

The Manassa Mauler is dead

By BEN WALKER

NEW YORK (AP) — He had the golden fists in the Golden Age of Sports.

He was an American hero, a man remembered as a great heavyweight boxing champion who achieved riches and worldwide popularity that lasted long after his ring career ended.

Jack Dempsey, who had been in declining health in recent years, died Tuesday of natural causes at age 87 in his Manhattan East Side apartment. Dempsey's body will be at the Frank E. Campbell Funeral Home in New York today and Thursday. There will be a private funeral and burial.

"He was a legend," said Jack Sharkey, a Depression Era heavyweight champion who was knocked out by Dempsey in a 1927 fight at New York's Yankee Stadium. "It was universal with him. Wherever he went, people knew who he was."

Dempsey, who began fighting in 1914 as "Kid Blackie" for less than $2 per bout, went on to earn the nickname "The Manassa Mauler" — along with the biggest paydays in a bygone era of sports that included luminaries such as Babe Ruth, Red Grange, Knute Rockne and Bobby Jones.

"He put the sport of boxing into the American mainstream," said Harry Markson, head of boxing at Madison Square Garden from the 1940s through 1973, times when the arena was the mecca of the sport. "He was the first to bring in what was called the million-dollar gate."

Dempsey won the heavyweight title on July 4, 1919, by knocking out Jess Willard and held the crown through Sept. 23, 1926, when he lost to Gene Tunney. Ironically, Dempsey — who won 60 of his 80 bouts, 49 by knockout — defended his title just five times while manager Jack Kearns waited patiently for large purses.

Yet Dempsey did not disappoint his faithful fans during that time as he fought scores of exhibitions all over the country. During an eight-year span, his purses totaled more than $4 million.

Perhaps his most famous fight — and one of the most talked-about bouts in history — occurred when he lost a 10-round decision to Tunney in a second title bout in 1927.

In the seventh round of that fight, Dempsey knocked down Tunney but stood over the fallen champion for several seconds. The referee did not begin counting until Dempsey had moved away, and Tunney was able to get up in time to avoid a knockout. Tunney managed to hold for victory in what became known as "the long count" fight.

Despite the two losses, Dempsey and Tunney remained close friends. When Tunney died in 1978, Dempsey said: "I feel like a part of me is gone."

Many who knew Dempsey said they traced the start of his failing health to Tunney's death.

Dempsey retired from the ring in 1932, but came back to fight three exhibitions — he won all three with second-round knockouts — in 1940. He then went on to referee and promote fights and also worked the corners of several fighters he took an interest in, including Max Baer.

In 1974, Dempsey's famous Broadway restaurant was closed in a lease dispute with his landlord. For years, the restaurant had served as a rallying point for his fans.

"He used to sit in the window of that restaurant and shake everyone's hand," recalled Irwin Rosee, who was former heavyweight champion Joe Louis' personal manager for many years. "He was a worldwide attraction."

Four years ago, Dempsey suffered a small stroke and he had been plagued by heart problems since then. He was hospitalized in April 1982 when a pacemaker was implanted.

Dempsey spent most of his later years enjoying a simple, private life with his fourth wife, the former Deanna Piatelli. Dempsey, who had two daughters from a previous marriage to singer Hannah Williams, his third wife, gradually limited his public activities to an occasional charity or civic-minded appearance and boxing functions.

"I think I've lost my best friend," said U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, who presided over the Watergate case. Dempsey was the best man at Sirica's wedding in 1952.

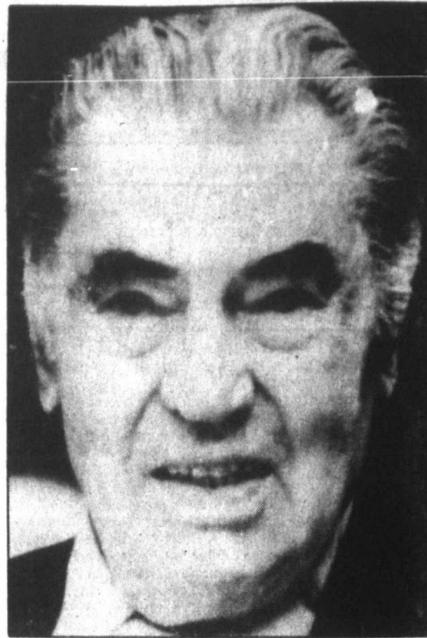

"He was just like a brother of mine," Sirica said. Others added their condolences.

"To me, Jack Dempsey was one of the greatest heavyweights that ever lived," said former heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali. "He was fast, he had power, he kept coming, he could take a punch, he was controversial and he had personality."

Said former heavyweight champ Joe Frazier: "I remember in 1964 when I came back from the (Olympic) Games I met Mr. Dempsey at his restaurant and he was a fine gentleman. I feel that God gave him the gift inside the ring and he didn't take advantage of a man outside the ring."

Luther Bagwell, 93, is the only person still living in Manassa, Colo., from the days when Dempsey, born William Harrison Dempsey, was a boy.

"When we were kids that age, that (boxing) was about the only amusement we had," Bagwell said. "It was a hard-up family. He had to go barefooted all during the summer, just like the rest of us kids did."

weather

Partly cloudy and warmer today and Thursday, with thunder showers possible this afternoon and tonight. High today 75, with the low tonight in the upper 50s. South to southwesterly winds 15 to 25 mph today, decreasing to 10 to 20 mph tonight. Thursday's high should be in the low 80s, with southwesterly winds 15 to 25 mph. Pampa received two one-hundredths of an inch of rain Tuesday night.

No 'Cool Trash'

Panhandle ruled out as site of low-level radioactive dump

By JEAN TIERNEY
Of the News

Texas throws out about 25,000 cubic feet of used low-level radioactive material each year, but none of it will be buried in the Panhandle.

But this will not affect the Panhandle as the possible site for high-level radioactive waste disposal.

Pampa and the Panhandle were eliminated on the second cut in the state's search for a possible disposal site for radioactive waste from hospitals, laboratories and industry. Tom Blackburn said Tuesday from Austin. Blackburn is director of special projects for the Texas Low-level Radioactive Disposal Authority, which is trying to find a suitable burial ground for the waste materials that must be safely contained for decades, 40 feet under.

The Panhandle was ruled unsuitable because it contains population centers, lies over the irreplaceable Ogallala Aquifer and is surrounded by oil and gas drilling fields, Blackburn said. It also lacks the simple sandy clay soil needed by the Authority.

"We did not exclude Pampa on the first pass," when the Authority eliminated cities with 100,000 people or more, he said. Pampa was excluded on the second pass over the map, when the criterion was population centers of at least 20,000, he said.

By starting with the state map whole, and eliminating areas according to population density, ground water or geology, the Authority has narrowed its search to 105 counties, about 35,000 square miles, mostly in north central, western and southwestern Texas, he said.

Four "very small areas" in Hardeman County, directly east of Childress County, remain in the running as the nearest to Pampa, Blackburn said.

The federal government raised hackles in Deaf Smith County this spring by proposing a disposal site there for high-level radioactive waste from all over the country. Residents told the study group in no uncertain terms that they did not want to live and farm on top of materials capable of emitting radioactivity for thousands more years, even if the wastes were buried 2,500 feet deep, beneath the Ogallala Aquifer, as proposed.

The state's proposed burial ground will accept only waste produced in Texas and only materials with a half-life of 35 years or less, Blackburn said. (That means that in 35 years, the waste will be only half as radioactive as when it is buried.)

Low-level waste cannot be termed "warm trash," in comparison to the "hot trash" nickname for high-level waste, Blackburn said, nor even "lukewarm trash." "It's a completely different animal," he said.

Spent fuel from nuclear power plants will not be buried in the state site because, by law, it falls outside the 35-year definition of low-level waste, Blackburn said. Pantex's waste is disposed of by the federal government, and radioactive tailings from uranium and thorium mines, usually disposed of at the mines, are also excluded.

But some other waste products from power plants, four of which are expected to be operating in the state by 1988, will be accepted by the state dump. By then, a year after the disposal site is to open, Blackburn said, the Authority predicts Texas will be producing 135,000 to 150,000 cubic feet of low-level waste each year, roughly enough to cover a football field three feet deep.

Usually each hospital, lab or industry contracts with a broker to remove its low-level radioactive wastes, Blackburn said, adding that a general hospital like Coronado Community in Pampa "probably produces a very insignificant amount." From a nuclear medicine lab or large teaching hospital, the waste includes contaminated syringes, vials, bottles, gloves and cotton swabs, and even carcasses of research animals.

Hospitals and industries dump their radioactive waste in lined 55-gallon drums from the broker, who picks up the drums and compacts their contents before delivery to a disposal site.

The state needs about 300 acres for its burial ground, Blackburn said: "it's really piddling small." The waste, in drums, will be stacked closely at the bottom of trenches 40 feet deep, 100 feet wide and 600 feet long and covered with dirt. Each trench is to be capped to prevent water seeping in. Some materials will be packaged in containers designed to last 200 or 300 years.

If the Authority wants to bury materials of half life longer than 35 years, it must go to the Bureau of Radiation Control for permission and instructions, he added.

The Authority has contracted with Dames & Moore Consultants of Houston for a three-phase siting study, expected to be finished by Aug. 31. Copies of the study's first phase will be available to the public at the Authority's offices in Austin soon, or by special request.

DA seeks death penalty for Kevin Francis

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Writer

AMARILLO — Kevin Francis was arraigned here on a charge of capital murder Tuesday, and the prosecutor said he wants the death penalty for the graduate of Pampa High School.

Francis is charged with rubbing out his business partner for insurance money. The state says Francis worked with convicted contract killers George and Bedale Hicks in the Oct. 8, 1977 stabbing death of Frank Potts, 49. Potts was butchered inside the Amarillo clothing store that he and Francis owned, Barney's Factory Direct Men's Clothing. The Hickses stabbed Potts 28 times and collected a payoff when their bloody work was done.

The Hickses were convicted of the murder, and in March 1980, Francis was convicted of trying to line up the contract killing, a crime called solicitation of capital murder. Francis received a 40-year prison term.

But the 7th Court of Appeals at Amarillo overturned Francis' conviction Sept. 1, 1982. The court ruled that Harney made a reversible mistake when she instructed the jury during Francis' 1980 trial. The state protested the ruling, and consideration of the previous conviction has bounced back and forth between the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin and the 7th Court at Amarillo, where a final ruling is pending.

Due to the previous conviction, Francis will stay in prison even if he makes the $200,000 bond set for the new indictment Tuesday, according to prosecutors.

The stiffer charge of capital murder says Francis worked directly with the Hickses in Potts' murder. The previously sealed indictment for capital murder was returned against Francis May 13 by the second special grand jury that investigated the 1977 murder.

The crime of capital murder carries the mandatory penalties of life in prison or death. Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton said this morning that prosecutors are seeking the death penalty for Francis.

The assistant D.A. said new evidence in the case resulted in the new and stiffer charge against Francis. Prosecutors have declined comment (see Francis on page 2)

Job Hunter

Donald Koopman was brought to Pampa by Ingersoll-Rand in November, 1980, as an engineering aid.

After being laid-off in September last year, Donald went to work as a carpenter for Lone Star Technical Service of Pampa.

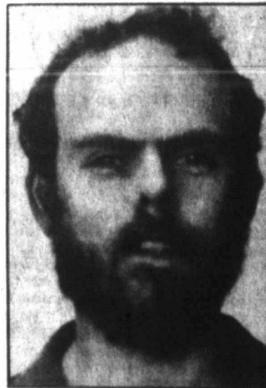

Most recently he was temporary help as a carpenter's helper for Waldrop Construction of Brownwood. He was laid off because they finished construction of the GTE building in White Deer and now he is looking for work again.

Donald is about one semester away from his associates degree in business. He has a technical degree in industrial drafting which includes mechanical and electrical drafting. His next goal is to earn an engineering degree.

Donald was born and raised in Minnesota. Before working for Ingersoll-Rand, Donald worked for Hiniker Company, Inc. in Mankato, Minn., for three years. Hiniker makes farm implements. When he left, he was the supervisor in the electronics drafting department.

While with Hiniker Donald re-designed the layout production area. He also worked as a research and development technician while there.

He said he has some experience using CAD-CAM; computer aided drafting-design and machining. "I can learn to do most anything if given the chance," he said. He says, "I've taken wedding pictures, too."

"I'm willing to relocate within the state, preferably in or near a town with a four-year college, so I can finish my engineering degree," Donald said.

Donald is married. He and his wife have a three-month-old daughter. He doesn't smoke or drink and has a good driving record.

Anyone wanting a man of high standards and goals, and who is willing to work, can reach Donald at 665-3021. He is also registered with Charles Vance with the Texas Employment Commission at 665-0938.

Flooding spreads to other Utah towns

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A wall of mud and water crashed through sandbagged banks along a suburban creek, forcing hundreds of people to stay in shelters today after another bout of flooding in Utah, authorities said.

Damage from the overflowing Stone Creek in Bountiful, a suburb just north of Salt Lake City, still was being assessed today. But no serious injuries were reported from the flooding late Tuesday, except for a man who suffered a broken leg.

Dave Florence, local American Red Cross disaster director, said he knew of 600 people who were in shelters, although some were being told they could return home today.

Meanwhile, about 400 residents of Farmington, 15 miles north of Salt Lake City, were staying with friends and relatives as officials kept watch on a massive mudslide that smashed a dozen homes and damaged 30 others Monday and Tuesday.

Two hundred people were evacuated Tuesday from a trailer court along Big Cottonwood Creek in Salt Lake County, but no flooding was imminent and many had moved back, said Terry Baker, county flood operations coordinator.

Gov. Scott Matheson on Tuesday declared four more counties disaster areas — Salt Lake, Willard, Weber and Davis — in the wake of record flooding and mudslides that have forced the evacuation of thousands.

A flash flood watch was in effect early today as showers and thundershowers moved through northern Utah, but cooling temperatures were expected to reduce stream flows by as much as 30 percent.

The flow out of Mountain Dell Reservoir east of Salt Lake City was reported less than the flood coming in for the first time in days.

In neighboring Nevada, officials said three people originally believed missing after a 15-foot-wall of mud and water cascaded Monday down Slide Mountain near Carson City had been found unhurt. The slide killed one man, injured six other people, destroyed four homes, damaged four more and buried 12 to 15 cars and trucks.

The mountain runoff pouring through streams in Salt Lake City was being controlled by sandbag canals on three major streets, disrupting traffic. Police Chief Bud Willoughby urged employers to stagger working hours.

County sheriff's deputies were investigating reports of people selling sandbags at $25 a truckload. Sandbags are available free from the county.

About 100 passengers on river-running expeditions were removed from the shores of the Colorado River on Monday and Tuesday after the National Park Service closed a section of rapids.

Many people in Bountiful described a wall of waist-deep mud and water that crashed through dikes, knocking down doors and flooding basements about 11 p.m. Tuesday.

Brucellosis quarantine halted

AUSTIN (AP) — A federal judge at least temporarily halted a quarantine he said could cause immediate and irreparable damage to the Texas cattle industry by prohibiting the interstate shipment of breeder cattle.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture had scheduled the quarantine to begin at midnight Tuesday.

However, U.S. District Judge James Nowlin issued a temporary restraining order after a two-hour hearing Tuesday that stopped the quarantine at least until he can have a hearing on either June 13, or June 27.

"At the hearing I plan to take extensive testimony," the judge said.

The order for a temporary restraining order was requested in suits filed against the USDA by Frates Seeligson, president of the Texas and Southwest Cattleman's Association, and Robert Mason, Harris County cattleman. Attorney General Jim Mattox joined in the request.

"Texas has a brucellosis program now that meets the federal standards," said Austin attorney Charles Herring, arguing for Seeligson. "The program has been in effect four years and nothing has happened recently to call for an emergency quarantine."

Herring said Seeligson had several herds of cattle that needed to be moved to New Mexico where grass was available but would not be able to do so if the quarantine was in effect.

Attorney Jerry Hammett said Mason had a sale of purebred Angus cattle scheduled in Burnet County Wednesday and could lose up to $800,000.

Dave Richards, first assistant attorney general, said brucellosis regulations were being enforced in Texas according to 1982 rules that had been approved by the federal government.

He said Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas have higher rates of the cattle disease but are not quarantined.

Robert Duffey, assistant U.S. District Attorney, San Antonio, argued the quarantine was needed principally because one Texas rancher, R.J. Nunnally, Uvalde, got a permanent injunction in 1979 that keeps the Texas Animal Health Commission from inspecting his herd for brucellosis, on grounds the program was unconstitutional.

"This order prohibits state inspectors from even going on his property," Duffey said, "and Nunnally ships cattle throughout the state although he is free of regulation."

Nowlin asked why the USDA had not decided on the quarantine earlier since it was issued in 1979. The USDA announced its quarantine on May 24.

Duffey said the USDA first considered the quarantine after defeat of a bill in the recent Legislature to place new brucellosis controls on Texas "which could be applied to Mr. Nunnally."

Duffey said if Texas was allowed to continue with the present procedure, other states would place their own quarantines on Texas breeding cattle.

Nowlin's ruling also may affect similar petitions filed in the Rio Grande Valley by the Independent Cattleman's Association.

Brucellosis causes weight loss and miscarriages in cattle but poses no danger to consumers of meat or pasteurized dairy products.

Under the quarantine, breeding cattle could be shipped out of Texas only from "qualified herds" that have passed two tests for brucellosis. Steers, spayed heifers and other cattle for slaughter would not be affected.

Meanwhile, the Texas Brahma Breeders Association announced a meeting of all cattle breeder associations in Texas in Austin on June 7. About 500 cattlemen are expected to attend and discuss the brucellosis quarantine.

