filled by delegate elections, not direct membership vote.

Officials of Local 72 in Kenosha, Wis., spearheaded a drive advocated by 15 other locals out of the UAW's 1,500 U.S. and Canadian locals to change that system which they said insulates top leaders because the rank and file cannot vote them out of office.

But in a nearly 9-to-1 margin, delegates voted to support the current system and rebuffed an attempt to get a roll call on the issue.

Bieber, 53, was selected by the executive board late last year to succeed Fraser, 66, who must retire because of union rules on mandatory retirement after age 65.

"I can't stand here and tell you all what I'm going to do in the coming months ... (but) the union is going to continue as it has in the past," Bieber said.

The only thing that will change is the style of leadership, he said, adding

"I'm looking forward to Wednesday," election day at the convention.

Asked about GM's agreement with Toyota that will create 3,000 jobs at an idle GM plant in Fremont, Calif., Bieber said: "Our position is it has to be UAW people working in that plant ... and they have to hire from former Fremont workers."

Some 6,800 workers were laid off when the plant closed early last year, but Bieber would not comment on getting workers recalled on a seniority basis.

Delegates easily approved resolutions on full employment and the so-called domestic content legislation.

Fraser predicted the domestic content bill, now in the U.S. House, will pass the House by the lawmakers' August recess.

But he told delegates the union, main backer of the bill, will need help getting it through the U.S. Senate.

The legislation will cause President Reagan real headaches if it winds up at his desk as the 1984 presidential campaign is under way, he said.

Marc Stepp, vice president in charge of the UAW's Chrysler department, said union leaders from Chrysler plants will meet July 27-28 in Huntsville, Ala., to decide if they want to start bargaining early.

The current contract at the company expires next Jan. 14, with talks set to start in November.

Spring means avoiding work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spring finally had arrived full bloom in the nation's capital, but senators were stuck working inside the Capitol in a two-week-long budget debate.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., noting that "it is such a beautiful day outside," asked the Senate for permission to leave.

"Nothing is taking place inside," Moynihan said. "The west front of the Capitol is falling down. At least we could watch that while we wait for the time to run out. May I be excused?"

It was a reference to a crumbling section of the Capitol. Money to fix it is snarled in a battle over whether the front should be extended and the building enlarged.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., had another proposal for killing time.

As budget debate droned on, Byrd asked Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., whether she planned to ask for a recorded vote on her amendment and how long the debate might take.

"Do I have time to go to the barber shop?" he asked.

"I don't know, come over here and let me see (how long your hair is)," she said. Byrd turned crimson as the chamber rocked with laughter.

Finally, Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., the ranking Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee, took a morning off from floor debate — to go turkey hunting.

His absence prompted some floor debate on turkeys in general — and legislative ones in particular.

Two senators have announced they will not run again in 1984 — Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va. — and the two were discussing their decisions recently in an exchange on the Senate floor.

Both agreed they were glad they had made the decision.

Baker told Randolph: "Someone asked me the other day, 'Are you sorry you have announced that your not going to run?' I said, 'No. Not only am I not sorry, but I'm now actively engaged in negotiations to try to gain time off for good behavior.'"

Freshman Rep. Bob Wise, D-W.Va., missed a vote on the House floor the other day and entered a statement in the Congressional Record to explain his absence: he was stuck in an elevator in the Longworth House Office Building.

"The door refused to open and there was no physical way to make it to the floor of the House. Others trapped with me say that such problems are a frequent occurrence ... and I hope the proper officials will look into it."

Reagan meeting with Senate leaders on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — to the National Association of Home Builders.

Weicker said Reagan has inaccurately described federal welfare programs as being vulnerable to further budget cuts.

While the rhetoric on both sides of the budget fight remained hot, Republican congressional leaders were scheduled to meet privately today with Reagan at the White House.

At issue is how to reduce federal deficits — by counting on economic recovery to produce needed revenues or by raising taxes in 1984 and 1985.

On Monday, the president accused those who want to raise taxes, including moderate and liberal Republicans, of posing as "deficit doctors" who have their scalpels out to operate not on federal spending but on "your wallet."

One of those Republicans is Lowell Weicker of Connecticut, a leader among rebellious senators who blocked a budget resolution supported by Reagan from getting through the Senate last week.

"The time has come for the president to enter into the compromise process, not the name-calling process," Weicker said Monday in response to Reagan's speech

The "Blue Bandit," later identified as 21-year-old David Adcock, streaks past the downtown Houston skyscrapers Monday afternoon after jumping from the 68th floor of the Allied Bank Plaza. He spent most of the day climbing the 71 story building under construction before he stopped for the launch. (AP Laserphoto)

Masked climber sails to ground

HOUSTON (AP) — A masked man attempting to climb the glistening 71-story Allied Bank Tower stopped three floors from the top, unfurled the U.S. and Texas flags, then opened a parachute and floated safely to ground.

The climber, identified as David Adcock, 21, of Dallas, landed near a downtown parking garage a few blocks away.

Adcock ran into the garage and was arrested by four police officers who whisked him through a crowd of hundreds of spectators chanting "Let him go. Let him go."

