Jamboree hospital: good for Scout ails

By JOHN MARLOW
Associated Press Writer
KANANASKIS COUNTRY, Alberta (AP) — The young, red-haired scout from Denmark hobbled into the field hospital, a teddy bear tucked under her neckerchief and an ingrown toenail accounting for her limp.

medicine specialist who checks the water supply regularly.

Two helicopters are at the site for emergency evacuations or to pick up scouts in the field in areas not accessible to ambulances. So far, they haven't had to be used.

"It's been bothering me, so I thought I better come in to have someone take a look at it. I don't want to miss anything," Charlotte Larsen of Copenhagen said Thursday while waiting for a medic.

For 13,600 scouts from 106 countries attending the 15th World Scout Jamboree on fringes of the Canadian Rockies, help is as close as the olive-green tent with the large red cross on the side.

One scout, Jay Steen, 16, of Minnetonka, Minn., had a complaint similar to Miss Larsen's and worried he might miss some jamboree activities. "When it first began bothering me on the way out, I thought, 'Oh, no. Now everything's ruined...' I feel a lot better about it now," he said after receiving first aid.

Even though most ailments are minor scrapes and runny noses, the scouts' campground home for two weeks has a full military field hospital.

Their "wilderness" also has electric lights, telephones, a water and sewer system, stores, snack bars, a bank and a post office.

Lt. Col. Ken Nickerson of the Canadian Forces, commanding officer of the camp hospital, said its staff expects to treat between 3,500 and 4,000 scouts before the jamboree ends.

As of Thursday morning, 600 scouts had come through the hospital. Only 17 were admitted.

"They'll only be here for 24 to 48 hours. If they need extended care, they'll be taken off-site" to Foothills Hospital in Calgary, about 50 miles to the east, said Nickerson, a general practitioner.

Seven physicians are on call at the hospital — five general practitioners, a surgeon and an eye-ear-nose-throat specialist, Nickerson said. There also is a gynecologist at the camp for this, the first jamboree involving girls.

There are separate hospital wards for boys and girls.

The hospital has nine nurses, two of whom speak five languages.

There also is a full-time pharmacist and a preventive

Parochial schools struggling to remain affordable to parents

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Buoyed by the sacrifices of teachers who work for less and parents who do with less, the parochial schools are struggling to remain affordable and Catholic at a time when three of four teachers are not clergy and one in 10 students is not Catholic.

Once the bedrock of the American church, the schools are squeezed by rising costs and declining enrollment.

"We're pricing people out of the market," said Sister Joan Hughes, principal of Aquinas High School here, which on June 3 became the 1,935th U.S. Catholic school to close since 1971.

Aquinas needed money for a new roof and windows and for teachers' salaries. The faculty, once composed entirely of nuns paid almost nothing, was two-thirds lay. With one exception, the students were black or Hispanic, and fewer than half were Catholic.

Tuition rose to $1,130 this year, forcing 60 students into public schools and cut to 340 an enrollment that stood at 558 five years ago. Next year tuition would have gone up again.

Since 1966, when 5.6 million students attended 13,400 elementary and secondary schools, the Catholic system has been shrinking. This year, 9,432 schools enrolled a little more than 3 million students, 68,000 fewer than last year, the biggest drop in three years.

But the National Catholic Education Association says recent losses reflect an overall drop in U.S. students; in this decade Catholic schools have attracted a steady 7 percent of all students. Only 62 Catholic schools closed in 1982, the fewest in any year since the 1960s, and the lower grades enjoy an even distribution of students.

Designed to provide immigrants with basic skills and basic Catholicism, the parochial schools' reputation has been enhanced by studies like those of Dr. James Coleman, who reported last year that parochial school students scored about two grade levels higher than public school students on math, reading and vocabulary tests.

Grand jury to probe group's calls to judge

HOUSTON (AP) — An anti-crime group that encouraged its members to call a judge considering punishment for a convicted burglar will be investigated by a state grand jury, the Harris County district attorney said.

The group known as CRIME — Crime Reduction Involvement Means Education — came under fire from a judge late last month after its members made more than 100 phone calls and sent letters to his office to urge stiff punishment of a convicted burglar.

State District Judge Woody Densen said the group's actions put undue pressure on him, and he asked District Attorney John Holmes to call for an investigation.

Instead of sentencing the burglar, the judge granted him a new trial, and then removed himself from the case.

The controversy stemmed from the case of Tyrone Carmouche, 18, who was charged with burglary and murder in the strangulation of an 80-year-old woman.

Carmouche was convicted May 31 of burglary.

"I question their motives as far as them being a politically active group," Densen said. "The net effect of CRIME's effort was to turn the case around and start all over."

Holmes said Thursday that Densen believes CRIME's campaign may violate state laws against coercing or improperly influencing a public servant. Both crimes are misdemeanors with a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $2,000 fine.

Phyllis Morrow, the head of CRIME, said last week her group did not single out Densen.

The public schools' ability to teach those skills was questioned by President Reagan and the National Commission on Educational Excellence. Although Catholic schools spend about half as much per pupil as public schools, they have a lower student-teacher ratio.

The National Opinion Research Center in Chicago found that lapsed Catholics who had attended parochial school were more likely to return to the church in their late 20s and early 30s and that Catholic school graduates were more likely to attend Mass and support the church than Catholics who went to public school.