Sheriff's deputies from the Ector County sheriff's office Tuesday search for victims inside a trailer house in Pleasant Farms, 12 miles south of Odessa, that was overturned and blown into another trailer home. At least three area residents said they say a tornado touch down, but officials were unable to confirm it. Ten mobile homes were damaged or destroyed, but only one person was reported injured. (AP Laserphoto)

Court: couple may be forced to sell home to pay one spouse's tax debt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas' longstanding homestead law to the contrary, the federal government may force the sale of a married couple's home to pay a tax debt owed by one of the spouses, the Supreme Court has ruled.

The ruling came on a split vote Tuesday in two cases involving women from Dallas, whose husbands owed the government back taxes. In its 5-4 ruling, the court said the law protecting one's residence from seizure cannot be invoked if federal taxes are owed.

The Internal Revenue Service felt the case of national significance because Texas and seven other states by their homestead laws could frustrate government efforts to collect back taxes by seizing and selling property, the Dallas Morning News said.

In a brief, the IRS said the Texas homestead law alone could cost the government $800,000 a year in lost taxes.

The Supreme Court added, however, that lower federal courts have the discretion to block the forced sale of the home to protect the interest of the spouse not in debt.

Justice William J. Brennan, writing for the majority, also said the share in the property held by the non-debtor spouse should not be used to pay off the debt.

"We are not blind to the fact that in practical terms financial compensation may not always be a completely adequate substitute for a roof over one's head," he continued.

Therefore, Brennan said, federal district court judges may weigh a number of factors in deciding whether to grant a government request to force the sale of the home.

Federal law "does not require a district court to authorize a forced sale under absolutely all circumstances ... some limited room is left in the statute for the exercise of reasoned discretion," he said.

But, Brennan said, "the limited discretion ... should be exercised rigorously and sparingly, keeping in mind the government's paramount interest in prompt and certain collection of delinquent taxes." Brennan was joined by Chief Justice Warren Burger and Justices Byron White, Thurgood Marshall and Lewis Powell.

In both cases involved, a federal appeals court said the Texas homestead law exempted the homes from forced sale to pay off the taxes.

In one case, Philip S. Bosco, who died in 1974, owed the Internal Revenue Service $927,284 in federal wagering taxes, interest and penalties.

The government said his widow, Lucille Rodgers, who had remarried, should be forced to sell the home she owed jointly with Bosco. Half the proceeds would then go to the IRS and she would keep the other half.

Tuesday's Supreme Court ruling sent the case back to a trial judge to determine whether Mrs. Rodgers must sell the home.

In the second case, the couple — Jorene and Donald Ingram — was divorced and the couple's home burned down in 1975.

The government says that Ingram still owes about $9,000 plus interest for unpaid taxes withheld from wages of his company's workers.

As part of the divorce settlement, Ingram turned over his interest in the couple's property in exchange for $1,500.

The property was then sold for $16,250 and the money is being held by a trial court pending the outcome of the case.

The Supreme Court said the trial judge must first determine whether Mrs. Ingram gave up her interest in the homestead by agreeing to sell the property.

If it decides that she did not abandon her interest, it then must determine whether the government can collect the $9,000 from the sale price, the high court said.

The Texas law prevents a husband or wife from selling the homestead without the permission of the spouse.

In a dissenting opinion, Justice Harry A. Blackmun said the government should not have the power to force the sale of a couple's home unless the debtor himself had such power.

Mrs. Rodgers "enjoys an inalienable right to bar a sale,"

Homosexual controversy continues to dominate Methodist conference

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Several major issues, including a nuclear arms freeze resolution, faced delegates to the annual meeting of the United Methodist Church's Southwest Texas Conference.

The issues were scheduled for discussion Tuesday, but were shoved back by a continuing, bitter controversy over the role of homosexuals in the church.

On Monday, delegates to the conference confronted the homosexual issue by passing an emergency ruling affirming the church's position that homosexuals were not to be considered as candidates for the ministry.

The debate started anew on Tuesday after the McAllen District delegation offered a petition calling for "fidelity in marriage and celibacy in singleness" by ordained ministers.

Then Jimmy Walker, a lay delegate from Seguin, offered an amendment that he said would make the same requirement of the Methodist laity.

The amendment won overwhelming approval. Then, questions and challenges from the floor soon entangled the conference in confusion.

Some were concerned about the definition of "celibacy," saying complete dedication to abstinence of sex would disallow marriage.

The original petition said, "by celibacy is meant abstinence from sexual intercourse and its homosexual equivalent."

Then a delegate wanted an explanation of "the homosexual equivalency of sexual intercourse."

Finally, Bishop Ernest T. Dixon called for a vote, but the amended petition barely passed, 324 to 316.

Asked if the petition was intended to prevent homosexuals from holding official church posts, McAllen District Superintendent, the Rev. John W. Platt, said, "That will be the end result, but the main purpose was to clarify what we understand the Christian lifestyle to be. There has been confusion and unrest in the church arising out of the election of an avowed homosexual last year to the Church and Society Board."

That was a reference to Troy Stokes of Austin. He was not renominated to the board this year.

The petition, Platt said, would be sent to the worldwide general conference to let "them know what the people from the grass roots have to say."

The Rev. Paul Spellman of Kingsville saw the negative vote as a backlash against tying up the conference with what he called, "this paranoia about homosexuality."

Spellman added, "We've got a lot of other things we need to accomplish at this conference."

But, former minister Gene Leggett, removed from the ministry in 1971 after announcing his homosexuality, said that since the conference opened Sunday night, everything has revolved around the issue of sexual lifestyle, something, he said, "is not basic to belief in Jesus Christ."

"At least they offered heterosexuals two alternatives, marriage or celibacy, but they only offered us one," he said, referring to the petition.

"Stokes added, "They want to bar gays from serving in any elected capacity at any church and prohibit anything but straight arrow sex."

At an ordination service Tuesday night, Leggett knelt before the altar with a gag in his mouth "to symbolize the relationship the church insists on maintaining with its gay children."

At Sunday night's opening service Dixon, who defended and upheld Stokes' election during a raging controversy last year — stressed that practicing homosexuality is not a acceptable Christian lifestyle.

DWI convictions cause auto insurance boost

AUSTIN (AP) — Drunken drivers who will face tougher penalties under a bill passed by the Legislature will also have to pay higher insurance premiums if they are caught, the Southwestern Insurance Information Service says.

The insurance industry group said Tuesday a one-time conviction of DWI can trigger an increase of up to 55 percent in car insurance rates.

"Once this DWI bill is signed by the governor, anyone convicted of drunk driving in Texas can face a significant premium surcharge for as long as three years and if convicted during those three years the surcharge for that period may be increased by three consecutive years per conviction," said

Jerry Johns, president of the insurance information service.

Under terms of the DWI bill, any person convicted of DWI may be forced by his insurance company to purchase auto insurance from the assigned risk pool for not more than three years. Such insurance carries higher premiums.

"For example, a one-time conviction for DWI can increase insurance rates as much as 55 percent," Johns said in a news release. "In terms of dollars the premium increase for the lower coverage on an inexpensive car can be as much as $125 every six months and for higher coverage on an expensive car the increase could be a whopping $560 each six months."

Attorney General holds report off limits

AUSTIN (AP) — A state highway department report on a construction project may be withheld because the information could become part of a lawsuit against the state, Attorney General Jim Mattox has held.

The department is being represented in a wrongful death action filed in 1979 by the surviving spouses and children of two men who died in 1977 from injuries suffered in an auto accident, Mattox said.

Authorities said the accident occurred on a Kimble County highway detour that connected a portion of Interstate 10 under construction with U.S. 290.

The lawsuit charges the department with negligence in "in designing and having constructed a detour on a major highway that resulted in a sharp and flat 'S' curve which could not be safely negotiated at a reasonable speed."

"In our opinion, it is highly likely that all of the information contained in this investigative report will be directly implicated in the pending lawsuit," said Mattox.

He said the report could be withheld under the Open Records Act for that reason.

TEC tells workers 'stay calm'

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 4,000 employees of the Texas Employment Commission whose jobs are at stake have joined schoolteachers and other groups hoping Gov. Mark White calls a special session this summer.

In the meantime, Commissioner Ken Clapp said TEC personnel are being advised to "stay calm and not to worry."

Without special action by the Legislature, the TEC will cease to exist as of Sept. 1.

"I am confident when the governor calls a special session, he will include us in the call," Clapp said Tuesday. "I am totally confident, and have been all along."

White has not named a date for a special session, but the best guess among lawmakers is sometime in July. Other items that White could ask legislators to tackle during a called session include a state brucellosis control program, a statewide water plan, and White's pet project — a pay raise for the state's 165,000 schoolteachers.

All four issues were left hanging when the 1983 regular session of the Legislature adjourned Monday night.

Clapp said he had asked TEC Administrator Ernie Tullis "to send a memorandum out today" to the agency's employees "to try to calm them in case they're upset and to tell them what we plan to do and to stay calm and not to worry."

The TEC, which helps unemployed people find jobs and gives out benefits to those who can't, needed an act of the Legislature to continue in existence according to the state's "Sunset" law, which is aimed at reducing bureaucracy.

A bill continuing the agency was expected to be passed routinely, and moved through the Legislature without much attention until Monday, the last day of the session. At that point, senators wanted to add a department to investigate job discrimination complaints, and House members didn't.

Both sides were deadlocked when the session adjourned, and now the TEC's 3,200 regular employees and more than 1,000 temporary employees face the ironic prospect of themselves being unemployed after Sept. 1.

"I do not know what to think," Tullis said. "It is a major problem that is going to have to be addressed by someone to resolve the severe tax problems on Texas employers."

He estimated Texas employers would have to pay over $1 billion more in taxes as of next January if the TEC is allowed to fold. The reason is, he said, a "tax discount" allowed by federal authorities requires existence of a state employment operation.

"Plus, you'd have the loss of our services. We found 500,000 jobs for people last year," Tullis said.

He said there was no mechanism for the federal government to take over the function of the TEC as some people have assumed.

Defense attorney banking on appeal in murder trial

HOUSTON (AP) — A defense attorney says he is not surprised that a Texas prison inmate who survived a 1974 escape attempt was convicted a third time of capital murder, but says a Supreme Court ruling may result in a reversal.

Ignacio Cuevas was convicted anew Tuesday in the slaying of librarian Julia Standley, one of 13 hostages held 11 days in a prison unit library.

Testimony in the punishment phase of the trial begins today in state District Judge Miron Love's court. Jurors deliberated two hours and 40 minutes before returning with the guilty verdict.

Defense attorney Will Gray said the verdict was "about what I expected, but this isn't the end."

Gray contends that the conviction is unconstitutional under a 1982 U.S. Supreme Court decision. He said the "law of parties" was outlawed in a Florida capital murder case.

"A man who does not kill and has no intention to kill cannot be convicted of capital murder under that decision," Gray said.

The state produced no evidence to show Cuevas fired any fatal shots Aug. 3, 1974, when the siege ended in torrents of high-pressure water and a hail of gunfire.

Gray said Love failed to instruct the jury to consider as key evidence testimony that Cuevas had threatened repeatedly to kill hostages during the siege.

Assistant District Attorney Bert Graham replied that "jurors have to proceed as the law is written at this time." He said the jury was instructed properly under current state law.

Cuevas has twice been convicted and sentenced to death, but appeals courts ordered new trials due to technical flaws in the jury selection.

According to evidence in the trial, Cuevas and two other inmates, Fred Gomez Carrasco and Rudolfo Dominguez, used smuggled guns to seize control of the prison library on July 24, 1974. They held 13 persons, including four women teachers, as hostage.

They negotiated for 11 days and on Aug. 3 attempted to move from the library to an armored car behind a shield of hostages and of lawbooks taped onto two rolling chalkboards.

Prison officials hit the shield with streams of high pressure water and shooting began.

Two hostages, Mrs. Standley and Elizabeth Beseda, were killed, and another was wounded. Carrasco and Dominguez also were killed.

In closing arguments Tuesday, Walker County District Attorney Frank Blazek said prison officials had no choice but to prevent the escape.

Otherwise, he said, "no teacher, librarian, doctor or any other civilian prison worker would be safe ever again."

Defense lawyer Ruben Guerrero pointed out that Cuevas is the only one of the three inmates who never fired his gun during the siege.

Arms reduction is imperiled

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger noted the other day what a tragedy it would be if a loss of American resolve let the Soviets off the hook just when Yuri Andropov might have been compelled to bargain seriously at the arms reduction talks in Geneva.

Kissinger was referring, of course, to the recent House vote approving a nuclear freeze resolution and to the misguided pastoral letter issued by the nation's Roman Catholic bishops. Both actions weakened President Reagan's negotiating leverage with the Soviets.

Reagan wants substantial, equitable reductions in theater nuclear arms in Europe and sharp cuts in the strategic nuclear arsenals held by both super-powers. The Soviets have been resisting these proposals since 1981. The Kremlin's obstinacy comes as no surprise.

At the present, the Russians hold a 4-1 advantage over NATO in intermediate-range nuclear weapons deployed in Europe. More importantly, they hold an absolute monopoly in the land-based, intermediate-range ballistic missiles that could prove decisive in any NATO-Warsaw Pact confrontation.

The Russians already have deployed more than 330 mobile, SS-20 missiles with a like number in reserve. Each SS-20 mounts three warheads and has a range of more than 4,000 kilometers. Three-quarters of these missiles are aimed at NATO targets and new SS-20s are being produced at the rate of one every five days.

NATO has no counter to the SS-20. And even the planned deployment of U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe later this year would still leave the Soviets with a very substantial edge in both warheads and aggregate destructive power.

The nuclear freeze endorsed by the House of Representatives and the Catholic bishops would cancel the Pershing 2 and cruise missile deployments while permitting the Soviets to keep their 660 SS-20s in place. With NATO already markedly inferior to the Warsaw Pact in conventional weapons, granting the Soviets permanent superiority in theater nuclear weapons as well could spell the beginning of the end for the Western alliance.

At the strategic level, a freeze would perminate the Reagan administration's efforts to restore a balance in intercontinental-range nuclear weapons. The Soviets would keep their 308 SS-18 missiles and the 330 SS-19 missiles - both first-strike weapons - but the U.S. would be prohibited from building even the comparable MX.

Navy and Air Force cruise missile programs would be scrapped without any reciprocal concessions from the Soviets.

Obviously, a freeze now would give Andropov and company no incentive to negotiate subsequent reductions in nuclear weapons, especially if those cuts would result in nuclear power parity between the superpowers.

Legacy

Editor's note: In this feature we excerpt material that has appeared on The Pampa News' editorial pages in previous years, whether from the editorials, the column written for many years by former editor and publisher R. C. Hollis.

Many people seem to think that freedom is some form of license that we have to limit. But if freedom has to be limited, then there are about as many ideas of freedom as there are individuals. If freedom is properly defined, it need not be limited.

Rose Wilder Lane says that freedom is self-control, no more, no less. And it seems the less a man is able to control himself, the more he wants to control somebody else. And yet such people think they believe in freedom.

Another definition of freedom that should mean about the same thing is getting things done on a voluntary basis rather than an involuntary basis.

'If jackasses make laws, why can't I write?'

By J. FRANK

Well, Bossman finally did it. He thinks I don't see The Pampa News out here in the pen, but I have friends. I have friends.

There I was on page 2. Nice picture, really. Showed off my exquisite mealy mouth, white blaze, and handsome brindle hide. But it was in there to promote a Cow Calling Contest! Well, that was a double-dipped insult if ever I heard one.

For one thing, I'm a bull...not a cow. For another, I'm a dad-gummed Texas Longhorn bull...the only one in Pampa that I know of...And, friends, Longhorn bulls don't answer calls. They issue them.

We are leaders. Born leaders.

I can prove that, too. Why, did I ever tell you about my Uncle Blue who used to take Charlie Goodnight's herds up the trail to Kansas? Bet your hooves he did! You thought cowboys did it? Listen, they were just along to keep the horses company, since they're both on about the same intellectual level.

No sir.

Now Bossman prides himself on encouraging people to speak up and disagree with his so-called editorials, so I held him to it. That's why you'll be hearing from me.

I told him that if my opinions weren't worth printing on his dumb editorial page, why I'd just do something typically Longhorn...like tear down the fence and gore trucks...or make use of a handy horn to enlarge his bluejeans pockets. So he agreed.

Maybe I'd better tell how I came to get hooked up with this Pampa News outfit. It seems Bossman and his wife, Cactus Woman, got inveigled into coming to a Longhorn sale in Wheeler, where I was appearing as the star attraction.

I saw them out there, bidding two or three times and then keeping still and letting someone else buy the heifer or the bull. I was the last one, of course...and, friends, I was such a powerful hunk of yearling bull they didn't dare run my picture in the program for fear of giving the screaming fanatics to youngsters.

I trotted around the pen handsomely, just like ol' Harvey Puryear told me to, and there was Cactus Woman trying to shut the Bossman up. Nope. He just kept bidding until he discovered they'd just bought themselves a genuine Texas Longhorn bull.

Gentle readers, I wish you could've seen the look on his whiskers when the auctioneer broke the news to him. You'd think there was something wrong with owning a Longhorn.

It was hilarious to watch. There he was, puffing on that obscene pipe and trying to figure out what to do with me when he didn't have pasture or cows, or nothin'.

And when that fine patron of Longhorns from the Canadian River, Walter Killebrew, asked Bossman how many cows he had...well, it would make you laugh 'till your permanent ear tag fell out.

I'd give five pounds of Purina Bull Developer to have a picture of that.