Adcock, whose name was not known until after his arrest, was charged late Monday with evading arrest and criminal trespassing, said Kay Burkhalter of the district attorney's office.

Bond was set at $10,000 on each charge because Adcock was serving 18 months probation for a similar offense last year on the West Coast, Ms Burkhalter said, adding that details were not immediately available.

However, Adcock's mother, Carol Stanley, of Houston, said her son leaped from El Capitan in California's Yosemite National Park last summer and "promised me he would never do it again."

Ms Stanley said she offered bail her son out. But he refused, saying he was grown up, she said.

Adcock was the second such "urban mountaineer" here in less than three months. On March 14, Ron Broyles, a Hollywood stunt man, scaled the 75-story Texas Commerce Tower, the tallest skyscraper west of the Mississippi River.

Beside the wig and mask, Adcock wore a blue and white cap with a Texas flag on the front and a blue jumpsuit.

Ms Stanley said her son told her he was making the suit for a masquerade. "I guess maybe his home ec (economics) teacher would be proud," she said.

The climber used three suction cups in his assault on the city's second-tallest building, which is under construction but partially occupied.

The cups — two on his hands, attached to a harness around his waist, and a third which he used as a stirrup, were the type used by glass handlers and that a vacuum is created by pumping with one's thumb, said property manager Tom Laughlin.

The climber earlier Monday explained he was spiraling the building rather than going straight up to ensure that he covered 1,000 feet since the building is just 970 feet.

"We ain't got no big buildings in Dallas and I had to climb one, so I came here," the climber shouted.

After unfurling the flags, which were left hanging, the climber pulled from a knapsack a large board and inserted it into a slot of the building. Then he stood on the board, waived to spectators below and jumped.

"I feel great, I feel great," he shouted.

The climber's ascent began shortly before dawn Monday. He stopped at a 13th floor coffee shop to converse with workers.

"He told one girl he was a Texan and was going to plant the Texas flag on top of the building," said Frances York, a receptionist for a law firm.

Assistant property manager Larry Kornman had said officials could have rescued the man during the climb by dropping a line from the roof or from a window above him.

Laughlin also had said he was concerned for the man's safety.

"This is tempered glass," Laughlin said of the building. "It doesn't crack — it powders in pieces the size of your thumbnail. If it breaks, it's going to really come apart on him."

Laughlin said he was not surprised by the attempt to scale the building.

"I've kind of been expecting it" since Broyles climbed the Texas Commerce Tower, he said.

Broyles used a specially designed set of pulleys to climb up a window washer track of the Texas Commerce Tower.

Senate expected to confirm Ruckelshaus

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today was expected to overwhelmingly confirm William D. Ruckelshaus to become head of the Environmental Protection Agency with a charge to restore public confidence in the shattered agency.

A midafternoon vote was scheduled on the nomination, with confirmation assured. In speeches Monday, senator after senator praised Ruckelshaus as the man who could do the job.

Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., the chairman of the Senate Environment Committee, called for a unanimous vote. Stafford said of Ruckelshaus that "his name is synonymous with integrity."

Ruckelshaus will face a difficult job at EPA. He succeeds Anne McGill Burford, the controversial administrator who resigned under the pressure of a half-dozen congressional investigations.

"Rarely do we have a nomination before us where we can be 100 percent certain that the nominee is the right man for the job," said Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., chairman of the environmental pollution subcommittee. "This is one of those times."

Sen. Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va., ranking Democrat on the Environment Committee, noted that Ruckelshaus was EPA's first administrator, from 1970 to 1973, and formed the agency's early policies. But he said Ruckelshaus faced an even more formidable task this time.

"Under his leadership," Randolph said of Ruckelshaus, "this agency will restore to itself the good reputation that it had at one time in the past."

Ruckelshaus carries a reputation of integrity that dates not only from his previous term at EPA, but also from his role as deputy attorney general during the Watergate scandal. He was fired in the famous "Saturday Night Massacre" when he refused President Nixon's order to dismiss Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox.

He has resigned a $221,000-a-year job as senior vice president of the Weyerhaeuser Co., a major forest products company, to return to the $69,800-a-year job as EPA administrator.

He told his confirmation hearing two weeks ago that he would not have returned to Washington unless he was convinced that the agency was crippled and needed him. And he said hundreds of former EPA employees have volunteered to help him rebuild the agency.

The agency has been floundering for months in a major embarrassment to the Reagan administration. Mrs. Burford resigned along with a dozen of her top aides as congressional investigators looked into charges of political manipulation, sweetheart deals with polluters and general mismanagement.

Government ruling favors plant owners

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A government ruling that the owners of the Comanche Peak nuclear plant will not have to analyze thousands of pipe supports was considered a setback by a group questioning the facility's safety.

The U.S. Atomic Safety and Licensing Board ruled Monday that the supports will not have to be checked individually for their ability to withstand high temperatures.

A spokesman for Texas Utilities Co., the primary owner of the plant, called the decision a victory.

"I felt like the ruling was basically supporting what we've been doing all along," utility spokesman Homer Schmidt said.

A Dallas group, Citizens Association of Sound Energy, called the ruling a setback.