The Coleman and NORC reports gave Catholic education a morale boost after the 1970s, when religious communities that had staffed the schools lost members much faster than they could replace them. The schools faced an identity crisis — and a financial one.

Bishops worried that lay teachers would cost more and stopped building schools. Parents worried Catholic schools could not compete with the better equipped public schools. And "everyone worried that a religious school couldn't be religious if the religious were not there," recalled Elinor Ford, a former nun who was superintendent of schools in the New York Archdiocese from 1972 to 1976.

Worries about lay salaries were justified. Despite pay scales almost everyone thinks are too low, costs have skyrocketed. The average yearly Catholic elementary school tuition hovers around $400, four times more than the mid-1960s.

The schools themselves have changed. Memorizing the catechism has been supplanted by discussion of what it means to be a Catholic. Fordham Prep in New York, for example, requires graduates to have at least 60 hours of volunteer work with a community service program — as well as the traditional year of Latin.

Arkansas cemetery reflects state's history

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The whir of Broadway traffic fades and blends with the whistle of wind through ancient trees as a visitor passes through stone pillars into Mount Holly Cemetery.

Started in 1843, it's the final resting place for six U.S. senators, 10 Arkansas governors, three Confederate generals, 13 state supreme court justices and 19 mayors of Little Rock. About 10 new graves are dug each year.

Red and white roses, some set out last year by sexton Hugh White, climb through the iron fence atop a stone wall that surrounds the cemetery. Broadway provides the front boundary of the grounds, which cover four city blocks. It's close enough to downtown that office workers regularly come to spend their lunch hour.

"They come out here from town every day, nearly. It's quiet and peaceful here," says White, 72.

A white marble obelisk about 12 feet tall marks the grave of a youth who was hanged by the Yankees for spying, White said. One of the banking family of Worthens has a Georgia granite tower 50 feet tall in the center of a plot bordered by a granite wall.

The inscription on the stone for the Rev. Cephas Washburn says he was a pioneer missionary to the Cherokee Indians in Arkansas. Born Randolph, Vt., July 25, 1793. Died Little Rock March 17, 1860. Next to it is the grave of Edward Payson Washburn, 1831-1860, "Pioneer Arkansas Artist."

There's a small stone for M. Maro Elder, born Nov. 21, 1829, "Murdered on Big Rock" Oct. 16, 1886.

A chapter of the U.S. Daughters of 1812 put up a stone for "Quatre, Indian wife of John Ross, chief of the Cherokee tribe. Died in Little Rock Feb. 1, 1839." Ross is buried here too.

Small wrought iron chairs and granite benches offer a harsh bit of comfort for a weary mourner. A dogwood drips leaves into a stone bird bath. From arching arms of a mulberry tree, ripening red fruit plops on family graves. Magnolia trees, heavy with emerald leaves, spread their black branches.

Squirrels make their home in the cemetery, taking their meals from peach and plum trees, leaving little for the sexton to harvest. "They make you think they're going to leave them alone. Then they're gone overnight," White said. About 80 quail live on the grounds as well.

People come from across the country looking for graves of loved ones. White said, "I have a book and map. I tell them exactly where it is."

New human rights agency created

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White signed into law Thursday a bill creating a new state agency to deal with unfair employment practices.

The bill, effective Sept. 1, was one of the last major actions of the recent special legislative session.

After Sept. 1 it will be against state law for an employer, an employment agency or a labor union to engage in discriminatory practices in employment placement or membership because of race, color, handicap, religion, sex, national origin nor age.

The state agency will take over from the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the investigation of complaints of bias in hiring and promotion practices, including state and local government employees.

"This will speed things up," said Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, a House sponsor. "Complaining to the feds is very tedious. It takes too long, and it costs too much for the average state employee to pursue, especially if she or he has to hire an attorney."

Cowboys' Shaw announces retirement

DALLAS (AP) — After 20 frustrating months of trying to nurse a damaged right knee back into condition, Dallas Cowboys center Robert Shaw has decided to quit professional football. Shaw, a first-round draft choice in 1979, announced his retirement from the National Football League team

Thursday, after failing a physical examination by the team physician. "I just never could sustain any type of workload on my knee. I knew I had to be realistic and plan accordingly," Shaw said. "I couldn't play. The function of my knee was not there." Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said he felt Shaw made the right decision. "We were hoping he would be able to come back, but we've been without him for over a year, and we've been prepared for this. He was performing well before he got hurt. We had great expectations for him." Shaw was injured on Oct. 11, 1981, in a game against the San Francisco 49ers and hadn't played since. He underwent major knee surgery a month after the injury. "I was going through rehabilitation, getting ready to play the next season, when I hurt it again. I had another operation and, after that, I started beginning to wonder whether it was going to get better," he said.

Wertz dies

DETROIT (AP) — Vic Wertz, who is best remembered for hitting a long fly ball that was caught spectacularly by Willie Mays in the 1954 World Series, has died in heart surgery.

Wertz, 58, died at 7:34 a.m. Thursday as Harper Hospital surgeons attempted to perform a coronary bypass and replace a valve in his heart, said hospital spokesman Frank F. Bredell.

Wertz had suffered a heart attack June 23 and was admitted to the hospital, where he suffered a second heart attack Wednesday, Bredell said.

Wertz hit 277 during 17 major league seasons. As an outfielder who became a first baseman, he played with Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Baltimore, Boston and Minnesota during his career.

He probably is best remembered for the single play in the first game of the 1954 World Series between the Cleveland Indians and the New York Giants.