But the Bossman and Cactus Woman rented me a pint-sized pasture and gave me a name, and now here I am in Pampa, a genuine hunk of newspaper bull.

Say, this is fun...writing a column. Bossman thought it was a stupid idea and told me bulls just didn't start off writing columns...not just like THAT. Well, I said "What am I supposed to do...wait until I've written obituaries and Altrusa Club notices for 10 years first? Well, that's a load of People I ever heard it!"

I told Bossman that if jackasses can make laws down in Austin, why couldn't a real savvy Texan like me write a column? After all, my family was well established in Texas when little Stevie Austin was still in diapers.

He saw the logic of my argument then. Besides, I was standing on his foot.

Until next time, keep the mold out of your hay.

J. Frank is an acknowledged expert on Longhorns. He is single and lives in Pampa.

Foresees better Soviet relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan foresees better ties with the Soviet Union, but if tensions increase, he says the blame will lie with Kremlin leaders.

And, if better relations between the United States and the Soviets are on the horizon, it may not be readily apparent, Reagan said.

Asked in an interview whether he saw better or worse relations with the Soviets in the future, Reagan said, "I see better."

But he added: "This may not be visible in the rhetoric in the immediate future, because there's an awful lot of rhetoric that's delivered for home consumption."

The president also said he did not expect that U.S.-Soviet negotiations to curb medium-range missile deployment in Europe will "really get down to brass tacks" until the Soviets see that the United States and its Western allies are actually going forward with the planned placement of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe beginning in December.

U.S. and Soviet arms control experts are meeting in Geneva in an effort to reach a weapons treaty.

"We're going to try to negotiate," the president said. He said the Soviets "have based their entire propaganda campaign, everything they've been doing, on seeking to prevent the beginning of deployment and we have a schedule of deployment... and we're going to follow that."

The president made the comments in an interview with the eight reporters — five from the United States, and one each from Italy, France and West Germany — in Williamsburg, Va., before returning to Washington on Tuesday after the economic summit conference of the industrialized democracies.

The president was planning to spend today in Washington before heading to Camp David early Thursday morning for a long weekend. Reagan said that during the two-day summit conference, at which he was the host to the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan and West Germany, he thought several times about the absence of the Soviet Union at the meeting of the democracies.

"I couldn't help think several times, why in the world isn't that other so-called superpower — why didn't they have someone sitting at that table able to get along with the rest of us?" the president said.

The Washington Post today quoted West German officials as saying that Chancellor Helmut Kohl received Reagan's consent during the summit to explore a possible East-West summit with Soviet leader Yuri Andropov when Kohl visits Moscow in July.

An administration official, speaking on condition that he not be identified, said Tuesday night the subject of a U.S.-Soviet summit was raised in Reagan's meeting with Kohl and acknowledged that "the possibility of a Reagan-Andropov meetings" could come up in Kohl's Moscow discussions.

The U.S. official said there is no plan to have Kohl serve as an intermediary. West German Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher will report to secretary of State George P. Shultz on the Moscow discussions, he said.

Asked for his "gut feeling" about whether tension and hostility between the United States and the Soviet Union would continue to increase, Reagan said: "If there is an increase in tension, it will be the Soviet Union that causes it."

The president reiterated his criticism of the policy of detente that was developed during a thawing of U.S.-Soviet relations during the Nixon administration. "Detente, as it existed, was only a cover under which the Soviet Union built up the greatest military power in the world," he said.

Lighter moments of house recalled

AUSTIN (AP) — Some of the lighter moments of daily life in the House, which is billed as a cross-section of Texas and Texans:

— Lantern-jawed freshman Ed Kuempel, R-Seguin, cruising the floor every day to shake hands with every member he could corner. In addition to those 149 greetings, he stopped to kiss the hard-working women who toiled at the clerk's desk.

In the closing moments of the session late Monday night, Richardson Rep. Bill Ceverha asked for approval of a motion instructing all females in the packed gallery to remain seated after adjournment "until (Kuempel) has a chance to kiss every one of them."

— Rep. Froy Salinas of Lubbock, a jovial watermelon of a man, had his own ritual. Repeatedly, redundantly and again, Salinas walked by the press table and, unprovoked, said, "The power of the mighty press."

— Out on the floor, Rep. Jim Parker, D-Comanche, consistently broke the House rules — but salted away friends for life — by keeping a bottomless box of peanuts on his desk.

— Rep. Frank Eikenburg, R-Plano, caught on camera casting votes for another member in violation of House rules, stared silently and blankly into a television camera for 79 seconds when a reporter challenged him about the votes.

— A clergyman forged ahead with his prayer despite the piercing blare of fire alarm buzzers — a few months after a Capitol fire killed one man. The House was cleared after the prayer, but the alarm turned out to be false.

— Godley dairyman and Rep. Bruce Gibson battled with reporters to milk the most puns and one-liners out of his unsuccessful attempt to make milk the official state beverage. At various times, the bill was skimmed by lawmakers, bottled up in committee, going sour or utterly ridiculous.

Gibson called off the war of words when a reporter asked him if the bill had "passed your eyes."

— There were those who drew attention with how they said what they said. The three House voices least likely to make six o'clock news anchor are Orange Rep. Wayne Peveeto's nasal, country twang; Waco Rep. Betty Denton's blackboard-scratch sound; and Kingsville Rep. Irma Rangel's unintended impression of Truman Capote.

And perhaps the best continuing show in the House was Speaker Gib Lewis' ongoing battle with the English language. The first hint of a problem in the speaker's chair came shortly after Lewis was elected to the post.

Rep. Senfronia Thompson, D-Houston, hailed Lewis as the first big-city speaker in decades. "Urban Speaker" then took the gavel and microphone and thanked everyone in his at times difficult-to-decipher rural Texas drawl.

Lewis' personal war against words ended on the final night when he introduced a woman he called "one of the finest ladies" in the House. The speaker promptly identified San Antonio Rep. Lou Nelle Sutton as Mrs. Thompson.

Mrs. Sutton fired back by thanking Speaker (Billy) Clayton. The session's over, but you catch part of the show at a district office near you.

Endorse more struggle to silence dissenters

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist Party Central Committee has endorsed a militant new policy of intensified struggle to silence dissenters, while also admitting martial law has failed to achieve all its desired goals.

"Our enemies, though weakened, on the defensive and ever more isolated, are not giving up," said a statement at the end of Tuesday's one-day session, the first meeting of the Central Committee in more than seven months.

"We do not want to multiply enemies," the statement said, "but we shall not be found lacking in determination and perseverance in fighting them."

It said the party "will struggle against that which is pulling us backward, against those who disturb social calm and are still trying to incite action against socialist Poland."

The statement, a report from the ruling Politburo, was read to the 200-member Central Committee by senior party official Jozef Czyrek, a close ally of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, the premier and party chief. Jaruzelski made only a brief appearance to open the session at party headquarters in downtown Warsaw.

Urging Poles to "take up the common effort of shaping the present day and a happy future for the Polish People's Republic," the Politburo acknowledged the party has "not attained the desired results in all fields" since Jaruzelski decreed martial law Dec. 13, 1981.

Under military rule the government suspended and later outlawed the independent union Solidarity, but the banned organization and its leader Lech Walesa still enjoy a wide following among workers, farmers, and intellectuals.

The Solidarity underground succeeded in organizing mass anti-government demonstrations in 20 Polish cities on May Day despite government attempts to intimidate the protesters.

One Western diplomat with long experience in Eastern Europe said the Politburo report was worded more militantly than previous speeches by senior party leaders.

He said the stress on "struggle" was an apparent concession to hardliners allied with the Kremlin, which always has opposed Solidarity and urged Polish leaders to demand strict obedience to the party's monopoly on political power.

The report said the party must "recover the confidence and gain the support of the working class." It said "there are still many weaknesses and shortcomings" in the party's relations with young people. It said the party also faces strong opposition from "intellectual circles... noisy groups of the so-called internal opposition and even overt underground bridgeheads... ready to take part in an alien game to further foreign interests."

Hostages recall 11-day siege

By ALISON CARPER
The Huntsville Item

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — The odd-shaped book, coffee table size, with an appropriate black cover and an even more appropriate title is as cryptic as the 11-day siege was powerful.

Filled with photos and facsimile copies of handwritten passages scribbled in a negotiator's notebook, it records three inmates' control of 13 hostages behind the Huntsville prison walls nine years ago.

Two of the hostages were killed. Of the three inmates, only Ignacio Cuevas lived through it. Cuevas' third capital murder trial for hostage Julia Standley's death wound down Tuesday.

The book the Texas Department of Corrections published is appropriately called "A Time To Forget." But for those intimately involved, that advice is hard to follow each time Cuevas comes to trial.

"I can see him very visibly," former hostage Glenn Johnson said of Cuevas in a recent interview. "He's the one that was pointing that gun at my head."

Johnson, an official with the prison's Windham School System, passed out from heart palpitations and hyperventilation on the first day of the 11-day siege and was released. It had been his turn to sit like a duck in a shooting gallery in front of a pair of glass doors — the only access to the library in which Cuevas, Rudy Dominguez and their ringleader Fred Carrasco held the men and women they wanted to trade for freedom.

Johnson works at the Wynne unit now. Every day, he says, he sees the inmate who hid guns for the three men who held them hostage. He's just getting to the point where he can look at the man, he says.

Johnson fainted with his eyes blindfolded, hands cuffed and feet bound — the standard posture for everybody who sat in the chair in front of the door.

Apparently Johnson's reason for being released wasn't what his employers expected from a TDC man. Johnson says his boss, who no longer works for TDC, accused him of faking the heart attack.

"I suppose I'll never know — I don't feel any kind of guilt — whether or not I could have done anything to alter the course of events," he said.

Johnson was the ranking TDC official in the library that day. "You don't think about it in normal hours, and then something happens."

He speaks in ellipsis and unfinished sentences, like others asked to recall the siege for the press two weeks ago. As much as he is conveyed in the weighty hesitations as in the skeletal stories of the nine-year-old event.

"We were pretty sure we were all going to die by five that afternoon," he said.

It wasn't just the inmates they were afraid of. The 13 hostages were TDC employees or fellow inmates and they all knew the prison system's rules — illegal freedom cannot be bargained for even at the price of civilian life.

"It was not known — or guessed at very accurately by us — whether or not TDC personnel would storm that door. And we knew if that occurred, we'd be dead."

Prison Director Jim Estelle picks his words carefully when he talks about those hostages who died on the 11th day. His softspoken voice becomes even more deliberate as he chooses the words to illustrate the tragedy.

Estelle reacts to Cuevas' third trial — a trial for a murder he's been convicted for twice before — not with anger but with a weary kind of sadness.

"I don't think my reaction is any different than any victim's family's reaction is."

There never has been any question of the innocence or guilt, or the truth of the matter, or the facts of the situation. In the course of the administration of justice, I don't think the facts have ever been at issue."

Cuevas' earlier trials were overturned because of improper jury selection — not new evidence.

"It's a matter of technicalities — sometimes referred to as loophole lawyering — that have caused the system to try this case for the third time."

Estelle emphasizes words with pauses. He punctuates with an occasional tense pucker that makes one wonder if it is memories or inappropriate questions that are trying him.

"I think most everybody who has been directly involved in that incident has never put it to rest."

The siege started with gunshots, partially muffled by the TDC one o'clock whistle, Wednesday July 24, 1974. Then there was the realization of what happened.

"The first feeling was disbelief," Johnson said.

Other agencies — the Department of Public Safety, the Huntsville Police Department, Walker County Sheriff's office — quickly joined the prison guards. Private industries from all over Texas and as far away as Utah called Estelle to offer the use of their equipment.

Then came the inmate demands.

TDC tried to concede only when it would get something back. Estelle says. Handcuffs and a TV for a group of inmate hostages.

Other heroes appeared.

There was The Rev. Joseph O'Brien, a Catholic priest at the prison who went to the library to act as a mediator and became a hostage himself.

And Ruben Montemeyor, Carrasco's attorney, who flew to Huntsville the first day and took on a key role in the negotiations.

"It was an awesome experience for me at the time — and the tragedy that occurred still lingers," Montemeyor said in a telephone interview from his San Antonio office.

"My main interest was to save as many people as possible — including my client."

Montemeyor, whose name Estelle pronounces in proper Spanish, as he pronounces Carrasco's — as if they were characters in a tragic novel — became a member of TDC's Board of Corrections a year after his part in preventing the escape attempt.

"My preference was to try to get (Carrasco) to surrender. Then I got deeply involved in the hostages — hearing them on the phone — their cries."

At first TDC personnel believed Carrasco had help coming from the inside. Estelle says. But several days into the siege, it became apparent that Carrasco's assistance wasn't going to show up.

He began to improvise. Estelle said.

The inmates made what became known as the "pinata" or "Trojan Horse" — a vehicle rigged from two rolling blackboards with books taped to the outside for armor.

Three hostages were with the three inmates inside. The remaining hostages were tied to the outside to serve as human shields guiding the Trojan horse to an awaiting armored car.

The pinata got stuck on the third turn in the ramp that leads down from the library. Texas Rangers called for a surrender, but the inmates didn't answer.

According to written reports of the incident, high pressure hoses shot water at the Trojan Horse in an effort to topple it.

"There were three muffled gunshots," Estelle remembers. "There were three shots fired ... and they were not loud — you know, the loud report of a weapon being fired in the open ... (they were) distinctly muffled."

Estelle wants the fact to tell the story. He doesn't know if the shots were "at close range." From his vantage point all he can say is they were "distinctly muffled."

"Blood immediately started running down underneath. Then almost immediately after those three muffled shots, why then ... the loud reports of weapons being fired from within."

"We had fired no shots at that point and it was obvious that somebody inside that vehicle was ... the amount of blood flowing down that ramp. I think spoke for itself."

Julia Standley and Elizabeth Beseda were killed. O'Brien was severely injured in the gun shower that erupted.

"When they put him in that ambulance that night, I thought I'd never see him again ..."

Were there regrets for not granting freedom? Was conceding to that final demand ever considered?

"The decision was never made," Estelle says quickly — the only answer he gives without thorough deliberation. "The decision was there before this incident ever occurred. The decision is still with us today."

"All of our staff, all of our inmates know that. There's never going to ever be illegal freedom granted because of a hostage situation ..."

"These are the words I use at every (TDC) academy graduation — and I tell them this myself, so there'd be no misunderstanding about it. While that may sound like a cold response to a pretty sensitive situation, it's the only insurance policy that all of our employees have in the first place."

It seems like more than a policy to Estelle. More like a kind of universal rule. A commandment.

"If you ever compromise that policy, you've just given a license to any crazy person, not just in prison but in any desperate situation. I know all I have to do is take a hostage and I get what I want. Well, you can't subject your staff to that. You can't subject other inmates to that. You can't subject the community to that ..."

The tragedy will be put to rest again this week. Final arguments for Cuevas' third trial were Tuesday.

Games gobble quarters

AUSTIN (AP) — There are 185,000 video machines in Texas, and those located in prime locations net up to $75 a week, according to the state comptroller's office.

Revenue from the Coin-Operated Amusement Machine Tax in 1982 totaled more than $2.5 million, an increase of nearly $700,000 or 37.5 percent from the previous year.

"Why the big increase? No question about it — Pac-Man, Donkey Kong, Centipede and Tron and other electronic games are responsible for this new American pastime," said an article by Irene Abeita in the most recent Fiscal Notes publication of the comptroller's office.

Also, an annual occupation tax of $15 is imposed on each video game in Texas, and game owners must apply for a business machine license, which range from $50 to $500 a year.

The figures were reported by Ms. Abeita in the most recent Fiscal Notes publication of the comptroller's office.

"While some industry sources say the video game boom is slowing, many people still find these games an attractive investment," Ms. Abeita's article said. "Licenses are issued to people from all walks of life — from priests to bankers. Licenses issued in 1982 jumped to 4,104, a 99.4 percent increase over 1981. Revenue from license fees in 1982 leaped to $1,149,504, an increase of $645,268 over 1981."

In Texas, the article said, "the saturation point" has been reached and "the machine industry could experience a 40 percent decline in profits in the next two to three years."

Commodity prices continue rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Commodity prices at the farm rose in May for the fifth straight month — but still averaged less than they did a year ago, the Agriculture Department says.

The May increase was 0.7 percent, which left the overall index 1.4 percent below a year earlier, the department said Tuesday.

Officials said that higher prices for potatoes, hay, eggs, corn and lettuce were mostly responsible for the May increase.

Lower prices for cattle, milk, tomatoes, wheat and onions partially offset the gains for the other commodities, the department's Crop Reporting Board said.

Prices paid by farmers to meet expenses, meanwhile, rose 0.6 percent from April, mostly because of higher prices for feeds and fuels. Lower prices for feeder cattle and pigs partly offset the other increases. Compared to May 1982, the index was up 2.6 percent.

According to revised figures in the new report, the farm price index increased 1.5 percent in April instead of the 2.2 percent gain reported a month ago. A 3.1 percent increase in February was the largest one-month gain since August 1981.

Despite the recent price increases, prospects call for only a slight increase in farm income this year. Department economists, however, are hopeful that 1984 will be better for producers, as the impact of this year's crop acreage controls is felt.

Farmers have signed up to take up to 83 million acres from production in 1983 in an effort to reduce surpluses and boost market prices.

Food prices rose 4 percent in 1982, the smallest annual increase in six years and could rise even less this year — perhaps 2 to 4 percent, according to department economists.

In the preliminary figures for May, which are based mostly on mid-month averages, the index for potatoes, sweet potatoes and dry beans rose 24 percent from April but still averaged 7.9 percent from a year ago.