"We lost that point," said Mark Walsh, a CASE witness and an engineer who worked on the project.

CASE had argued that Texas Utilities' decision not to analyze the effect of thermal expansion on pipe supports violated federal requirements and could lead to a meltdown in an accident at the plant.

A week-long series of hearings began Monday to determine whether the pipe supports are strong enough to withstand accidents and earthquakes.

A U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission study concluded that the supports are adequate but uncovered other flaws.

Licensing board chairman Peter Bloch has asked for testimony on whether the flaws indicate "a larger pattern of problems."

Infrastructure, a word that fosters ennui

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The television interview was going smoothly until Rep. Bob Edgar, D-Pa., used the word "infrastructure." That's when the reporter turned to the cameraman and said, "You can turn it off."

Infrastructure. A catch-all word that ignites passion in urban planners and ennui in everyone else.

"It's the sort of issue where you see their eyes glaze over in three minutes," says Rep. Bill Clinger, R-Pa. He pauses. "Three seconds."

Infrastructure. A 14-letter word for the nation's underpinning: roads, bridges, water and sewage systems, posts, locks and dams, mass transit, airports, Veterans Administration hospitals and other public buildings.

"The word smacks of bureaucratise and double-think. It's just a bad word," sighs Clinger.

Clinger and Edgar are leading a crusade to rescue the country's public facilities from rust and ruin. But their bandwagon is moving about as fast as an 18-wheeler crawling up a potholed mountain highway.

Stories of waste and deterioration, impassioned pleas before academic, civic and professional groups — all have failed to arouse much enthusiasm for a 10-year public investment that would cost anywhere from $500 billion to $3 trillion.

The two Pennsylvania congressmen think they know why.

"A lot of us take our surroundings for granted. We live in a generation that has never seen life without the ability to flush a toilet," explains Edgar.

"Most of it's so invisible," says Clinger. "It never intrudes on people's consciousness. Unless it's backing up in their bathrooms or filling up their cellars, they don't worry about it."

Horror stories and hype are their primary weapons in a war on yawns. Some examples gleaned from Edgar, Clinger and various federal studies:

—New York City has two water tunnels, 35 and 50 years old. If one malfunctioned, one-third of Manhattan would be without water for three to five years. Neither has been checked for maintenance because neither can be closed.

—A 30-foot hunk of a bridge on the Washington, D.C. beltway dropped off and 15 cars fell into the hole onto metal spikes.

—Scranton, Pa., loses 46 percent of its water each day through leaky pipes.

—One 40-mile section of an Erie, Pa., highway has buckled in so many places that it's called "The Washboard."

—U.S. Steel Corp. says it pays $1 million a year to detour trucks 18 miles around a major bridge near Pittsburgh that was closed two years ago for lack of repair.

—In 1980, airport congestion cost airlines $1 billion and 700 million gallons of fuel, and passengers waited an extra 60 million hours.

—More than 40 percent of the 41,000-mile interstate highway system needs repair.

—Half of all existing sewage treatment plants need enlarging, upgrading or replacing to meet Clean Water Act standards.

Edgar even tries what he considers a stirring analogy to the window of vulnerability used to describe U.S. defense deficiencies and justify higher weapons spending.

"We become more and more vulnerable to economic decline if we allow the infrastructure to deteriorate," he argues.

"It IS a boring subject," he adds defiantly. "But let's say we ignore it. What kind of a society will we have in the year 2000? Do we begin to shut down whole communities because we can't supply them with water? Do we close down whole sections of cities because a bridge is out?"

After a two-year fight, Clinger and Edgar managed earlier this month to win Reagan administration backing for a limited capital budget bill. The measure requires an annual list of the nation's major public assets.

their conditions and their repair needs over a five-year period.

Congress when it comes to giving out public works dollars.

State leaders see woes falling away

By DON McLEOD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Optimism can come from the most unexpected places. Imagine the nation's beleaguered governors looking ahead and seeing their current economic woes falling away.

Yet that's the picture from a survey of state leaders collected by a University of North Carolina researcher for the National Governors' Association. The study indicates that most governors think they are in trouble economically now, but that they are working their way out of the recession.

The report notes that general public opinion polls find more people expecting this year to be better than the last, a turnaround from the trend of the past decade.

"To some extent, governors appear to reflect a similar optimism about the coming years — particularly about economic conditions," the report says.

Now, for sure, the economy is the No. 1 concern of governors. They have been telling us that for the past couple of years. The national recession is falling hardest on state and local government, they say.

While Washington battles inflation and trims budgets, it is governors, mayors or county commissioners who have to shut down hospitals, day care centers, and bus lines. It is these state executives who close the window at the welfare line, or tell the jobless that the state employment office can't help them.

"The financial condition of the states at the end of 1982 was bleaker than at any time in recent memory," says the report on "Governors' Priorities: 1982," which contains the survey results.

"Virtually every state in all regions of the country was affected by a recession-induced drain on expected revenues at the same time that the public's need for services was increasing."

Pennsylvania elk population on decline

GREENSBURG, Pa. (AP) — The state's elk herd, which was at a relatively high population of 135 last year, has shown a decrease this year, according to results of a survey taken by the Pennsylvania Game Commission.