Potato prices jumped to $6.10 per 100 pounds from $1.28 in April, while dry beans went to $15.50 per 100 pounds from $2.10 the month before.

The feed-and-hay index was up 3.5 percent from the previous month, averaging 11 percent above a year earlier. Corn prices averaged $3 per bushel, up 6 cents from April.

Meat animals dropped 1.9 percent from April and averaged 7.7 percent below year-earlier prices.

Prices of food grains as a group declined 2.6 percent during the month but still averaged 0.7 percent more than a year earlier. Wheat prices, at $3.69 per bushel, were down 8 cents from April. Rice dropped 11 cents to $8.12 per 100 pounds.

The index of dairy prices dropped 1.4 percent from April but was 0.7 percent above May 1982.

Farm prices in May averaged 137 percent of a 1977 base-price average used for comparison, according to the preliminary figures. The revised April index was 136 percent.

The May parity ratio was 57 percent, unchanged from April. A year ago it was 59 percent. Last winter, the indicator sagged to 54 percent, the lowest since it also averaged 54 percent in April 1933, one of the worst years of the Depression.

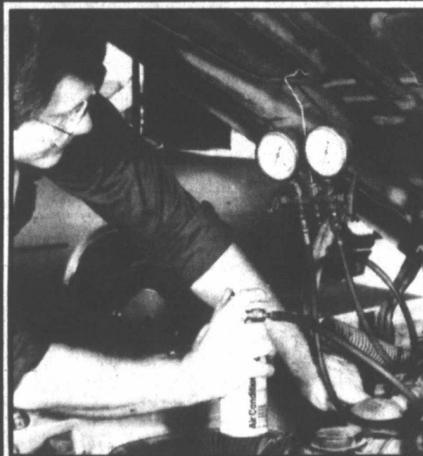

Under the parity formula, prices farmers get for commodities are compared with prices they pay for production and living expenses — then stacks them up with a 1910-14 yardstick.

At 100 percent, the indicator would theoretically mean that farmers have the same buying power as in 1910-14.

For example, the average actual price of wheat in May was $3.69 per bushel, according to the preliminary figures. That was 50 percent of the May parity price of wheat — $7.39 per bushel.

Pampa tennis open starts Thursday

The Pampa Tennis Open gets underway Thursday in the junior division while the adult division starts play Friday. First-round play in the junior division begins at 9 a.m. with the finals scheduled for 1 p.m. Friday. The adult division begins first-round action at 9 a.m. and will finish Sunday afternoon with the championship finals. "We're going to have a big tournament," said tournament director Stacey Foster. "Entries are still coming in." Entry deadline for adult division is Thursday. Foster may be contacted at 669-7119 for more information about the tournament. Tournament sites are the high school courts, the Pampa Youth Center and the Pampa Country Club. Trophies will be awarded for first and second place in each division. There will be singles and doubles play in both men's and women's divisions. Foster is the defending champion. He defeated Amarillo's David Webb, 6-3, 6-1, in the finals. Pampa Tennis Club members have spent several days repairing the asphalt surface at the high school courts so that tournament play could start on time. The Open is sponsored by the Pampa Tennis Club.

Staubach just another fan

DALLAS (AP) — It took a while for Roger Staubach to find get over a case of "retirement syndrome" after he left the Dallas Cowboys, but now the former quarterback says he's just another fan. In an interview with The Dallas Morning News, Staubach said it's been easier to get along without pro football with each passing season since he announced his retirement in May 1980. The first year away was difficult, the second year and little easier, the third year easier still, Staubach said. "I'm just another Dallas Cowboy fan," he said. Staubach, 41, still runs 20-24 miles a week and still looks fit enough to return to the Cowboys' huddle, where he called the plays that led the team to the Super Bowl four times in eight years, with Dallas winning twice. He will be inducted into the Texas Sports Hall of Fame in Grand Prairie next Saturday. "There's still that feeling of accomplishment," Staubach said. "I'll never lose that feeling. I know that if Roger Staubach never does anything the rest of his life, I did do something in one area that was very special. It's just that you can't play 'til you're 70 years old. There's a physical thing that won't let you do that." Staubach is not without challenges now. In addition to his wife and five children, he's involved in a real estate business. He also continues to set goals for himself. "There are a lot of floaters in this world," he said. "Floaters that have had good opportunity not to float. That's a waste." As a quarterback, Coach Tom Landry called all the plays. Now, Staubach calls them for his business — and he likes that. "I like being in a position where I can call my own shots," he said. Staubach, who became a partner in the real estate business in 1977, is involved primarily in developing commercial real estate, especially small office and condominium projects, and supervises 31 employees. "Our business projections look good," he said. "Of course, a lot will depend upon the economy." Staubach also has found that managing different personalities is not easy — a task faced each season by his former boss, Landry. "You want everybody to get along," Staubach said. "You want to create a Utopia, an atmosphere where everybody is happy. But that's impossible, of course." Staubach has picked up some money doing commercial endorsements — but he has turned down others, including some in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. "I want people I do business with to take me seriously," he said. "I don't want them to think I'm always out doing some commercial instead of protecting their interests. And, after all, it is my personal investment." That also is part of the reason Staubach quit his job as color commentator of National Football Games for CBS-TV. Preparation and presentation takes the entire weekend and he says he'd rather devote the time to his business and family. Marianne Staubach, who met Staubach in the fourth grade in a Cincinnati Catholic school, is a registered nurse, but worked only briefly before spending all her time as a mother. The Staubach children range in age from 6 to 17. "Part of the reason Roger retired was to spend more time with the family," Mrs. Staubach said. Staubach also has resisted the push into the political realm. Although he campaigned for Ronald Reagan, Staubach ignored an effort by a committee of Texas Republicans to draft him for senator. But he hints that he might give politics another look at a more opportune time.

76ers sweep Lakers to win NBA crown

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers, an overpowering machine in the fourth quarter of every game in the National Basketball Association championship series, are champions at last. The 76ers dominated the final 12 minutes for a fourth and final time Tuesday night as they rallied for a 115-108 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers to complete a sweep of the defending NBA champions. The injury-riddled Lakers were trying to become the first team to win consecutive NBA crowns since the Boston Celtics accomplished the feat in 1967-68 and 1968-69. Instead, they became only the fourth victim of a sweep in the championship series and the first since Golden State beat Washington in four games eight years ago. Meanwhile, the 76ers have every right to stake their claim as one of the finest teams in the 37-year history of the NBA. They were 65-17 during the regular season, the fifth-best mark ever recorded, and became the first team ever to go through the playoffs with as few as one loss. "We're going to have to be remembered," said a sweat-soaked Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham amidst a jubilant dressing room celebration. "When you win 12 out of 13 in the playoffs, that's something." The 76ers, who swept the New York Knicks in four games and eliminated the Milwaukee Bucks in five to qualify for the championship series, trailed the Lakers 93-82 entering the fourth quarter Tuesday night. But with Moses Malone and Julius Erving leading the way, it was, as Ervin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers likes to say, "winnin' time." Only not for Los Angeles. Malone, a unanimous choice as the Most Valuable Player of the series, scored nine points and grabbed 10 rebounds in the final period. "I felt to win this game, we had to control the boards," said Malone. "I'm not saying we're the best team ever. We're the best team now. After next year, maybe we'll be the best team ever." Malone, who signed a six-year, $13 million contract with the 76ers before the 1982-83 season, finished with 24 points and 23 rebounds in the four games, he averaged 25.8 points and 18.0 rebounds. Malone made the difference in the series. "I said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley. 'The guy in the middle makes them a championship team. He was the missing element on the team.' 'All four games were great games. Philadelphia was just able to put it all together in the fourth quarter and they beat us. They're a great, great team starting guards, Andrew Toney and Cheeks, added 23 and 20 points, respectively. Bobby Jones came off the bench to add 13 for the 76ers." He was fouled on the play and made the free throw, giving the 76ers a 109-107 advantage with 59 seconds remaining. Abdul-Jabbar made one of two free throws with 42 seconds left, drawing the Lakers to within one point, but Erving sank an 18-footer with 24 seconds to go, making it 111-106. After Cooper missed a three-point attempt, Bobby Jones stole the ball from Abdul-Jabbar and Malone scored on a dunk with 11 seconds left. Maurice Cheeks completed the scoring with another dunk with one second to go. The 76ers scored 20 of the game's final 28 points and 33 in the fourth quarter to only 15 for the Lakers. All told, Philadelphia outscored Los Angeles 124-79 in the fourth quarters of the four games after trailing at halftime in every game. It was 65-51 at the intermission Tuesday night. "I felt to win this game, we

Pardee to coach Gamblers

HOUSTON (AP) — Jack Pardee is throwing away his conservative tag to become a Gambler. Pardee was named head coach Tuesday of the United States Football League Houston Gamblers, whose owners have promised a high-scoring, entertainment oriented offense when the Gamblers open play next season. Pardee gained a conservative reputation as head coach of the National Football League Chicago Bears and Washington Redskins, but he's ready to switch philosophies. "What good coach isn't a gambler," Pardee said. "You don't want to shoot craps on every down but you want to come up with the odds and beat them." "We want to win but in an entertaining way. We don't want to put the fans to sleep. We'll try to put on a good

Rangers continue to skid

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — When Bud Black pitches for the Kansas City Royals, Texas Manager Doug Rader sees red. Black was called up from Omaha May 23 and has started twice. He's defeated the Rangers both times. Black didn't feel well, had a poor fastball, and only lasted six innings Tuesday night but it was good enough to beat the Rangers 6-5. The last time Black beat the Rangers, Rader went into a tirade in the clubhouse, throwing his clothes. His trousers comically ended up on a reporter's head. "Black was basically the same," said a disgusted Rader through clenched teeth after the loss Tuesday night. Black scattered five hits over six innings before Mike Armstrong and Dan Quisenberry gave him relief help. Quisenberry earned his 12th save, tops in the American League. "I felt bad, I didn't feel 100 per cent," said Black. "I had a 100 degree fever." Black added, "From the first inning on I didn't have a good fastball. They hit some balls hard."

else can." Hal McRae's two-run double capped a four-run fourth inning for the Royals to give them a 6-1 lead off eventual loser Danny Darwin, 3-5. Texas rallied and Buddy Bell's two-run homer in the eighth inning off Armstrong brought the Rangers to within a run before Quisenberry shut the door. "I only had to throw 10 pitches," Quisenberry said. "If I could do that every game, I'd be ready to go in every time." "He's the guy you want out there. If he can't do it nobody

Astro-Graph by bernice bede osol

If you handle developments wisely, this coming year should be a fun one for you socially and a rewarding one for you materially. Think your moves through carefully.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'll be well-received by friends today, but guard against foolish behavior. Thoughtless actions could create unnecessary shock waves. Order now: The NEW Astro-Graph Matchmaker wheel and booklet which reveals romantic combinations, compatibilities for all signs, tells how to get along with others, finds rising signs, hidden qualities, plus more. Mail $2 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Send an additional $1 for your Gemini Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead. Be sure to give your zodiac sign.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Much of your success today will be dependent upon how well you adapt to changing conditions. Be prepared to make adjustments where they are needed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In matters where you abide by your logical judgment you'll be able to keep things under control today. Don't let emotional concerns distort the picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Feelings will be running strong today and harsh words could ensue if you and your mate take opposing positions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You'll do well today as long as what needs doing can be delegated to others. When you have to fend for yourself you may find reasons for postponement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Show a willingness to share today, but keep your generosity within reasonable bounds. Being excess could lead to giver's remorse.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) A desire to put your personal imprint on all that you touch today is OK, provided you have something to contribute. Back off where you don't.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Beware of tendencies today to make changes merely for the sake of change, especially in career or financial situations which are presently running well.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Conditions are rather unique today in that you could be a winner, yet lose in the process. Hang on to opportunities with both hands.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Key contacts might back off today if they think you are too concerned with your personal interests while ignoring theirs. Practice the golden rule.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Let your noble and compassionate instincts prevail today in your involvements and all will run smoothly. Don't be petty.

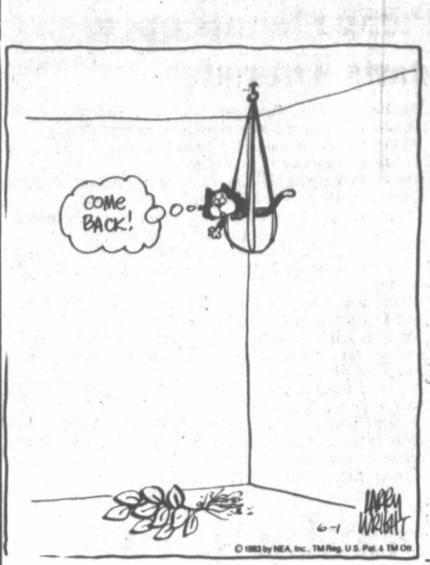

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Let bygones be bygones and don't attempt to even old scores today, especially in a situation where another got the better of you in a business deal.

Envoy to El Salvador being sworn in WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Sen. Richard Stone begins his new job as special envoy to Central America today and plans to leave Thursday on a peacemaking mission to El Salvador, U.S. officials say.

Stone was being sworn in at ceremonies presided over by Secretary of State George P. Shultz. His trip to El Salvador the next day will be to help the Salvadoran government encourage moderate leftists to participate in the fall presidential elections.

President Reagan, meanwhile, said Tuesday the ouster of the State Department's chief officer on Latin American affairs and the reported replacement of the American ambassador in El Salvador do not reflect a change in U.S. policy.

Stone, a Florida Democrat, is undertaking his mission at a time when State Department officials believe Salvadoran rebels may be shifting from their policy of humane treatment of captured soldiers.

An American Embassy cable declassified by the State Department Tuesday reported that the guerrillas summarily executed 42 Salvadoran soldiers a week ago after the troops had surrendered. Previously, the rebels routinely released POW's after brief periods of detention.

The incident reportedly followed a nine-hour battle in northeastern El Salvador in which the 82-man government force laid down their arms after running out of ammunition.

Most of the 42 dead soldiers were found with mutilated bodies, including severed arms and ears, the cable said. The bodies were recovered and "stacked up" at 5th brigade headquarters, it said.

At Cinquera, a week earlier, an insurgent force reportedly executed 10 soldiers and eight civilian sympathizers during a two-day occupation of the town.

The State Department cable said of the two incidents, "It is too early to tell if a trend has been established but it appears that the guerrillas have decided to up the ante."

"Why remains a mystery for the moment as their tactic of capturing, stripping and quickly releasing soldiers unarmed had been so successful."

U.S. officials say the shift in guerrilla strategy could be related to U.S. plans to increase training of Salvadoran soldiers. It was disclosed last week that the administration will send 100 U.S. military trainers to Honduras to train 2,400 troops from El Salvador.

Reminded that the Cinquera incident occurred well before last Friday's announcement, the officials said the insurgents have known for weeks about the plan to increase training from high military officials in San Salvador.

They added that the murder last week of Navy Cmdr. Albert A. Schaufelberger, III, an American military trainer in El Salvador, may also have been related to the shift in guerrilla tactics.

Schaufelberger was the first American trainer to be killed in El Salvador since U.S. personnel first were sent there two years ago.

Worst seems over but lasting concerns remain

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Death has retreated, at least for now, from the Lippizaner stud farm, home to Austria's 400-year-old breed of famed white dancing stallions.

A herpes virus that killed two-thirds of the year's foals has not claimed a victim since mid-April, though two broodmares, one of them pregnant, are still infected and at risk. Five stallions are again at stud, and breeders hope the births next spring will not be threatened.

For two months the disease, equine rhino-pneumonitis, ravaged the horse farm near Piber, in the rolling wooded hills of Styria province near the Yugoslav border. Eight broodmares died of the virus, their nervous or respiratory systems paralyzed. It also claimed 31 foals — either just before or after birth.

The two mares, sick for weeks, "are doing well but are not yet over the hill," said Dr. Othmar Schmeihlik, the stud farm's resident veterinarian. Because the farm is still off-limits to visitors, the hamlet of Piber, whose 550 people depend on the attraction of the horses for much of their livelihood, is feeling the strain.

"We've lost a tremendous amount of earnings," innkeeper Maria Bardel said in a telephone interview. The whitewashed walls and wood-paneled interior of her tidy, two-story inn reflect $187,000 worth of recent renovations.

The 55-year-old Schmeihlik, who worked long days trying to contain the epidemic, said the earliest the farm could be reopened would be July.

He offered no firm hope of a quick remedy.

"The lifting of the quarantine depends on the results of further medical examinations," he said.

The Agriculture Ministry, in charge of the 1,400-acre farm which shelters 150 broodmares and foals in 20 stalls and barns, is unlikely to readmit the public while the sickness persists, he indicated.

The dancing Lippizaner stallions enthrall thousands of tourists each year at the Spanish Riding School in Vienna, which also is administered by the Agriculture Ministry.

The twice-weekly performances in the ornate 18th-century Hapsburg palace complex, a seat of Austria's former emperors, are regularly sold out in advance. The shows are a holdover from the days when Austria ruled much of Europe and viewing was restricted to royalty and guests.

It may be long summer for Jedi competition

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — After a record launch last week, "Return of the Jedi" rocketed past $41 million in ticket sales during the Memorial Day weekend, making it look like a long, dry summer for the movie competition so far.

"Jedi," the much-anticipated final chapter in George Lucas' "Star Wars" trilogy, rolled up $30 million in box-office sales from Friday through Monday. Its six-day total: $41.1 million.

That surpassed by far the $25 million, seven-day record set by another spaceman, "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial," last summer, said Barry Glasser, director of West Coast publicity at 20th Century-Fox, where executives were smiling all the way to the bank Tuesday because of the massive "Jedi" numbers.

"It's unbelievable. We're not even finished with the week yet," Glasser said, noting that "E.T." set its mark at 1,271 movie screens, compared with the 1,002 screens on which "Jedi" is playing — 15 of them around the clock.

A distant No. 2 for the weekend was "Blue Thunder," which stars Roy Scheider as the pilot of an ultra-sophisticated police helicopter. The movie grabbed $6.2 million at 1,555 theaters for the four days, Columbia Pictures said.

The Scheider film has grossed a very good $26 million in 18 days through Monday, but it may be tougher for "Thunder" and others now that "Jedi" is here.

"Jedi" set an opening day record last Wednesday with $6.2 million and then a single-day mark of $8.4 million on Sunday.

Those doing battle with "Jedi" so far included Paramount's "Flashdance," which drew $4.7 million for the four-day weekend at 1,032 screens. The movie has grossed $36.6 million in 46 days.

"Breathless," starring Richard Gere in the remake of the French classic, collected $3.4 million on 1,073 screens for Orion Pictures for the four days, down from $3.7 million the previous weekend.

Columbia's other summer competition, "Spacehunter: Adventures in the Forbidden Zone in 3-D," took a real beating, dropping to $4.6 million on 1,344 screens for the four days, compared with a $7 million take the weekend before.

Another Columbia entry, "Cheech and Chong Still Smokin'," had a cool $2.1 million at 730 screens for the weekend for $10.8 million in 25 days.

Upcoming competition includes "Superman III," "Psycho II," "Staying Alive," "Jaws 3-D," "War Games" and the latest James Bond film, "Octopussy."

But "Jedi" already has made back its $32.5 million production cost, which do not include promotion and marketing expenses, and could go into the black by the middle of next week, officials said.

Industry guidelines say a film must earn 2-2½ times its production cost to be profitable — a figure "Jedi" seems certain to reach.

"Star Wars" has grossed $525 million worldwide since its release in 1977, while "The Empire Strikes Back," the second part of the trilogy, has earned more than $365 million since 1980.

But Lucas and company no doubt have their eyes on No. 1 "E.T.," which so far has grossed $550 million worldwide.

NATO defense ministers mad at U.S.

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger opened talks today with allied defense ministers angry about U.S. dominance of NATO arms trade and reluctant to fund massive increases in military construction.

Defense ministers from 14 North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries are scheduled to meet for two days to talk about how to defend Europe against a Soviet attack. They also will try to contain the latest alliance squabbles over money.

Ministers from 12 European countries, meeting briefly on the eve of today's session, issued an unusually blunt charge that the United States does not buy enough weapons from European producers. Weinberger would not comment on the accusation as he entered NATO headquarters today for the meeting.

Despite a promise by all countries to buy the best arms, not necessarily those produced domestically, there is a "present unsatisfactory imbalance," in favor of U.S. arms producers, the Europeans said in a communique. They demanded a redress of the balance.

Norwegian Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad, spokesman for the group, said "our problem is that in Congress there are restrictions which make it difficult to export our products to the United States."

He said the ratio between purchases of U.S. weapons and European arms by any European country is up to 15-to-1 in favor of American producers. Sjaastad said the Europeans had no plans to embargo U.S. weapons or withdraw help the United States is seeking from Europe in meeting crises in Asia or other areas outside NATO territory. "We shouldn't do too much outside trading," he said.

But if the imbalance persists Europeans will be buying less from the United States and increasing intra-European arms trade, he said.

The cries for more U.S. purchase of European arms have been increasing in recent years, with the growing realization in Europe that weapons sales in an alliance that spends more than $275 billion a year on arms can boost recession-gripped economies.

Exonerated man says $1 million not enough

NEW YORK (AP) — A retired doorman who spent 24 years in prison — some of it on death row — for a crime he did not commit, says he "should have gotten much more" than the $1 million he was awarded in compensation from the state of New York.

"This nightmare will stay with me for the rest of my life," Isidore Zimmerman, 66, said Tuesday after hearing the verdict handed down by state Court of Claims Judge Joseph Modugno. "No amount could compensate for the things that I have lost that can never be replaced."

Zimmerman had sued for $10 million. Modugno ordered the state to pay the damages to Zimmerman for "loss of earnings, medical expenses, loss of liberty and civil rights, loss of reputation and mental anguish." The judge called the award "fair and reasonable."

"I should have gotten much more because what I sacrificed can never be replaced," Zimmerman said. Several members of his family had died before he was able to clear his name, he had no children and had not been able to pursue a career, he said.

David Fishlow, a spokesman for state Attorney General Robert Abrams, said an appeal of the award "is not necessarily contemplated at this point" and that Abrams "has long felt that Zimmerman was entitled to his day in court."

Zimmerman said he will use some of the money to take his wife on a cruise and to find a better place to live.

Zimmerman was 21 and studying at Columbia University on a football scholarship in 1938 when he was convicted of murder and sentenced to die. He never was charged with killing anyone, but was accused of supplying a gun used in a restaurant holdup where a New York City police detective was killed.

Remanded to death row at Sing Sing prison, now Ossining State Prison, Zimmerman "saw several of his co-defendants electrocuted and he ate what was supposed to be his 'last meal,'" Modugno said in his 10-page decision.

On Jan. 6, 1939, two hours before Zimmerman's scheduled execution, then-Gov. Herbert Lehman commuted the death sentence to life imprisonment, and Zimmerman — who always had insisted he was innocent of the crime — sought vindication for years through the state's courts and Legislature.

In 1961, the state Court of Appeals threw out his murder conviction on grounds of prosecutorial misconduct, and Zimmerman was released after 24 years in maximum-security prisons in which he often had been held in solitary confinement.

Hopalong Cassidy rides in memorabilia

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Harry Rinker rediscovered his boyhood in a cigar box. The box contained Hopalong Cassidy bubble gum cards, which he found while rummaging through storage about a decade ago.

The cards are scenes from some of the many movies of the famed fictional cowboy — movies with titles guaranteed to fire a child's imagination.

Who could resist thrilling to "Dangerous Venture," "Devil's Playground," "Fool's Gold" and "The Dead Don't Dream"?

Certainly not the youngsters who grew up with "Hoppy" as he galloped across movies and radio into the brave new world of television in the late '40s and early '50s.

"He was my childhood hero," said Rinker, who remembers Hoppy with enthusiastic affection.

Rinker recalled gathering with his pals, pint-sized Hoppies from their hats down to their six-shooters. They dressed in black, like their idol, who belied the notion that good guys always wore white.

"My memories of Hopalong Cassidy are tremendously pleasant," said Rinker, who lives with his wife in western Lehigh County. His 200 bubble gum cards ("I personally chewed all the gum") became the nucleus of what evolved into a treasury of "Hoppy" memorabilia.

"When I collect, I take it reasonably seriously," said Rinker, 41, who's not kidding.

An antiques collector and appraiser, the jocular, bearded 6-footer is also editor of "Warman's Antiques and Their Prices," which he described as America's oldest antique price guide and "one of the bibles in the business."

The quantity of Hoppy collectibles is great because the good guy's endorsement appeared on more than 2,500 items from 1948 to 1953, Rinker said.

At a recent Hopalong Cassidy exhibit, the room was full of reminders of the man who slugged, roped and shot the forces of evil into submission in neat, weekly installments.

All around were Hoppy lunch boxes, milk bottles, photographs, movie posters, albums, play money, watches, binoculars, pennants, barbells, games and even a figurine of Hoppy on his trusted steed, Topper.

Elsewhere was a display carton for Hoppy's "Enriched Chocolate Coconut Candy," which sold for a nickel each; a garden that sprouts real vegetables (just add water); and picture labels that were used to seal loaves of Bond Bread.

The object was to be the first kid in the neighborhood to collect all the labels. When pasted into albums, they told stories such as "Hoppy Captures the Stagecoach Bandits."

Mementos of Hopalong Cassidy will cost the nostalgia buff anywhere from $5 to $250, according to Rinker, who added that Hoppy hats in mint condition will go for between $100 and $150. Hoppy collectibles have not caught on yet, he said. "You can still find things at garage sales and anywhere else you look."

Homeless have fought poverty war and lost

By TAD BARTIMUS Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Every night at two emergency shelters in this Sun Belt city, 500 homeless people bathe in a loaned National Guard shower, then go to sleep on borrowed cots. Every day they survive on donated food.

They sell their blood to buy booze and cigarettes, and sometimes search for jobs that aren't there. For them, the war on poverty and despair has been fought and lost in the streets and unemployment lines.

Every city in America has homeless people. They are hurriedly passed in the daylight and avoided in the dark. The label "homeless" means sleeping on the ground or the hard concrete of a sidewalk; being dirty with no place to get clean; being sick with no insurance or money to buy medicine; having no place to lay your sleepy child's head; having no kitchen or food to cook in, and having no front door to lock.

The National Conference of Mayors estimates the number of homeless in the United States is 2 million. The federal government doesn't have any exact figures. The National Coalition for the Homeless, a year-old federation of individuals, agencies and organizations representing 40 cities and headquartered in New York, puts the homeless at between 500,000 and 2 million citizens.

A spot check of some cities indicates that in: — St. Louis, the Rev. Larry Rice, head of the New Life Evangelistic Center, estimates 20,000 people are without homes;

— Denver, the Salvation Army's Gerald Koch believes at least 1,000 are homeless;

— San Francisco, Brad Paul of the Central City Shelter Network puts that city's homeless at between 8,000 and 10,000;

— Cleveland, the Federation for Community Planning estimates 800 to 1,000 are homeless;

— New York City, charity officials believe the number of homeless in the nation's largest city could run as high as 36,000.

Social workers in Phoenix say that about 30 percent of that city's homeless are hardcore alcoholics, another 25 percent are chronically mentally ill with no place to go. The rest appear to be men, women, and even entire families, just down on their luck.

"The information coming to us is that the homeless population is not the standard stereotype of the single, urban-based person," says Amy Haus, an editor of the Coalition for the Homeless newsletter.

"We are seeing a lot more families, and getting increasing reports of problems in rural areas. It's hard to get a handle on the problem because nobody is keeping statistics."

The U.S. Census Bureau, the ultimate national record keeper, says it won't have homeless statistics compiled until at least December.

"We are tabulating our information gathered from the 1980 census questionnaires on a priority basis, and that is a lower priority," says spokeswoman Arlene Saluter. "The only numbers we have now are from the 1970 census, and I'm afraid those are out of date."

Congress held hearings on the growing national problem last December and authorized $100 million to help feed and shelter the homeless when it passed its emergency jobs bill in March.

Rep. Bruce F. Vento, D-Minn., is cosponsor of a measure in the House of Representatives allocating another $100 million in 1984. His bill also would appropriate $760 million to help prevent mortgage foreclosures against people who've lost their jobs.

"We feel that is going to the heart of the problem," says Steve Judge, a Vento aide. "Passage of that bill could actually prevent people from becoming homeless."

This spring the Reagan administration's economic experts said the recession is on the wane. Private charities around the nation, perhaps the best source for information on the homeless, are studying the transient unemployed to see if the experts are right.

"Nobody is whistling 'Happy Days Are Here Again,'" says Sumner Dodge, community relations director of the Salvation Army in Phoenix. "Our numbers haven't tapered off since last fall. We still can't provide overnight shelter for all the people who need it. The bag lady I've seen on the same street corner all winter is still there."

Phoenix has tried to rid the city of its homeless by passing ordinances that make it a misdemeanor to lie down or sleep on public property.

New worry on Wall Street

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

A new wave of worry about interest rates has hit Wall Street, stalling the stock market's long and powerful rally and boosting the dollar's exchange value.

Many investors are concerned that a recent surge in the nation's money supply — beyond the level targeted by the Federal Reserve Board — will lead to higher interest rates.

That view was supported Tuesday by the comments of a senior Reagan administration official who told reporters the Federal Reserve might react to the surge in money growth by tightening the supply of funds in the banking network.

"If this money supply continues during June to still be on the high side, obviously some more tightening is going to be needed," said the official, who asked that he not be identified. The expected result would be an increase in interest rates.

On Friday, after the financial markets had closed for the week, the Federal Reserve reported a $2.1 billion rise in the money supply for the latest week. It was the fourth consecutive weekly increase, and the markets took it badly.

On Tuesday, the first day of U.S. trading since the money supply report, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 16.16 points, to 1,199.98. It had lost nearly 13 points in the previous two trading sessions.

Also, bond prices fell and interest rates on government securities rose.

On international currency markets, the value of the American dollar jumped again, setting new records in relation to the French franc and the Italian lira.

In other economic developments Tuesday:

—Starting today, the maximum interest rate that savings institutions may pay on six-month savings certificates goes up to 9 percent from 8.97 percent and commercial banks will be allowed to pay 8.92 percent, up from 8.72 percent.

—The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said Americans deposited $4.4 billion more than they withdrew from the nation's savings and loan associations last month — the best April on record for S&Ls. Commitments to make new home loans also set an April record.

—The Mortgage Bankers Association of America, a trade group, said a record number of homeowners were facing mortgage foreclosures at the end of March, although new foreclosures started in the first quarter of this year were down for the first time in 18 months. At the end of the quarter, about 143,000 of the nation's 27 million home loans were "in the process of foreclosure," the report said.

—The Conference Board said the volume of help-wanted advertising in 51 major newspapers nationwide slipped a point in April after holding steady for four consecutive months. At 82 on a scale of 100 established in 1967, the index fell one point below the 83 reading that prevailed from December 1982 through March.

—The government said sales of new, single-family houses in April were 4 percent lower than in March but 67.5 percent higher than in April 1982.

Is Reagan hastening the trend to dominant federal government?

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, champion of old-fashioned American individualism, may actually be hastening the trend toward a more dominant federal government, according to author-professor George C. Lodge.

Lodge, heir to a name that once dominated Republican conservatism, notes the irony in that, but suggests that a strengthened federal role in economic planning is both inevitable and necessary.

"The role of the state is changing radically," Lodge writes. "For better or worse, it has become the arbiter of community needs. Inevitably, it will take on unprecedented tasks of coordination, priority setting and planning in the largest sense."

Lodge, a professor at Harvard Business School, is the son and grandson of senators from Massachusetts. He wanted to be one himself, but lost to Sen. Edward M.

Kennedy in 1962.

His appraisal of the trend toward government planning — the Reagan revolution notwithstanding — was published in The Journal of the Institute for Socioeconomic Studies. It is part of a book entitled "The American Disease," to be published next year.

"Ironically, President Reagan's breathtaking 1981 economic program to cut taxes, increase defense spending, balance the federal budget, increase productivity, cut inflation and attain full employment may well turn out to mark the beginning of an explicit recognition that the U.S. economy requires government planning — if not a planned economy," Lodge writes.

Reagan got the program, but it hasn't produced on all those fronts — unemployment and budget deficits worsened.

Nevertheless, Lodge sees Reaganomics as an explicit, if flawed exercise in federal planning. "Our governmental leaders from time to time have found it necessary to plan," he writes. "But invariably, they have cloaked their departures from the limited state in the language of the old hymns, attempting to make their interventions appear pragmatic, ignoring the ideological implications."

"This delays the time when we recognize the planning functions of the state for what they are and must be."

According to Lodge, the government could be smaller if those functions were acknowledged and clearly defined. He says bureaucracy has flourished for lack of focus, a problem Reagan and his predecessors all recognized and tried to change.

Lodge sees the trend toward a more dominant government role even in such conservative measures as the control of social welfare benefits. He says that doesn't mean a return to survival of the fittest but, more likely, a new set of rules — "if you are able-bodied, you must work; if you cannot find a job, government will provide one and perhaps coerce you to take it even if that means resettlement."

Move to end fledgling East German peace movement

BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's Communist rulers are trying to quash a budding peace movement at home by expelling its youthful members to the West.

So far, 18 men and women involved in an unauthorized peace organization in the small East German town of Jena have been forced to leave the country.

All were expelled to West Berlin or Bavaria during a 10-day period last month. But members of the group, in recent interviews with West German television, said the movement is strong and would continue despite harassment from authorities.

Diplomatic sources in East Berlin said several thousand people may belong to the unauthorized movement, although its members are scattered, lack unified leadership and seem to have little communication with each other.

"The peace movement is not limited to Jena. It is in other towns as well, including (East) Berlin, Dresden, Cottbus, Schwerin, Weimar and Suhl," Manfred Hildebrandt, a member of the Jena group, told an interviewer in West Berlin.

Several of those expelled said they were told their activities "do not correspond to the interests of the East German Democratic Republic."

East German authorities began having trouble with pacifists two years ago after the government started praising Western peace movements for agitating against the placement of new American nuclear missiles in Europe.

The East German pacifists launched their own movement, symbolized by a badge bearing the slogan "Swords Into Plowshares."

The independent movement and slogan outraged Communist party officials, who were pushing the official line that peace should be achieved by limiting NATO armament.

They contended a well-armed East bloc was needed to counter "war preparations by the most aggressive circles of NATO, especially the United States."

East German authorities banned the badges and harassed those who wore them, but the badges didn't disappear until Lutheran churches appealed to the pacifists to put them away "for the sake of peace."

The country's Lutheran churches have sometimes spoken out on behalf of young pacifists who have gotten into trouble with authorities.

"I hope our peace group will continue to exist in Jena. We pray it may even grow. But the pacifists there are in danger," said Dorothea Rost, a member of the Jena group expelled to West Berlin.

Miss Rost said East German authorities acted "to remove a cell of the peace movement that had been growing. But not everybody left. I can only hope that those still there are safe."

East German newspapers reported the jailing of at least 14 pacifist youths in Jena since late last year. Some of those jailed were among those who were eventually expelled.