The commission estimates the current elk herd at 122, said biologist Bill Drake. Consequently, the game commission has canceled plans for an elk reduction program that was under study for late this year or early next year.

Both Drake and Elk County game protector Harold Harshbarger said reproduction was average, with the game commission estimating that 30 to 35 calves are born annually.

Last year's count of 135 elk was the largest in recent years, according to Harshbarger.

The game commission contemplated an elk reduction program last year because of the expanding herd and the resultant crop damage.

There were 11 elk, including six mature bulls, killed last year for crop damage. In addition, the commission said, five calves starved to death last winter; two cows died of illness; and a calf and a cow were killed by dogs.

Act now to prevent mortgage default

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
Congress is working on legislation to help unemployed homeowners who are behind on their mortgages, but any dollars and cents aid is still months away, and you'll have to act to protect yourself if you're in trouble today.

The problem affects thousands of Americans, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development has some advice for them in "Avoiding Mortgage Default," a guide listing steps to take if you can't come up with the money for your monthly payment. It includes telephone numbers of local HUD offices across the country and is available at no charge from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 5961, Pueblo, Colo., 81009. The Democratic-controlled House passed a bill last week to provide $760 million in emergency loans to unemployed people facing foreclosure. The aid would be limited, however, to families whose average annual income over the last three years was $20,000 or less. The bill also faces strong opposition in the Republican-controlled Senate and from

After you have contacted your lender — write a letter if you can't telephone — consider a housing counseling agency. These groups work with homeowners who can't keep up their payments. ## Special appliances provide help for disabled

If the homemaker in your family were suddenly disabled, how would the family manage such activities as cooking, serving meals, cleaning up and washing clothes?

Not long ago, the disabled homemaker would probably have been advised to give up all attempts to care for the family. But nowadays experts are saying that a rapid return to as many activities as possible is the best answer for both individual and family. The disabled are being encouraged to live an active life.

Partly as a result of research in rehabilitation by individuals such as Dr. Howard Rusk, more effort is going into development of home appliances and systems which permit those with some physical impairment to care for themselves and their families.

Focusing on the issue has also convinced some manufacturers there is a growing market for such appliances. Government statistics collected by General Electric Co., for example, indicate more than one in five individuals over 65 has difficulty in everyday activities, and that for many the kitchen is a major barrier.

As a step toward meeting the needs of the disabled and elderly, GE devised a model kitchen at its Louisville headquarters to make independent living easier, according to the company.

About the same time, Whirlpool Corp. worked jointly with occupational therapists to redesign a home facility known as Horizon House at the Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine headed by Rusk at the New York University Medical Center in New York. At Horizon House, patients learn how to care for themselves before returning to life on their own.

It was found that many standard appliances can be used by the disabled with only minor adaptations, according to Joy Schrage, director of communications at Whirlpool. Furthermore, she said many of the systems adopted at Horizon House could be adapted to the typical home.

These include: installation of a self-cleaning oven with front-mounted controls, placed lower than usual so it is accessible from a seated position; installation of an overhead mirror above the cooktop to permit easy viewing into pots from a wheelchair; and use of a vented hood over the stove with a remote control lever at the front edge of the counter, as well as elimination of cabinet doors so that utensils are stored in plain sight and are easily accessible.

In GE's special kitchen, base cabinets were eliminated so a wheelchair could be rolled directly under the work surface; countertops and the cooktops were lowered, and a special shallow-bowl sink was installed. Switches to control lighting, the range hood and a sink-waste disposer were mounted at the front of the counter and the wall oven was lowered so pans could be moved in and out from a seated position.

"We didn't find any major appliances that are entirely unsuitable for someone with physical impairment," said Ms. Schrage. After consultation with the therapists, one possibility for a new product did emerge — a combination washer and dryer in one unit which would save steps in laundry care.

A number of manufacturers used to offer this product, but lack of demand caused us to discontinue it. If the demand were to develop, it could be made available," she said.

Ms. Schrage pointed out that accessories such as pull-out shelves, bins and Lazy Susans in refrigerators, which increase accessibility, are already available as special options. For the blind, a number of appliance manufacturers provide Braille instruction booklets and Braille knobs.

As a rule, requests for help in accommodating a major appliance to a disabled individual's needs are relayed through occupational therapists working on a local level with the patient. However, Whirlpool also handles requests directly from the disabled.

Dear Abby

Woman with tumor finds out life continues to hold promise

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'm 40 years old, have a wonderful husband and a 14-year-old son. I have an inoperable brain tumor the size of a baseball. I've been through six weeks of radiation, but I have absolutely no complaints.

The tumor has been a blessing because of the relationships it has mended, and for making individuals face their mortality seriously. This poem (enclosed) has helped me more than I can say.

It could help others, too. I don't know who wrote it, but I have had it for many years. I hope you will print it so the author will come forward and get credit. Thank you.

MARTI IN AURORA, COLO.

DEAR MARTI: It is indeed a lovely poem, and I agree, the author should be properly credited:

"Today, upon a bus, I saw a lovely maid with golden hair,
"I envied her, she seemed so gay, and I wished I were as fair.