Their offenses included displaying the flag of the outlawed Polish union Solidarity, staging a silent Christmas Eve prayer for peace on Jena's market

Government may have misread strength of Peru's guerrillas

By FENTON WHEELER
Associated Press Writer

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Fernando Belaunde Terry's government, including the armed forces, appears to have badly misread the political and military strength of Peru's leftist guerrilla movement.

The result has been the embarrassment of having to decree a 60-day national emergency that suspends the civil rights restored by Belaunde when he returned to office in 1980 and ended 12 years of military dictatorship.

The timing of the emergency, with the nation in economic recession and struggling against floods, is expected to hurt Belaunde's popularity and his image as one of Latin America's leading democrats.

Belaunde declared the emergency late Monday following a weekend wave of terrorism bombings in the capital, blamed by police on the radical Shining Path guerrilla movement. The guerrillas also struck north of the capital on Monday for the first time, dynamiting power pylons and severing electricity to several towns.

The bombings raised major questions about Belaunde's assertion that his government was defeating the movement, which is based in the Andes Mountains and has a following among poor peasants. It has been fighting Belaunde's government since his five-year term began.

In his first term as president in the mid-1960s, Belaunde stamped out an anti-government guerrilla movement in six months, only to be deposed by the military in 1968 because of a dispute over oil concessions.

The guerrillas had sought to start what they called a Cuban-style revolution near Cuzco, still one of the nation's most depressed regions despite the tourist business generated by the Inca ruins at nearby Machu Picchu. The guerrillas were said to receive money from Cuba, but Belaunde's forces virtually eradicated them between July and December of 1968.

There are no signs at the moment that the president, in the midst of his worst crisis midway through his current term, will be deposed by the military again.

But non-Peruvian military analysts say the newly imposed emergency measures provide no assurance that the government will fare better in fighting the guerrillas than it has in the last three years.

The analysts acknowledge this is a pessimistic view, but one supported by a credibility gap caused by previous government claims of anti-guerrilla successes.

Earlier this year government estimates put the number of guerrillas at 500 to 700. Since then the government has claimed the arrest of more than 400 and the death of 600 others, most of them in the guerrilla stronghold of Ayacucho province where the army has been operating for four months.

The best guess now is that as many as 1,500 guerrillas are operating in Peru, many of them opening new fronts.

The elusive affordable house

NEW YORK (AP) — Anybody shopping the real estate market will quickly tell you that handsome, roomy houses aren't going cheap these days. But homes are, by some measures, more affordable than at any time in the last couple of years.

And just what does "affordable" mean? In essence, the statistics say that the typical family in this country is in a better position to buy the typical house than at any time since late 1960.

The National Association of Realtors has come up with what it calls the "housing affordability index," and calculated it back to 1977. At its lowest level, in May of 1982, this index stood at 65.2. As of March of this year, it was up to 81.8. The higher the number, the more "affordable" housing is.

To put these abstract numbers into dollars-and-cents terms, assume that your income is at the exact middle — the median — of the national scale, and that you wish to buy a home priced at the median of all houses on the market.

The median income as of February this year was about $24,000 — some $6,000 short of what was considered necessary to support the purchase of a median-priced existing home ($68,000).

What's most important about those figures, real estate experts contend, is that the gap is narrowing. With the right combination of economic recovery, falling mortgage interest rates and stable prices, they say, it could continue to shrink in the months ahead.

Whether that benign blend of events will actually occur remains a big question, of course. Along with countless potential home buyers, lots of people who make their livings as home builders, sellers and lenders are anxiously awaiting the answer.

Mortgage rates, perhaps the key variable in the equation, now stand at roughly 13 percent, down about five percentage points from their peak levels during the worst of the interest-rate crunch. Though that has been enough of a drop to encourage a pickup in home sales lately, analyst Nicholas Tetrick at Standard & Poor's Corp. maintains that it is not sufficient to sustain a lasting recovery.

"Never before has the industry attempted a recovery with mortgage rates at this level," he said in a recent report. "In fact, much lower levels of mortgage rates have CREATED housing recessions in the past."

On the other hand, New York's Morgan Guaranty Trust argues, "the past several years have conditioned many prospective buyers to high housing costs. Few, if any, expect a return any time soon to the comparatively low housing costs of the 1960s and 1970s."

The bank concludes, "Changing attitudes about housing costs, improved affordability for many, and pent-up demand argue for a miniboom in housing production for some time to come."

Court says widow liable for husband's debts

WASHINGTON (AP) — When alleged bookmaker Philip S. Bosco died in 1974, the government said he owed nearly $1 million in unpaid betting taxes.

In hopes of getting some of the money, the Internal Revenue Service sought to force Bosco's widow to sell their home in Dallas and turn over part of the proceeds.

The Supreme Court has now ruled that the IRS has the right to force the sale of the home — even though Bosco's former wife did not owe any money to the government herself.

In a 5-4 ruling Tuesday, the court said the government may force the sale of a married couple's home to pay a tax debt owed by one of the spouses.

Justice William J. Brennan said for the majority that the government has a "paramount interest in prompt and certain collection of delinquent taxes."

But Brennan said it was up to a federal trial judge to determine whether the government's right to repayment of the $927,284 debt should be enforced by sale of the home owned by Lucille Mitzy Bosco Rodgers, who has remarried.

It might be too great a hardship for Mrs. Rodgers to give up her home and keep only part of the sale price, he suggested.

"We are not blind to the fact that in practical terms financial compensation may not always be a completely adequate substitute for a roof over one's head," he said.

Federal district court judges may weigh a number of factors in deciding whether to grant a government request to force the sale of the home, Brennan continued.

In a dissenting opinion, Justice Harry A. Blackmun said the government should not have the power to force the sale of a couple's home unless the debtor himself has such power.

He was joined by Justices William H. Rehnquist, John Paul Stevens and Sandra Day O'Connor.

In other actions Tuesday,

the court:

—Cleared the way for imprisonment this month of four former members of Congress who were convicted in the FBI's Abscam investigation. The ex-Congressmen, all Democrats, are Raymond Lederer and Michael Myers of Pennsylvania, John Murphy of New York and Frank Thompson of New Jersey.

—Said federal labor officials may not automatically block employers from filing state lawsuits to retaliate against protesting workers. The court ordered further hearings in a Phoenix, Ariz., restaurant workers dispute.

—Agreed to consider whether it should reinstate the conviction of a Mississippi man who was sentenced to 20 years in prison for manslaughter in a 1977 automobile collision. A lower court ruled the conviction amounted to double jeopardy because the defendant had been convicted earlier of reckless driving.

Government can prosecute woman

HOUSTON (AP) — The government can not be held to an agreement not to try a woman charged with planting bombs at a refinery, a federal appeals court panel has ruled, saying the immunity was granted under duress.

Three judges of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals threw out Jill Renee Bird's appeal of her indictment Tuesday.

Ms. Bird had asked the court to throw out the 12-count indictment because of a promise extended to her common-law husband, John M. McBride.

Letters received last September warned officials of the Gulf Oil Chemical Co. that bombs in the Cedar Bayou plant 30 miles east of Houston would be detonated if extortionists were not paid $15 million.

Authorities found five bombs in the plant, one of which exploded harmlessly. The others were disarmed. Ms. Bird, McBride and two other men, face a June 13 trial on the 12 counts. A fourth defendant, Timothy Justice, pleaded guilty to two counts and is expected to testify against the others.

Ms. Bird's attorney, Charles Szekely of Houston, filed a motion to dismiss charges against his client.

His motion said McBride agreed to reveal where more bombs were located if Ms. Bird was given immunity from prosecution.

Murphey wows Pampa audience

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Lifestyles Editor

Most of Pampa missed a great concert Sunday night. Although M. K. Brown Auditorium wasn't close to being full, country singer Michael Murphey performed like he was in Carnegie Hall. The curtains finally fell after three standing ovations, which doesn't include a fourth time the audience stood to express their pleasure during the song "Panhandlers."

Murphey picked this year's top new male vocalist by the Country Music Association, opened with one of his most recent hits, "Still Taking Chances."

He explained that he likes to sing about deserts, drunks, Indians and mountains, "not sugary love songs." But love songs, like "Still Taking Chances" and "What's Forever For" are what have catapulted him from relative obscurity in recent years to the CMA's "top new male vocalist for 1983."

Receiving the award as a new artist, is not as contradictory as it seems, Murphy said. The award was given not necessarily to the newest male vocalist, but to the one they felt had had the most influence in that year the award is given.

Murphey said many of the C & W people believed he was a 'pop' artist, but recently country music has widened its 'spectrum' to include a lot of pop. "So you have a range from George Strait to Kenny Rogers," he said. "I've always felt 'Wildfire' was a western song."

"In fact you can't beat country western radio to get the broadest spectrum of music," he said.

Although Murphy usually writes his own songs, "What's Forever For" was a song he had gotten from another writer "who said what I felt, but had never been able to say." He sang the song at his parent's 40th wedding anniversary. "It was the first time I've seen my dad cry since his daddy died," he remembered.

Now he's taking chances on another love song just recently released, "Love Affairs."

Murphey has consistently produced singles and albums for the past 11 years. His more successful songs, particularly his 1975 release "Wildfire," include "Cherokee Fiddle" and "Geronimo's Cadillac," all songs showing an Indian influence. "There's a lot we can learn from the Indians — brotherhood and brotherly love," he told his audience.

Backed by the Rio Grande Band of Taos, N.M., Murphey played many of his old favorites, many depicting western and Indian life, such as "Two Step," "First Taste of Freedom," "Take It Like a Man," "Two Step," "Lost River" and "Medicine Man." Unexpectedly, Murphey soloed a funny ditty he had written, "Panhandler." Some verses that seemed to really hit the audience were "Old Panhandlers never die; they just kick up a little more dust," and "Old Panhandlers' cars never die, they just sit in the front yard and turn to dust," and one about Old Panhandlers never being able to leave, they have to come back to the dust.

He explained the song "Cherokee Fiddle" which reached its top popularity as part of the "Urban Cowboy" score, was dedicated to his five-year-old son, Ryan. Murphey wrote the song after meeting an old Indian fiddler who met a train he and his son were riding on while in Colorado once.

The last song of the evening was to be "Wildfire," a crossover song that was a favorite for both country and pop audiences. However, at the audience's insistence the group continued with a sing-along version of "Geronimo's Cadillac."

At the conclusion of "Geronimo," as the audience again stood, clapping, Murphey told a little of the Charles Goodnight history, then dedicated his final song of the evening, "The Goodnight - Loving Trail" to a Pampa woman, Nina Underwood, a full-blood Caddo Indian, mother of Mickey Guy, Murphey's production manager.

Even as a boy, Murphey was composing and performing songs. Born in Dallas in 1945, he grew up playing country and folk songs on the guitar. He studied forensics at North Texas State University in Denton, later moving to Los Angeles to further his poetry skills at UCLA. He has studied literature back to the days of ancient Greece and Rome, and modern day writers as well, but his main interest was in the troubadour tradition of the Middle Ages.

Diana Hart debuts first original song

Excited and happy from her performance, Diana Hart drummed her fingernails on the dressing room table as she talked about her singing career.

She was pleased with the Pampa audience's reaction to "I'll Be There," the first time she has been the original singer of an original song on stage. She got to do it her way, and the audience loved it.

"I'll Be There" was written by Billy Shelton of Borger. Hart performed the song, backed by the Borger group, The Silverado Band. Hart says she may use the song as the flip side of a single she's planning to make in the near future.

Hart's going to need her seemingly boundless energy in the next few weeks, with the numerous concert dates she has planned. Locally, she's scheduled to appear with Sylvia, June 11, in Borger.

Sylvia's ability with crowds has influenced Hart, she says. Barbara Mandrell is another country singer who Hart believes works well with audiences. Hart wants to be able to relate to her audience, to make them feel apart of what she is doing. This is one goal she's working on.

Musical influences have come from Tanya Tucker and Emmy Lou Harris. "I really like to do their music," she says.

Before launching her current professional singing career, Hart spent a year as a Dallas Cowboys cheerleader. Prior to that she was a member of the cast at Six Flags Over Texas Crazy Horse Saloon, putting on 10 shows per day. She also toured with a local pop group while a high school student in Irving.

It was during her Crazy Horse Saloon days that she began to realize her singing interests were geared toward country music.

"I just love the atmosphere of country," she explained.

Diana Hart gestures as she discusses her Sunday night concert here as she rests in the dressing room afterwards.

Have a recipe party and we'll print it

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Lifestyles Editor

We at the News office discovered an idea for showers, parties, etc., that was so fun we'd like to share it with everyone else. For lack of a better name, we called it a "Recipe Card Party," but it can be modified to meet any particular theme.

Since one of our staff members was getting married and moving away to Rhode Island, we thought it would be nice to have a covered dish luncheon for her. We all prepared our favorite dish and wrote the recipe on recipe cards bought for the occasion. Just before the luncheon, we put all the cards in a recipe card holder, along with some extra blank ones, presenting them to the guest of honor.

Even if no one you know is celebrating a special occasion, there's no reason not to have a party like this anyway. You could make it just a recipe exchange party or limit the recipes to one theme like salads, casseroles, hors d'oeuvres, original recipes or whatever suits you.

If you hold such a party, please let us know. Type up all the recipes (or run them off on the copy machine), take a black and white picture of everyone eating or having fun, plus write a little something about the who, what, when, where and why of the occasion.

Bring them to me at the Pampa News office, 403 W. Atchison. Then, as soon as I get enough space, I'll write your party up in the paper, either on the Wednesday food page or Sunday Lifestyle section, including as many of the recipes as possible. Recipes not used, will be kept for use later.

Here are some of the recipes submitted by Pampa News staff members are our Recipe Card Party:

This one was a real hit — an encore from the Christmas party last year.

KATHY GANN'S POTATO BROCCOLI CHEESE BAKE

- 2 T. butter
- 2 T. flour
- 2 c. milk
- 1 (3 oz.) cream cheese, cubed
- 1/2 c. shredded Swiss cheese
- 1 t. salt
- 1/4 t. nutmeg
- 1/4 t. pepper
- 1 (16 oz.) frozen hash brown potatoes, thawed
- 1 (16 oz.) frozen chopped broccoli

Melt butter in heavy saucepan over low heat; add flour and cook one minute, stirring constantly. Gradually add milk, cooking over medium heat until thick and bubbly. Add cream cheese, Swiss cheese, salt, nutmeg and pepper. Cook until cheese melts.

Add potatoes and stir well. Spoon half of potato mixture into a lightly greased nine-inch square baking dish. Spread broccoli evenly over potatoes, add remaining potato mixture over broccoli. Cover and bake at 350 degrees for 35 minutes.

The following recipe is perfect for serving with crackers as an easy, nutritious spread. Kayla Richardson made it for our party, but she credits the original recipe to Vonda Rains.

CHEESE BALL (WITH TUNA)

- 1 c. chopped pecans
- 2 pkgs. (8 oz.) cream cheese, softened
- 1 sm. can crushed pineapple, drained
- 1 T. minced onion
- 2 T. seasoned salt
- 2 T. chopped green pepper
- 1 t. chopped pimento

Mix and shape into a ball or log and roll in one cup of the chopped nuts.

Kayla says she's never followed the recipe since she doesn't use seasoned salt or measure the green pepper and onion. Plus she adds a can of tuna, drained, if she thinks a "meat" dish is called for.

Our publisher, Louise Fletcher, brought her recipe for Texas Hash which closely resembles some Spanish rice recipes. Louise likes to make this dish really spicy, but she toned it down some for us.

TEXAS HASH

- 1 lb. ground beef
- 3 large onions, chipped
- 1 large green pepper
- 1/4 c. chopped celery
- 1 can tomatoes

Add orange for tang

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

Citrus blends well with many other ingredients for desserts and main dishes.

Cocoa peanut butter squares, for example, have an added tang with the use of pureed orange, which includes the peel.

Another interesting combination that takes the hohum out of a sandwich filling is the use of grated orange peel, orange pieces and dates with cream cheese. This certainly will make a brown bagger sit up and take notice. This combination goes well on English muffins or toasted bagels, as well as on your favorite bread.

bowl, cream together butter, peanut butter and sugars. Add eggs; beat well. Stir in pureed orange. Sift together flour, cocoa, baking soda and salt; stir into creamed mixture. Spread batter into greased 13-by-9-by-2-inch baking pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Remove from oven; spread with Orange Glaze* while still warm. Cool in pan on wire rack. Cut into 24 pieces. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 2 dozen bar cookies.

- Orange Glaze:
- 1 cup confectioners' sugar
 - 2 tablespoons milk
 - 1 tablespoon butter or

Food

ORANGE COCOA PEANUT BUTTER SQUARES

- 1 small orange, unpeeled
- 1/2 cup butter or margarine
- 1/2 cup chunky-style peanut butter
- 1 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
- 2 eggs, slightly beaten
- 2 cups flour
- 1/3 cup cocoa
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- Orange glaze

Cut orange into large chunks. In electric blender, puree orange until smooth (about 1/2 cup). In large

- margarine, softened
 - 1 teaspoon fresh grated orange peel
- In small bowl, combine all ingredients.

ORANGE-CREAM SANDWICH

- 1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, softened
- 1/4 cup chopped dates
- Grated peel of

- 1/2 fresh orange
 - 1 orange, peeled, cut in bite-size pieces, well drained
 - 8 slices whole-
- In small bowl, combine

- 1/4 c. raw long grain rice
- 1 t. Worcestershire sauce
- 2 t. chili powder
- 1 t. salt
- 1 t. black pepper

Preheat oven at 350 degrees. In large skillet, lightly brown meat, drain most grease. Stir in raw vegetables, cook until onions are tender. Stir in remaining ingredients, pour mixture into ungreased 2-quart casserole dish, cover and bake one hour. Feeds 4 to 6.