"When suddenly she rose to leave, I saw her hobble down the aisle; she had one foot, and used a crutch, but as she passed, she had a smile.

"Oh, God forgive me when I whine; I have two feet, the world is mine.

"And when I stopped to buy some sweets,
"The lad who sold them had such charm. I talked with him, he said to me, 'It's nice to talk to men like you. You see,' he said, 'I'm blind.'

"Oh, God forgive me when I whine; I have two eyes, the world is mine.

"Then, as I passed along the way, I saw a child with eyes of blue. He stood and watched the others play; it seemed he knew not what to do. I stopped for a moment; and then I said, 'Why don't you join the others, dear?' He looked ahead without a word, and then I knew he could not hear.

"Oh, God forgive me when I whine; I have two ears, the world is mine.

"With feet to take me where I'd go,
"With eyes to see the sunsets glow,
"With ears to hear what I would know,
"I'm blessed indeed.
"The world is mine.
"Oh, God forgive me if I whine."

...

DEAR ABBY: I am planning to get married soon and would like to have a big wedding. Do you think it would be proper for me to wear an orchid-tinted bridal gown and veil?

I am 18 years old and a virgin. I know that traditionally virgin brides always wear white, but I don't look as good in white as I do in orchid.

What do you think?

SOUTH BOSTON BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: Every bride who wears a white bridal gown is not necessarily a virgin. Neither does every virgin wear a white bridal gown.

It's your wedding, so wear whatever pleases you.

...

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

The turning of the wood

What skill is it that can turn out anything from a bowl to a baseball bat, from a broom handle to an architectural element?

The answer is wood turning. And on lathes that have not changed in principle for more than a century, a growing number of individuals are producing wood objects that are both useful and beautiful.

Some are professional wood turners, but a surprisingly large number are amateurs who have turned to the lathe as a hobby, says Paul J. Smith, director of the American Craft Museum.

The museum recently sponsored an exhibition of wood turning that put the craft in its historical perspective and showed the state of the art at present.

Smith conceived of the exhibition after participating in an international seminar organized in England by John Makepeace in June 1980.

Mansion is popular tourist spot

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Bringing Southern style and elegance to Pennsylvania residents, the Governor's Home, a three-story Georgian brick mansion, is open for its fifth consecutive season of public guided tours.

More than 100,000 visitors have toured the first floor of the 30-room mansion since the beginning of the Dick Thornburgh administration.

The house was built in 1968 on three acres along the Susquehanna River. In 1972, floodwaters from Hurricane Agnes destroyed the grounds and rose as high as 5 feet inside the house.

About $200,000 has since been collected through private donations to restore the landscaping.

"We're proud of this house because it belongs to the people of Pennsylvania, not the Thornburgh family," said Ginny Thornburgh, the governor's wife.

"It's officially called the Executive Mansion," she added, "but we prefer to think of it as a home because we have four sons and a dog and a family that lives here."

"All but two pieces (of furniture) on the first floor belong to the commonwealth," she said.

Preparing a report of wood-turning activity in the United States which he delivered at the conference, Smith discovered how widespread the interest in the traditional craft had become here.

In the exhibition, which closes in May at the American Craft Museum, examples of current wood turnings run the gamut from architectural elements such as newel posts and balustrades produced by Gail Redman for restored Victorian homes to elegant wooden bowls in exotic woods by craftsmen such as Ed Mouthrop and Bob Stocksdale.

Delicate decorative boxes by Frank Knox are juxtaposed against pieces created by artists such as David Ellsworth and Mark and Melvin Lindquist.

According to Christopher Wilk, guest curator for the exhibition, wood turning in its simplest form can be described as the shaping of a piece of wood with a gouge or chisel as the piece revolves between two fixed points. The use of a lathe keeps the piece stable and allows it to revolve.

Although a few innovations occurred in the 20th century, such as the use of steam engines to power large-scale wood turning, lathe technology remains largely the same today as it was in the early 19th century, says Wilk.

The most prolific use of turned elements in architecture in the United States occurred in the mid-19th century when Victorian "gingerbread" architecture was composed mainly of wood elements turned on lathes. Posts, columns and architectural screens as well as staircase posts and balustrades are examples of wood turnings.

The current interest in renovation of these 19th-century houses — especially in San Francisco — has created a market for the skills of artisans like Gail Redman of San Francisco.

The popularity of Shaker furniture and other objects has also been a force in the revival of the craft. In the 18th and 19th centuries, the Shakers perfected simple but elegant turnings which they used as elements on ladder back chairs and other furniture, in toys and tools and to make bowls and mortars and pestles.

Wood turning in this country began with emigration of woodworkers from Holland and England in the 17th century. Everything from chairs to bookstands were made with elaborately turned parts beginning in the second half of the 17th century.

Hand turning continued to be important in the production of many objects of everyday use until the Industrial Revolution in the 19th century superseded it.

Today's hobbyist has his counterpart in Europe of the 16th through 19th centuries. Wood turning was adopted as a hobby by kings and gentlefolk from the 16th century. The Hapsburg emperors, beginning with Maximilian I were among the earliest to take to wood turning. But the most famous royal wood turner was undoubtedly Louis XVI.