Louise adds that she usually freezes half of what she makes and occasionally she grates longhorn cheese on the top after she takes it from the oven.

Sherri Drivenski from the advertising department brought this cool, refreshing Jello Salad

JELLO SALAD

- 1 pkg. (6 oz.) gelatin, (any fruit flavor)
- 1 can pie filling, (same flavor as gelatin)
- 1 can Eagle Brand milk
- 1 lg. container frozen whipped topping
- 1 small can crushed pineapple (pecans and flaked coconut, optional)

Combine all ingredients and chill.

Bina Shaw, our copy puller, shared her recipe for a great banana oatmeal cake.

BANANA OATMEAL CAKE

- 1/2 c. shortening
- 1 1/2 c. flour
- 1 1/2 c. sugar
- 1/4 t. soda
- 2 ripe bananas
- 1 t. vanilla
- 1/4 t. nutmeg
- 1/2 t. cinnamon
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 t. salt
- 1 c. quick oatmeal

Let oatmeal soak in 1 1/2 cup hot water for 20 minutes. Mix shortening, sugar, eggs. Add flour, soda and spices. Mix and add vanilla, oats, and mashed bananas. Bake in 350 degree oven for 35 minutes or until toothpick comes out clean.

Gus Shaver brought an easy potatoes au gratin recipe, and added her recipe for chicken and dumplings. Both are easy to make with ingredients most anyone has on hand. The chicken and dumplings recipe can be made while camping out since all the ingredients are non-perishable and can be carried in a knapsack.

GUS'S EASY POTATOES AU GRATIN

- 2 potatoes, peeled and sliced in 1/4 inch slices
- 1/2 onion, sliced into 1/4 inch rings
- 6 — 1/4-inch slices processed American cheese

Layer in order listed in small casserole in at least two layers. Cover and bake at 350 degrees for 45 minutes. (Microwave on High 30 minutes, turn twice). Freezes well. To serve a crowd, multiply as necessary, and add five minutes cooking time per potatoe.

EASY CHICKEN & DUMPLINGS

- 1 pkg. instant chicken gravy mix and water as directed on package
- 1 t. or 1 cube chicken bouillon
- 1 c. water
- 1 c. biscuit mix and water to form THICK dough
- 1 can chicken meat

Combine water for gravy plus an additional cup, bouillon and gravy mix in sauce pan. Bring to boil. Drop dough by teaspoonful into boiling gravy. Cook 3-4 at a time until fluffy. Remove to plate in oven to keep warm. When dough is all cooked, add canned chicken. Warm through, pour mixture over dumplings.

Here's an easy recipe brought by Conne Hood for an summer afternoon, or after school snack.

BETTY'S SORRY BARS

- 2 c. brown sugar
- 2 c. biscuit mix

- 3 eggs
- 2 t. vanilla
- 1 c. chopped nuts

Just mix and pour into a greased 8 x 13 inch pan. Bake in a 350 degree oven for 20 minutes.

Beverly Downs shared her Watergate Salad recipe, named so because the recipe was first published during the Watergate hearings in the '70s.

WATERGATE SALAD

- 1 (3 oz.) pkg. pistachio instant pudding
- 1 (20 oz.) can crushed pineapple
- 1 (9 oz.) carton whipped topping
- 8 oz. pkg. mini-marshmallows
- 1 (2 1/2 oz.) pkg. chopped pecans

Slightly drain pineapple, put in large bowl. Add instant pudding, whipped topping and nuts. Mix with marshmallows. Chill at least one hour before serving.

Jean Tierney, wife of managing editor Slim Randles, made a wonderful tapioca pudding she named after the Unitarian-Universalists church. The recipe was a favorite at the church's covered dish suppers, she says. The U-U's were practical minded about such suppers. Members brought their own plate and silverware, as well as food to the events.

U-U TAPIOCA PUDDING

- 6 T. quick tapioca
- 4 c. milk
- 2 egg yolks
- 2 egg whites, beaten until foamy
- 10 T. sugar or (or less, to taste)
- pinch of salt
- dash of nutmeg
- mandarin orange segments

Mix tapioca, salt, six teaspoons sugar, milk, egg yolks. Let mixture sit for five minutes. Gently beat four teaspoons of sugar into egg whites until they peak.

Cook tapioca mix, stirring, until it boils. Gently add to egg meringue, stirring gently to blend. Stir in nutmeg or vanilla. Cool. Add orange pieces. Cool. Stir once, gently, after 20 minutes. Makes 5 to 6 cups. Jean says the sugar can be reduced greatly for diabetics. She reminds cooks that all mixing, stirring, except while beating the egg whites, must be gentle in order to achieve a fluffy tapioca pudding.

Rose Hughes who works in the paper's camera room gave us her recipe for a popular supper salad.

TACO SALAD

- 1 can (15 oz.) ranch-style beans
- 1/2 c. Catalina salad dressing
- 1/2 head lettuce
- 3 or 4 green onions
- 1 large tomato
- tortilla chips, broken up
- longhorn cheese

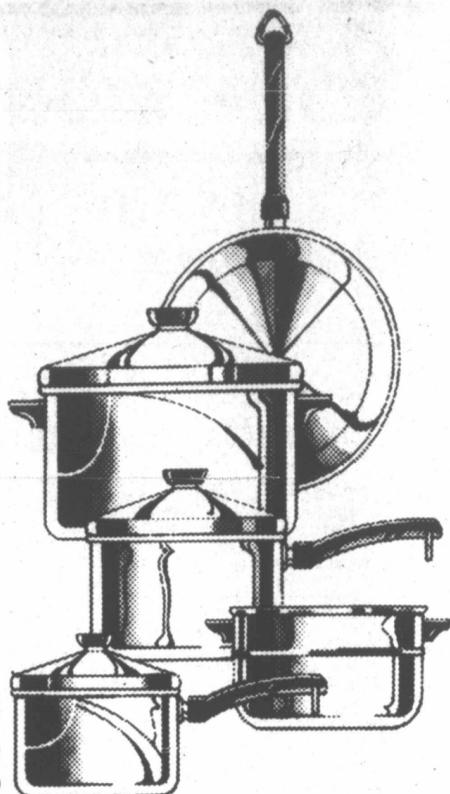

Cut up lettuce, onions. Grate cheese. Add beans and salad dressing, mix well. Add tomatoes and chips, toss.

Sharon Parker, wife of our city editor, couldn't attend the party, but she sent the recipe for her famous banana nut bread with Fred.

SHARON'S BANANA NUT BREAD

- 1 c. brown sugar, firmly packed
- 1/2 c. butter or margarine
- 2 eggs
- 1 1/2 c. mashed banana (3 or 4)
- 1 T. lemon juice
- 2 c. sifted flour
- 3 t. baking powder
- 1/2 t. salt
- 1 c. chopped nuts

Cream sugar with butter or margarine. Add eggs, one at a time, beating hard after each addition. Stir in bananas and lemon juice. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Add and mix quickly. Stir in nuts. Pour in greased 9 x 5 x 3 inch loaf pan. Bake one hour at 350 degrees or until done when tested.

LISA PATMAN

"Loose Marbles" column begins here Thursday

Thursday, Pampa News Lifestyles section will feature a new humor column, "Loose Marbles" written by Lisa Patman of McLean.

Patman says she likes to describe her column as a cross between Erma Bombeck and Louis Grizzard, a humor columnist out of Atlanta, Ga. You might describe her column as zany and not a little bizarre, but you'll have to admit after reading the first one, that it's funny.

"There's so many frightening, even horrifying things in the news, that I believe it's fun to have a bright spot every day," Patman says. "That's what I want to do, bring in a bright spot.

Her crazy sense of humor came from her childhood, she says. "I was tortured as a child. My older brother tortured it into me."

Patman says her family were all optimistic about life, always looking at things with a "quirky" sense of humor.

Patman has lived in McLean 10 years. She is married to Ed Patman, and they have two sons, Allen, 16, and Bob, 15. Her award-winning column, which ran in the McLean News five years, is now being syndicated.

Pampa News will carry "Loose Marbles" in the Lifestyles section each Thursday.

Nutritionist says making baby food at home is not a big job

By LAURIE LOEWENSTEIN

Bethlehem Globe-Times

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Some parents find it reassuring to know the pureed carrots 8-month-old Junior has just slung across the room were homemade and contained no fillers, salt or sugar.

They also have discovered homemade baby food is cheaper than that sold in jars — an important consideration if Junior is flinging the major part of his food around the room.

"Making your own food isn't that hard," observed Deborah Miller, South Mountain Family Practice Center's pediatric clinical nurse specialist, who teaches a course in pediatric nutrition. "It is just as convenient as buying it in jars and you can use food the rest of the family eats, with a few alterations."

"That means the baby can get used to the household's eating patterns," she added. "That's especially important in ethnic homes where they just don't cook foods like those found in the jars."

Besides paving the way for a smooth transition between pureed carrots and hearty adult meals, homemade baby food usually costs less than the commercial product, she noted. "Until about four years ago, there was a legitimate concern that the prepared foods had too much salt in them," Mrs. Miller said. "Since then, most of the baby food manufacturers have eliminated that problem."

However, many commercial baby foods contain fillers such as water, corn starch or sugar.

Water is often used in commercial baby foods to thin the product to a desired consistency. Mrs. Miller said parents making meals for baby at home had the choice of adding more nutritious thickeners, such as liquid left from steamed fruits or vegetables, milk or plain yogurt.

When baby is ready for a thicker consistency, parents may want to add egg yolks (hard boiled), cooked oatmeal, cooked rice or non-fat dry milk powder before pureeing. Sue Castle, author of the "Complete New Guide to Preparing Baby Foods," suggests:

Today, the American Academy of Pediatrics recommends babies first be given softened foods at about 4 to 6 months. By age 1, the child probably can eat a modified adult diet.

Baby food made in the home should be sanitary but does not need to be sterile.

Fruits, vegetables, meats and cereal must be softened before serving to small children. This can be done by steaming or poaching food and then pureeing it in a food grinder, processor, strainer, mill or blender.

Once prepared, pureed dishes should be served immediately to prevent bacteria growth, or stored in a freezer.

"We recommend two storage methods," Mrs. Miller said. "The food-cube method involves spooning pureed food into ice cube trays, freezing them and then popping the cubes out and into plastic freezer bags which have been labeled and dated."

Baby food may also be stored by the "pop" method. Spoonfuls of pureed food are dropped onto cookie sheets lined with aluminum foil and placed in a freezer. Once frozen, the mounds are placed in labeled, dated freezer bags.

To use prepared food, Mrs. Miller said, "Thaw in the refrigerator when possible or warm in poacher cups placed over boiling water."

"Warming food is optional," she said. "Room temperature or cold food will not harm the baby."

Weitz builds his own "Belker"

By Ellie Grossman

NEW YORK (NEA) — There's that scene in "Inherit the Wind" where Fredric March concedes, "I don't think about things I don't think about!"

Neither does Bruce Weitz. And Belker of "Hill Street Blues" doesn't like to talk off the top of his head. He thinks about what he says, about things he thinks about. He's careful. Guarded. Scrupulously polite. Apt, at times, to answer playfully (he's got quite a nice smile). Apt, at other times, to make you feel as if you came in in the middle of you're not sure what.

He's also mortified that he came an hour late this morning. "I really don't like to be late. It's almost a neurosis," he says. And if making little eye contact with a reporter is a measure of such things, he's a bit shy.

As to what he doesn't think about, the future is one thing and always has been. For instance, when he got his master of fine arts degree from Carnegie Tech in whatever year it was — he's 40 — he did it, he says, because, "I was interested in education at that time."

With an eye to...? He shrugs. "I've never seen myself doing anything specific," he says. "That way I try to preserve my sanity. One assumes that I accomplish that," he says, smiling. "I think one only has to realize the number of changes one can go through in the matter of an hour to say, why look ahead? However, one always has to keep goals in mind."

Making money was one prime aim because there wasn't much around early on, he says. His father ran a liquor store in Norwalk,

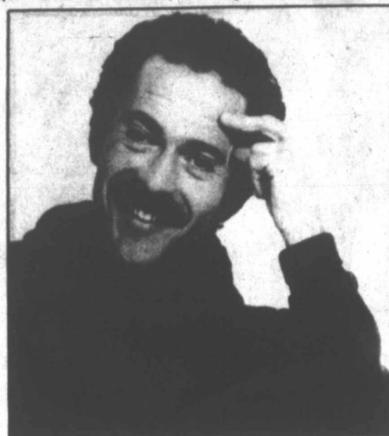

"The initial appeal was a great boost to the ego which I needed for the same reason we all need that," he says. "I think I also went into acting because I thought it was an easy way to make a living, which was silly looking back. Then I sort of got into the craft of it, trying to develop a technical skill."

Conn., and Weitz says he could only afford dreams of "getting on an airplane and going some place."

Somewhere along the way there came a stepfather and three stepbrothers for Weitz and his brother, which apparently did nothing for the money situation, and a move to Miami when Weitz was 11. There, he made All-American in high school football and baseball and happened on another goal, acting.

After years playing a variety of roles on stage and television, Bruce Weitz says he feels lucky to have gotten the "good, steady" job of portraying the ferocious, yet soft-centered Belker on "Hill Street Blues."

AFTER YEARS playing a variety of roles on stage and television, Bruce Weitz says he feels lucky to have gotten the "good, steady" job of portraying the ferocious, yet soft-centered Belker on "Hill Street Blues."

Dear Abby

Overheated husband gives wife the chills

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My problem is my husband. He has become obsessed with sex. He's started to bring home every girlie magazine he can find. He also buys books that show pictures of all the different positions to make love.

When we were married 10 years ago, he was a normal, decent man. Then about a year ago he started to get sex crazy. Thank God I can't have any children.

Last Sunday he insisted on making love to me four times. By nightfall I was physically and mentally abused. The next morning he woke me up at 4 a.m. wanting sex again. I told him I just couldn't — I was still exhausted from Sunday. He got rough and tried to force me against my will, so I jumped out of bed and ran to the guest room and locked the door. He screamed at me, pounded on the door and called me "frigid b—" I thought he was going to break the door down. He finally gave up, and I stayed in that room until after he left for work.

Abby, I want out of this marriage. I am afraid to stay with this sex maniac. We just moved here and I don't know anybody. Please help me.

DESPERATE IN DENVER

DEAR DESPERATE: Call "Gateway" or "Safe-house." Each provides temporary shelter for battered women. In the meantime you should absolutely not live with him. His sudden preoccupation with sex and his abusive behavior could be symptoms of a mental disorder. Run for your life! But first leave a note telling him that you refuse to live with him unless he is examined by a psychiatrist and treated for whatever caused the sudden change in his behavior.

Women in other areas with similar problems should call their rape-crisis hotline for emergency help.

DEAR ABBY: This is probably the stupidest hang-up you've ever heard about. We have a son, 13 months old. When he was born, we debated between two names, Daniel and Patrick. We decided on Daniel because my brother, whom I love dearly, is named Patrick and I didn't like "Big Pat" and "Little Pat."

So the problem? As Daniel grew older, he became the image of my brother Patrick, and now I regret not naming him Patrick. It is driving me crazy.

My husband says at this stage of the game we can't change the kid's name. Why can't we?

KICKING MYSELF IN BOSTON

DEAR KICKING: You can if you want to. If you want to change his name legally, you should consult a lawyer. Otherwise, you can just start calling "the kid" Patrick.

DEAR ABBY: I need a lawyer and I need one fast. How do I find one who won't charge me an arm and a leg?

TEMPUS FUGIT

DEAR TEMPUS: First ask your friends and associates for their recommendations.

For helpful, detailed information about a lawyer's credentials, consult the Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory. It's the "Who's Who" of lawyers and can be found at your public library.

Don't be shy about "shopping" for a lawyer. For routine legal work such as drawing up a will, closing a real estate deal or checking a lease or contract, a low-cost legal clinic may suit your needs, but for trusts, tax work, divorce or trial cases, consult a lawyer who specializes in that field.

Find out in advance how much you will be charged. Some lawyers expect a retainer fee paid in advance, others charge by the hour, and in personal injury suits, a lawyer may take the case for a percentage of your recovery.

The local bar association referral service may be able to help you, but it only lists lawyers — it doesn't evaluate them.

Eat your vitamin C

By Gaynor Maddox

Many benefits are attributed to vitamin C. Today renewed emphasis has been placed on its importance. It is found largely in fruits and vegetables. Generally speaking oranges are considered the prime source, along with other citrus fruits including grapefruit, tangerines, lemons and limes.

California is now sending to market its navel oranges, "the eating type." Navel oranges are free from pits and their skins are much heavier. They are used mainly as a dessert fruit, their pulp being more easily handled than that of the juice orange.

There are, however, people who cannot tolerate citrus fruit. For them, there are several other answers. These may approximate but never quite equal the vitamin C a person gets from citrus sources such as oranges.

Consider another source of vitamin C — strawberries. They are now sprouting out all over the country, particularly in California.

I began my love of strawberries at a Protestant church outing in a small town near Lake Erie, under the leafy elms. The ladies' auxiliary gave a strawberry supper. There, for the first time, I met strawberry shortcake, the real strawberry shortcake, the all-American strawberry shortcake! It consisted of a baking powder biscuit made somewhat short by the addition of a little bit more butter than normal. The warm biscuit was split and gently buttered then mashed fresh strawberries were poured over the bottom half. The biscuit was then closed and more strawberries poured over the top. With this, as the ladies of the auxiliary demonstrated, was served heavy cream from an old-fashioned white pitcher.