The demise of Louis in the French Revolution led to the transfer of the royal phase of the hobby to England, which became the center for both amateur and ornamental turning and for the transformation of wood turning from a craft into an industry in the 19th century.

Astro-Graph by bernice bede osol

Happy circumstances will prevail this coming year regarding that which affects your home and family. Relationships will be strengthened and new bonds of love cemented.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to set the right example today instead of ordering others to do something you'll not do yourself. Your actions will speak louder than words. Taurus predictions for the year ahead are now ready. Romance, career, luck, earnings, travel and much more are discussed. Send $1 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to state your zodiac sign. Send an additional $2 for the NEW Astro-Graph Matchmaker wheel and booklet. Reveals romantic combinations and compatibilities for all signs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A friend will be disappointed in you if you reveal to another information told to you in strict confidence. Don't betray a trust.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You're not apt to have tolerance for stingy people today. Keep this in mind before lunching with a pal who never splits the check equally.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be aware of details today, but don't become obsessed by them. Dwelling on the insignificant will cause you to lose sight of your objectives.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Avoid tendencies today to worry about things which have yet to happen or perhaps never will. Live in the NOW and deal with events as they occur.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You could do yourself more harm than good today if you seek business advice from persons who lack expertise. Get the wisest counsel possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Don't let associates do your thinking for you today if you have to make an important career decision. Weigh and analyze the facts yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Strive to be methodical today about your work. Unless you follow a plan, your performance will suffer and so will the results.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your best course of action today is not to borrow anything, but if it's essential that you do, treat what you take with care.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) This is not the right day to spring surprises on your mate. Be sure he or she is informed of all your decisions, even the minor ones.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Think before speaking today, especially if you intend to criticize. Anyone you put down might later try to square accounts in a larger measure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Doing things too hastily today could lead to a series of small, but annoying, mistakes. Pacing yourself properly will avoid mishaps.

Heinsohn considers Rockets job

HOUSTON (AP) — Tom Heinsohn, the leading candidate for the Houston Rockets coaching job, says he plans to have his agent discuss a contract with the National Basketball Association team this week.

"All I can say for sure right now is that the opportunity sure seems right," said Heinsohn, who guided the Boston Celtics to two world championships.

Heinsohn met Monday with Rockets General Manager

Ray Patterson and team owner Charlie Thomas and said afterward that all his questions were answered.

"I had some problems in the past with ownership and if you don't have solid people backing you at the top, the thing just isn't going to be worthwhile. There are no quick fixes or magic cures in this business. But, if the owner, general manager and coach are together regarding the development of a program, it can be enjoyable and rewarding for everyone," Heinsohn said.

"From what I learned today (Monday), I think that could be the case here in Houston," he said.

Heinsohn said his agent, Phil McLaughlin, will talk with Rockets officials about a contract.

Thomas said he did not anticipate any problems regarding salary or length of a contract.

"Right now, as I understand it, it's just a matter of knocking out the details. All that remains is for Tom's agent and Ray to get together and cut the deal. I couldn't be more pleased," Thomas said.

"We've got a top-rate guy here, and we're willing to pay the going price for a top-rate guy. I think we'll be able to get together," he said.

Texas League roundup

By The Associated Press

Mark Gillaspie hit a grand slam homer in Beaumont's 10-run sixth inning and the Golden Gators went on to beat Tulsa 11-9 in a wild Texas League contest.

In another TL slugfest Monday night, Jackson defeated El Paso 21-17. San Antonio edged Arkansas 5-4 and Shreveport posted a 4-2 win over Midland.

Tulsa trailed 11-1 before scoring five runs in the eighth and falling short with three in the ninth.

Franklin Stubbs hit his 11th homer of the year in the bottom of the 10th to give San Antonio its win. The Dodgers' Scotty Madison had tied the score in the bottom of the eighth with his second homer of the year.

Dave Wilhelm, who pitched a perfect game earlier this month, pitched seven innings of two-hit ball for Shreveport. John Violette finished up to earn the save.

Bryan Snyder hit a two-run homer in the first for Shreveport and John Stevenson, the TL's leading batter with a .421 average, drove home two runs with singles in the fifth and seventh innings.

The Pampa Pirates, sponsored by Heritage Ford-Utility Oil, participated in the pre-season baseball jamboree at Memorial Stadium in Amarillo on Sunday, and showed the league they are a force to be reckoned with.

The Jamboree was a promotional day of baseball where each league team played five innings or one and a half hours. Pampa played the Amarillo Diablos, but the game didn't last the customary five innings. The Pirates jumped on Diablo pitching for four runs the first inning and continued the onslaught to the tune of 13-1 after the time limit expired.

Alan Stewart checked the Diablos on two hits and fanned eight in three innings. Al Ferguson had three hits and drove in four runs to lead the Pirate hitting attack.

The regular season for the Pirates begins this Sunday, May 22 at the Pampa High field against the Dumas Eagles. Game time is at 2:30 and is free to the general public.

Coach Joe Zillmer expects competition to be much tougher once the season starts.

"Sunday was just a day to get our timing down and look at some of the other teams," Zillmer said. "I feel we'll be very competitive once this thing gets underway. I don't think the score (13-1) is indicative of the overall quality of the league."

Rookies pace Mets past Pirates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Darryl Strawberry is batting only .138, but the New York Mets think he's anything but a below-average prospect.

The 21-year-old rookie outfielder belted his first major league home run, a two-run shot, as the New York Mets blasted the Pittsburgh Pirates 11-4 Monday night before only 1,970, the smallest crowd in Three Rivers Stadium history. The only other National League game Monday, San Francisco at Philadelphia, was rained out and rescheduled for Sept. 1.

Another New York rookie, 19-year-old shortstop Jose Oquendo, had two hits and drove in three runs. That brought a smile to the face of Mets Manager George Bamberger, who hasn't had much to smile about this season.

"I can't say enough about the way these kids are playing," Bamberger said, referring to Oquendo, Strawberry and second baseman Brian Giles.

"They're doing a great job. When the big boys (George Foster and Dave Kingman) start hitting some home runs, which they haven't been doing, we'll be all right."

Strawberry was just 1-for-5, but his fifth-inning homer off rookie Lee Tunnell rocketed well over the 375-foot sign in left-center field.

"What you guys saw him do, he's going to do a lot of," Bamberger said of Strawberry, who was recalled from Tidewater of the International League only a few weeks ago. "He's really swinging the bat good. He looks like he's ready to make his move. He's putting it together."

Strawberry said that he's been hitting the ball well since he's been in the major leagues, "but I've been hitting it right at people. I've been facing good pitching and it's been tough on me. But I'm starting to get more aware of things. I wasn't doing that before and if I keep it up, I know I'm going to have success."

Another rookie having success is Oquendo, the first player in Mets' history to be born after the club was formed in 1962. A switch-hitter in the minors, Oquendo has been batting almost strictly right-handed in the major leagues and has driven in five runs in his last two games.

"If I keep hitting like this, I'm going to forget about batting left-handed," Oquendo said.

The Pirates' Jim Bibby, 1-4, would just as soon forget about his last two starts, when he hasn't lasted past the second inning. Bibby, 38, is attempting a comeback from a shoulder injury that forced him to miss the 1982 season.

The Mets, who split the four-game series with the Pirates, knocked Bibby out of the game with a four-run second inning that included a two-run single by winning pitcher Ed Lynch, 2-1.

New York built the lead to 7-1 in the fifth and added four more runs in the sixth.

Twins comeback falls short

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
 AP Sports Writer

Wayne Gross hit a home run in the top of the ninth inning to give the Oakland A's a 7-0 lead over the Minnesota Twins. What appeared to be just icing on the cake turned out to be the ingredient the A's needed to hold off a six-run rally in the bottom of the ninth that included four home runs.

"They sure did a job on that 7-0 lead," said catcher Bob Kearney, whose three-run homer off Minnesota's Brad Havens in the second inning started the scoring. "I haven't seen that in a long time, if ever. What are those guys eating over there?"

In other American League games, the Toronto Blue Jays edged the Milwaukee Brewers 2-1 in 11 innings, the Texas Rangers downed the Cleveland Indians 3-1 and the New York Yankees blanked the Detroit Tigers 7-0. Chicago and Baltimore were rained out, while Boston, California, Kansas City and Seattle were not scheduled.

Oakland's Mike Norris and Matt Keough blanked the Twins on five hits until the ninth, when Dave Beard took over and was greeted by consecutive home runs by pinch hitter Dave Engle and Bobby Mitchell. Gary Gaetti hit a two-run, two-out shot with John Castino aboard via a walk and, after Beard walked Tom Brunansky, pinch hitter Mickey Hatcher greeted Tom Burmeier with the fourth home run of the inning to make it 7-6. Lenny Faedo singled, but Engle, batting for the second time in the inning, struck out to end the game.

It was the 27th time in major league history a team hit four home runs in one inning — including four outbursts of five homers in an inning — and the first time any AL team has done it in the ninth. The two pinch-hit homers tied a single-game major league record and it was the eighth time the feat was accomplished in the same inning.

"I can't remember any club hitting four home runs in the bottom of ninth," said Oakland Manager Steve Boros. "Maybe I pushed it out of my mind. That's what I'm going to try and do with this one."

"I've never seen it in a big league game," added Twins Manager Billy Gardner.

Barfield loaded the bases. Mickey Klutts hit a grounder to shortstop Robin Yount in a drawn-in infield, but Simmons' dropped Yount's throw to the plate as Bonnell scored the winning run.

The Blue Jays took a 1-0 lead with an unearned run in the fourth. After a single by Bonnell, Barfield was safe when McClure fumbled his slow roller for an error. Klutts grounded to third baseman Paul Molitor, who stepped on the bag to force Bonnell but threw past first base for another error as Barfield scored.

The Brewers tied it in their half of the fourth. Simmons doubled with two out and walks to Ben Oglivie and Gorman Thomas loaded the bases. Roy Howell singled to score Simmons, but left fielder Bonnell threw out Oglivie at the plate.

outs and didn't allow a fly ball out of the infield for 7 2/3 innings as he matched his 1982 victory total.