Note: The vitamin C content in strawberries is enormous. But strawberries vary in value.

Computer hardware reaches Soviets through Europe underground

EDITOR'S NOTE — The fastest computer, not the biggest gun, may win the wars of the future. Because of this, the U.S. government has stepped up efforts to keep Western high technology out of Soviet hands. But the campaign is difficult and controversial. This is the first of a three-part series.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — In today's dangerous world of microchip-packed missiles and computerized spy satellites, Werner Bruchhausen is a new kind of global power broker.

Over several years, U.S. authorities say, the friendly young West German importer funneled $10 million worth of illegally exported U.S. high technology to the Soviet bloc — enough, theoretically, to equip an entire plant producing microelectronic brains for new generations of weapons.

Bruchhausen, who faces trade-law charges if he returns to the United States, protested in a telephone interview from his Bavarian villa that "volume-wise, what I've done is micky mouse."

Does that mean others are selling even greater amounts of restricted high-tech hardware to the Soviets?

"Quite definitely," he said. Bruchhausen is one middleman in what a U.S. Central Intelligence Agency report calls a "massive, well-planned and well-managed" effort by the Soviets to obtain Western high technology for their own arsenals and for military-support industries.

The U.S. government says Moscow uses legal and illegal means, including traditional espionage, systematic review of research literature and participation in Western scientific conferences.

One of the Soviets' most successful techniques: reliance on brokers who make seemingly legitimate purchases of advanced microelectronics.

This twisting high-tech trail leads from the research labs of California's "Silicon Valley," through Frankfurt's bustling jetport, to warehouses in Switzerland or other neutral countries, and on to the design shops of Moscow's defense establishment. For the Bruchhausens along the way, it is a lucrative trade.

"It is the most severe intelligence threat we face today," the FBI's intelligence chief, Edward J. O'Malley, said in a Washington interview.

The Reagan administration has mounted a counter-offensive.

It has bolstered enforcement of U.S. export regulations, which require licenses for export of specific high-tech items with possible military use or forbid their export altogether to potential adversaries.

The U.S. administration also has been pressuring European governments and has restrained the free flow of research information that is a hallmark of American science.

But this campaign could flare into a showdown with the American high-tech elite, who complain it stifles scientific creativity and commercial competitiveness, and who say the Soviet economy is unable to absorb the latest technology anyway. At the same time, the U.S. effort is causing friction with West European allies that depend on trade with the Soviets.

The secret commerce includes laser and materials technologies, precision machinery and radar gear. But the key is the microchip, building block of the computer age.

This tiny fleck of silicon, whose maze of electronic circuitry can perform as many as a million calculations a second, not only brings video war games to life, but will drive tomorrow's real wars as well. It has become the essential ingredient in guidance, detection and communication systems.

American defense officials are intent on keeping the latest high-tech items out of Soviet hands. But they say 150 Soviet weapons systems already incorporate elements of Western technology — including missile guidance systems, ground troops' night-vision devices, and submarines' sonar buoys.

"Sometimes we see them fielding equipment before we do, based on our design," Stephen Bryen, a deputy assistant defense secretary, said in Washington. "It takes away the edge we are trying to buy with our defense dollars."

The Soviets once relied on "reverse engineering" — trying to reproduce stolen microchips and other weapons components. But now their target is the sophisticated equipment that actually manufactures the microelectronics.

That kind of critical technology is what Bruchhausen and his U.S. accomplices, Anatoli T. Maluta and Sabina Tittle, were providing.

U.S. authorities say the trio operated in this way, typical of today's covert trade in high tech:

Using a dozen or so front companies in California and Europe, they bought U.S. items embargoed for export to the Soviet bloc, telling the manufacturers they were for use in the United States.

They then shipped the equipment to Bruchhausen firms in West Germany, evading U.S. export controls by labeling them "furnaces" or "electric meters." Once in Germany, the shipment would be trucked to Switzerland or Austria, and eventually flown out to Moscow or other East-bloc capitals.

Switzerland, Austria and other neutral countries are favored stopovers because they do not adhere to Western alliance restrictions on high-tech exports to the East.

The Bruchhausen network was uncovered in 1981 on the basis of a tip. The shipment of a $145,000 oxidizing machine, essential in the layering process that produces microchips, was intercepted en route in California.

Maluta and Miss Tittle have been imprisoned. Bruchhausen, a West German citizen, is safe in his homeland because violations of foreign export laws are not an extraditable offense here.

He says he no longer deals with the Soviets. Some U.S.

investigators are skeptical, but they have plenty of other dossiers to work on.

"There is a numberless list of guys doing this sort of thing," said Viktor Jacobson, U.S. Customs attache at the American Embassy in Bonn.

"There's really big money in this. Sometimes their profit is 200 or 300 percent. Their attitude is, 'Business is business.'"

"There may be 15 guys getting an order from the Russians for the same scanner," John Luksic, a Customs investigator, said in Washington. "But the first who can fill the order is the one who can sell it to the Russians or East bloc for top dollar."

Jacobson and Luksic are part of a 1½-year-old Customs Service program called Operation Exodus, in which 300 inspectors, investigators and others have been mobilized to stop the flow of embargoed high-tech goods to the East. The Customs teams are checking suspect shipments at U.S. air and seaports, and following up leads from abroad.

In its first 18 months, Customs officials said, Operation Exodus led to the seizure of 1,395 high-tech shipments valued at $79.6 million. These included not just goods known to be headed for the Soviet bloc, but also other high-tech items being exported without license.

The officials said 229 people were arrested, and 146 people convicted.

In addition, dozens of diplomats and other Soviets have been expelled from Western European countries in recent months, some of them alleged agents in search of high technology.

"We know we've slowed it down," Bryen said. "There have been a lot of seizures, some of it apparently stuff the Soviets need very badly — scanning equipment for aircraft and spacecraft, elaborate computer devices."

But one U.S. law-enforcement agent acknowledged that, despite the stepped-up surveillance, "we're missing tremendous amounts."

One reason these guardians of America's technological genius are nervous: The U.S. microelectronics industry may soon produce "supercomputers" that could catapult the U.S. military into a vast lead in electronic warfare — if they are not stolen first.

World leaders go home after meeting

By SALLY JACOBSEN

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — President Reagan Tuesday bade farewell to the leaders of the major industrialized democracies after winding up an economic summit that an aide said "went off like clockwork."

Reagan, host of this year's annual seven-nation meeting, talked briefly to his guests in the Williamsburg Inn before they left in separate helicopters en route for home.

Larry Speakes, the president's spokesman, said Reagan "really thinks it went great."

"The thing went off like clockwork. We just really feel good about it."

The leaders agreed Monday on a declaration that pledged them anew to reducing high interest rates and large budget deficits. Even so, the value of the dollar surged in early trading today, reaching an all-time high against the French franc.

The gain was attributed by West German traders to the lack of concrete measures from the leaders that might reduce high U.S. interest rates.

After seeing his guests off in separate ceremonies, Reagan was scheduled to talk to a small group of reporters and then return to the White House.

In a toast to his guests at a state dinner Monday night, he said the summit had been "as fruitful and as useful and enjoyable as we had all hoped."

He took brief note of the differences that were sometimes aired in the talks.

"Our individual perceptions about particular issues may sometimes differ; but gatherings such as this give us an opportunity to work together on a regular basis to address the problems we share."

Despite European concerns about U.S. interest rates and a dispute over the wording of a statement on arms policy, the summit — which began Saturday — broke up on a harmonious note with the president reading a declaration on economic recovery.

"We must all focus on achieving and maintaining low inflation, and reducing interest rates from their present too-high levels," the president recited.

"We renew our commitment to reduce structural budget deficits, in particular, by limiting the growth of expenditures," the declaration said.

Reagan was flanked by French President Francois Mitterrand, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani, and Gaston Thorn, head of the European Common Market. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher left early to return to campaign for the June 9 parliamentary elections.

Trudeau and other leaders praised Reagan for his handling of the summit.

From the outset, the president had insisted that the talks be more informal than those at previous summits. He didn't want a rigid agenda or a final statement prepared in advance of the meeting.

"He was taking a very big gamble that we could have an unstructured summit and still produce results," said Trudeau.

War with cheaters escalates in Las Vegas

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer
LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) —

Sophisticated surveillance cameras hidden in decorative bubbles or behind smoked glass sweep across plush casinos, picking up details as minute as the number of diamonds in a player's ring.

The unending war between the casino and the chiseler escalates daily, with a small army of surveillance people and elaborate electronic equipment constantly challenging the cheater.

The card sharks of the Wild West era would slip an ace up their sleeves. Today they count cards with the aid of toe-operated calculators concealed in their shoes.

The game is the same — the house vs. the cheater. But now the stakes are in the millions. James Avance, chairman of the Nevada Gaming Control Board, estimates cheaters take $20 million a year from the state's casinos.

Those same casinos spend millions more sorting out customer from cheater — and prosecuting the latter.

"If one man can invent it, another man can figure out how to beat it," Summa Corp. spokesman Fred Lewis says of the never-ending battle to design a cheat-proof slot machine.

With some slots paying jackpots of $1 million or more, the one-armed bandits have become an attractive lure to cheaters and a focal point for surveillance cameras which babysit them around the clock.

"We can tell when a winner began playing one of our progressive slots," says Dave Hull, chief of security at the Las Vegas Hilton. "If someone hits a big jackpot, we can tell when he started, how many coins he's put in. Five people look at a videotape of that jackpot win. We get a computer printout of everything that's gone into that machine. We check every mechanic who's worked on it."

The smart slot cheaters know the attention paid the big winners. They opt to hit quarter machines for less blatant jackpots.

"If they can empty the quarter slots and get repeated payoffs, they can get away with hundreds of dollars a day," says Ralph Wente, a former FBI agent who now heads security for Summa's six casinos.

Some slot cheaters tie a coin to a string, dipping it up and down in the coin slot like a yo-yo. Now there are devices that snip the string.

Some use drills so tiny they can be carried in a woman's purse. The drills quickly chew a tiny hole in the side of the machine, into which a wire is slipped to regulate the spinning reels. When manufacturers countered with hardened steel cases, the cheaters responded with diamond drill bits.

Manufacturers responded with an electrical jolt for the cheater manning the drill or a shrill alarm to alert security guards.

Guards keep a wary eye for clusters of three or four people around a machine — a tell-tale sign that "blockers" are being used to hide the illegal activities of a cheater.

The Gaming Board provides casino security departments with training films detailing cheating operations and how to spot them.

If a cheater is caught, Nevada law provides he can be detained by hotel security until Gaming Control officers and police arrive.

Wente is in charge of 250 security officers at the Summa properties while Hull heads a 109-member force at the sprawling 3,200-room Las Vegas Hilton.

On the second floor of the Hilton, surveillance specialists watch walls of television receivers. They can aim cameras to any corner of the casino, zeroing in on the action to detect the tiniest of spots on cards fanned out across the green felt.

At the card tables, dealers watch players. Floormen watch dealers. Pit bosses watch floormen. And the surveillance crews, in the "eye" above the casino, watch them all.

They watch for a cheater who might slip a dealer a "cold deck" — arranged in a certain order so the player would know the sequence of the cards.

Dealers have been known to work with cheaters, slipping such decks into the "shoe" from which cards are dealt.

"We had one case where we lost over $50,000 in half an hour because of a cold deck," Wente says. "If we can prove a dealer is involved, we'll prosecute him."

Dealers, floormen, pit bosses and surveillance crews pay strict attention to any markings on cards such as a tiny spot to identify a 10-card, a nick from a fingernail, a slight crease.

And they monitor the sequence of bets.

"If you have someone betting $2 and then they start betting $1,000, you know something may be wrong," says Wente.

"We pay strict attention to the control of the cards and dice from the time we get them from the company until they go on the table," says Wente. "They're not available to anyone except top trusted casino people."

Firefighters blood pressure monitored

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — Ask the chief what makes a firefighter keep chasing flames, and he'll tell you the job gets in your blood. Chief Ray Jacks wants to make sure his crew's blood doesn't boil.

Crew members lined up recently, rolled up their sleeves, stretched out their arms and watched while a registered nurse and an emergency medical technician measured their blood pressure.

Most of the 77 tested were fine, but Jacks said two had levels high enough to require bed rest or medical attention. Each week, the EMT checks others with slightly high or borderline blood pressure. Jacks said in a recent telephone interview. He said he hoped to establish a routine program of checking all firefighters.

Ship chandler can't stay away from sea

By PATTI MUCK
Port Arthur News

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — He's got the sea in his blue eyes and can't seem to stay away from it. Capt. Peter Vanherwaarden was a ship's captain at the age of 24.

"Just call me Captain Peter," he says. "Nobody can pronounce my last name — it's an old Dutch one."

For about 15 years, Capt. Peter rode the waves. He guided oil tankers, cargo ships and even a yacht.

"I got sick and tired of living out of a suitcase," he says. But he still returns to one ship or another every day of his life.

Capt. Peter is a ship chandler. In sea language, this means a retailer who brings supplies to a ship. The supplies can range from provisions to mechanical equipment. Unusual requests have been made to chandlers over the years, and Capt. Peter is no stranger to weird orders. "They ask me for anything!" he exclaims.

He heads the Sabine division of Houston's Superior Marine Supply; this branch just opened in February and is temporarily operating out of Capt. Peter's apartment.

Whenever a ship pulls into Port Arthur, Capt. Peter is there with his price list. He also brings a copy of the daily newspaper and five copies of "Today's Gulf Coast," which lists area restaurants and events.

"The modern sailor has changed," Capt. Peter says. "They're not going to run to the nearest whorehouse anymore. They like to go to restaurants, and they like to drink. That's part of the business."

This day, the "Lichtenstein" arrives from Ethiopia. It's manned by a Korean crew. Capt. Peter gets a daily list of all incoming ships from the Sabine Pilots, and he picks which one to visit.

"There, she's coming," he says with enthusiasm.

Capt. Peter is dressed for the occasion. He wears a gray corduroy suit, white turtleneck and boots. He's ready for a sales call.

He drives his little brown Fiat over the rough gravel and parks on the dock. A rat scampers by as Capt. Peter watches the ship pull in.

"Boy, is she dirty," he complains. He points out the green growth and barnacles encrusted on the ship's bottom. "Look at that beard," Capt. Peter shakes his head.

Because he was a sailor himself, Capt. Peter knows how to act when a new ship arrives. "I speak that guy's language and know what he needs," he says.

What worries him is the reputation that sailors get in Port Arthur. No one seems to realize that sailors here are an untapped boost to the local economy, he says.

"These guys spend money," he says. "They really are a part of our economy."

Just last week, Capt. Peter met a sailor who spent $1,000 here on a video game. But he's the exception rather than the rule. Most sailors don't know where to go once they dock.

"They always ask me, 'Where can I go shopping?'" he says. As a boost for his own business, Capt. Peter takes ship captains to the local malls when he has time, but he doesn't enjoy doing it.

"I hate it, but they're so grateful," he says. Some of the items most in demand, especially for foreign crews, are jeans and other articles of clothing that are much cheaper here than in Europe and Asia.

Capt. Peter is trying to work on some type of publication to inform foreign sailors of what's available in Port Arthur. He speaks Dutch, English, German, Spanish and French and wants to list events and other information in all five languages.

"I'm the only one who does this," he says. "The sailors should know where they can go to eat and where there's entertainment. They need to know what's going on. That's the best we can do."

Capt. Peter leaves the "Lichtenstein" without getting its business. A competitor from Houston, who happened to be Korean, won the ship's order. But Capt. Peter is not disheartened. He's done what he could.

"I'll probably get the next ship," he says.

One week later and 10 ships later, he gets an order from a Turkish ship, the "Merik." On board, Capt. Peter talks politics, religion, sex and sea living with Capt. Alper Tjinja. The two captains smoke cigarettes and drink Pilsen Birasi beer from Efes, Israel.

They talk about the responsibilities of a ship master.

"In the port, plenty problems," says the Turkish captain. "Coast Guard, Customs. If you're a master on board, it's too much. The stress," he says.

Capt. Peter talks about his bygone days as captain. "You're responsible for everybody and everything," he says.

"I found a way out. Now I have the best of both worlds. I can see the ship docking and wish I were aboard. But I can leave after my business and go home," he says.

Tjinja smiles and leans back in his chair.

"Ship is the first God after the master," he says quietly.

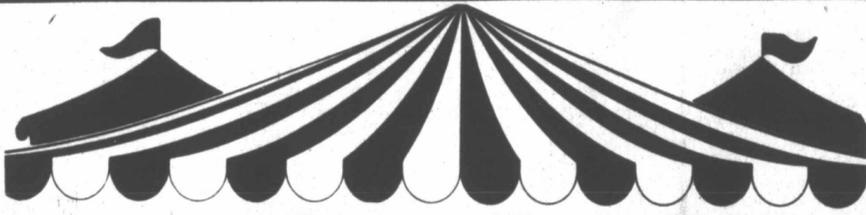

Vader imitator sued

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A man who says he has traveled the country for six years playing Darth Vader, the sinister Jedi knight from the "Star Wars" trilogy, has been sued in federal court by the film maker.

Lucasfilm Ltd. filed the action against Terry Kelly, who spent Saturday through Monday playing the part of the Dark Lord of Sith at an El Paso car dealership, said Roberta Cairney, associate counsel for the film maker.

Ms. Cairney said Kelly, 34, was served Saturday with a copy of the suit and a summons to a federal court in Denver.

"Now he's under the jurisdiction of the federal court in Denver," Ms. Cairney said Monday in a telephone interview.