Yankees 7, Tigers 0
 Ron Gidry pitched a three-hitter and Ken Griffey collected three hits and scored three times. Griffey singled off Dan Petry with one out in the first inning and scored when left fielder Larry Herndon lost Steve Kemp's drive in the lights for a two-base error. He tripled in the third and scored on Dave Winfield's grounder and the Yankees made it 3-0 on four walks in the sixth. Steve Kemp's two-run triple highlighted a four-run ninth.

Blue Jays 2, Brewers 1
 Barry Bonnell scored the winning run from third base when Milwaukee catcher Ted Simmons dropped a throw at the plate in the 11th inning as Toronto won for the eighth time in 10 games and moved into a second-place tie with Boston in the AL East, one-half game behind Baltimore. Dave Stieb, 7-2, became the first seven-game winner in the majors by scattering nine hits through 10 innings and Randy Moffitt pitched the 11th for his fourth save.

Lozer Bob McClure, 1-6, carried a five-hit into the Toronto 11th when Bonnell blooped a double to short center with one out. An intentional walk to Cliff Johnson and a walk to Jesse

Rangers 3, Indians 1
 Larry Parrish hit a tie-breaking two-run homer in the sixth inning following Buddy Bell's double and Rick Honeycutt handcuffed Cleveland on five hits as Texas tied idle California for the lead in the AL West. Honeycutt, 5-2, lowered his earned run average to 1.33. He recorded 14 ground ball

Longhorns win
 AUSTIN (AP) — Slugger Jose Tolentino says there's "something special" about tournaments. What was special about the Southwest Conference baseball tournament was Tolentino, who guaranteed the Texas Longhorns they'll play some more post-season games.

The junior first baseman led Texas to a 14-0 contest win over Arkansas in the Monday night finals of the Southwest Conference tournament. It was the Horns' fifth-straight conference tournament title and let them serve as hosts for the NCAA Central Regionals in two weeks.

"You always want to do your best at tournament time, not that you don't want to do well in the others."

Pampa rodeo results

The Pampa High School Rodeo Club continued to rack up points over the weekend toward next month's TSHSRA Finals at Amarillo.

Team sponsor Janis Rucker said the Pampa cowboys are presently in third place in team points among rodeo clubs in the tri-state area.

In weekend events sponsored by the Canyon club, Wendell Shults took first place in steer wrestling. In ribbon roping, Lee Lowry placed second; Roy Pat Rucker was fifth; and Shawn Whitley finished eighth. Hayden Walters and Shawn Johnson nailed down fifth place in team roping. And Rucker finished ninth in calf roping.

The Canyon meet was held at the Amarillo Range Riders Arena.

Saturday and Sunday, the Pampa club travels to competition at Guymon, Okla.

News in briefs

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — A judge says he believes three youths were equally responsible for the torture-slaying of a cellmate jailed for failing to pay traffic fines, and sentenced one of them to more than 25 years in prison.

Randal McKeown, 18, was sentenced Monday for the murder of Christopher Peterman, 17, last Memorial Day. Peterman had been jailed for failing to pay $73 in court and traffic fines.

McKeown and three other teen-agers originally were charged with first-degree murder. Charges were dropped against one defendant and a second pleaded guilty to felony battery. A third, Sean Matthews, was sentenced earlier to life imprisonment after being convicted of first-degree murder.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A blood clot pushed a sliver of metal from a railroad worker's groin to the right ventricle of his heart in an extremely rare medical occurrence, doctors said.

James Bass, 31, was in stable condition Monday after doctors removed the sliver driven into his body after breaking off a railroad track as he pounded on it with a hammer.

The first X-ray showed the sliver had lodged in Bass' left hip, but a later X-ray showed no trace of the sliver, which measured one-third by two-thirds of an inch. Dr. Paschal Stagna said a clot pushed the sliver up into an abnormally large vein to the heart. Only 50 similar cases have been documented, most involving bullets. Stagna said.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Westchester County officials say they have made progress under a federal deadline to draw up an emergency evacuation plan for a nuclear plant, winning agreement for bus drivers to get special training.

"We have talked to the unions and have been promised full cooperation," County Executive Andrew O'Rourke said Monday. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has given officials at the Indian Point power plant until June 9 to develop a nuclear emergency plan or be shut down.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional auditor says Interior Secretary James Watt has not made enough changes in his embattled coal leasing program to promote higher bids for the mining rights.

J. Dexter Peach of the General Accounting Office, told a House Interior subcommittee Monday that leasing procedures had been improved since an April sale, but more changes were needed. A GAO audit charged that Watt sold off leases in the Powder River Basin of Montana and Wyoming for $100 million below fair market value.

Denying accusations that he is leasing coal at "fire sale" prices, Watt says he has already revamped leasing procedures to encourage higher bids. A group of congressmen has proposed a one-year moratorium on coal-lease auctions to give officials time to implement reforms.

WASHINGTON (AP) — An expert on bankruptcy law says a third of the people who declared themselves insolvent in 1980 had incomes below the poverty level for a family of four.
