No signs of the plague this summer, but it's wise to protect pets

By CARNELL HUNNICUTT Staff Writer

The plague may never hit the Gray County area again, but veterinarians are urging pet owners to buy flea collars for their pets and keep them from roaming the country, just to be on the safe side.

After an outbreak of the bubonic plague last summer that killed prairie dogs at Ingersoll - Rand, west of Pampa, there were no reports of humans or domestic animals getting the disease, but it's wise to protect pets from fleas that carry the bacteria known as Yersinia petis, officials said.

The bacteria is carried only by fleas. The fleas find a warm blooded - animal such as a cat or dog, and infect the animal with the disease.

The owner coming in contact with the infected pet could be

Dr. Wil Beck, Gray County Health Officer, said the fleas carrying the bacteria can live days, weeks, and months under favorable conditions. But Gray County has severe weather conditions, so there is no need for alarm.

The last time the disease was spread person to person was in 1924 in Los Angeles.

cowboy's death

AMARILLO - The "wrongful death" $3 million lawsuit filed against several Panhandle cities, counties and police officers for the killing of Four 6s cowboy Jim Grandstaff has been set for a July 18 trial in federal court here.

By JEFF LANGLEY

Senior Writer

James Clarence Grandstaff, 31, was shot and killed by police Aug. 11, 1981 in front of his north camp home on the 6666 ranch east of Borger.

The lawsuit filed by Grandstaff's widow, Sharon, asks for at least $3 million in damages from the City of Borger, the City of Pampa, Hutchinson, Carson and Grav Counties, former and current Borger police officers Bailey Roberts, John Robert Alonzo, John Wayne Turner, and John Ray, former Hutchinson County Deputy Ricky Morris and "other unknown police officers.

The suit asks for $3 million in damages, plus punitive damages, plus attorney's fees and court costs.

Plaintiffs in the suit are the victim's widow, his first wife, Kay LaJune Grandstaff, as guardian for Grandstaff's daughter by that marriage. Jo Cheryl: Grandstaff's stepsons, Randy and Robert Gatlin, and the cowboy's father, J.H. "Joe" Grandstaff

The original petition on behalf of the family of Jim Grandstaff was filed in U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson's court Oct. 13, 1981 and asked for at least $2 million damages. An amended complaint, which raised the request for damages up to at least $3 million was filed March 26, 1982

A state grand jury investigating the police shooting about two weeks after Grandstaff died returned no indictments against police, though the jury said officers killed the cowboy.

Shortly before the jury returned with no indictments. Sharon Grandstaff hired Richard "Racehorse" Haynes to prosecute the civil suit, which was filed as a federal issue and claims violations of Grandstaff's civil rights.

Jim Grandstaff

The case was set for trial next month on Robinson's latest "docket call," according to the judge's secretary, Elaine Sprang

"It doesn't mean it will be reached. but it was set for trial," Sprang said.

She explained that Robinson's latest docket sheet set earlier this month schedules 27 cases, including the Grandstaff case. Sprang said depending on the disposition of the otner cases on the docket, the Grandstaff suit may or may not reach trial July 18. But she said lawyers must prepare for trial that day, and must have filed all pre - trial motions and witness lists. Sprang said the Grandstaff case is number 16 on the list of cases set for trial, based on the date the suits were originally filed. She said criminal trials have priorities over civil suits in the federal court. Sprang said just one criminal case, a charge of bank larceny, is on the current docket call.

Shortly after 4 a.m., Aug. 11, 1981, Borger police chased a fleeing suspect, Lonnie Cox, east from Borger on Texas 152. Police traded shots with Cox, who crashed his pickup onto the ranch

Anti-abortion groups lose in Supreme

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court has crushed a key right-to-life group strategy for weakening its 1973 decision legalizing abortion by ruling against several local laws restricting the procedure. The court's decisions, announced Wednesday, may leave right-to-life activists with only one direct avenue for changing the legal status of abortion: an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Anti-abortion groups had been seeking adoption of state and local laws limiting the availability of abortion in various ways. But the court, ruling on cases from Ohio, Virginia and Missouri, wiped out most of the restrictions Wednesday, saying they were unconstitutional and in conflict with the original 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision, which legalized abortion. "If we've learned something, it is let's go back into the federal arena to work on restricting the judges," said Peter Gemma, head of the National Pro-Life Political Action Committee. "We have to get tougher in Congress to put restrictions on the court. It's the only way to go.

even the court would have to obey. That becomes even more obvious today.' The regulations tossed out by the court in the three

Our ultimate goal is the right-to-life amendment that separate cases required: -At least a 24-hour waiting period between the time a woman signs an abortion consent form and performance of the medical procedure. -That all abortions for women more than three abortion clinics. The court's ruling on this means 20 states will have to change such laws

An hour after a tornado brushed downtown Pampa, the torrential rains and killer winds had subsided, leaving the city with two a.m. lightning flashes and pools of water caught by the camera of Bruce Lee Smith.

-That doctors tell women seeking abortions about alternatives, abortion risks and that the fetus is "a

While throwing out a rule that all pregnant, unwed girls under age 15 obtain a parent's consent or a judge's approval before having an abortion, a shifting majority of the court approved a somewhat less restrictive rule used in Missouri.

The Missouri law requires parental or judicial consent for abortions performed on minors as long as there is a determination in each case about the girl's "maturity" to decide on her own

Paul Brown of the Life Amendment Political Action Committee said his group and others will push for adoption of similar laws in all states.

The court also upheld a requirement that medical reports to be compiled for all abortions and two doctors be present for abortions performed on women in the last three months of their pregnancies.

Pro-choice groups — those who back the availability of abortion - were happy with the ruling.

"The court seems to have gone out of their way to say the decision in 1973 was correct; it was reasoned; it was well grounded in the Constitution and stop messing with said Nanette Falkenberg, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

In the 1973 decision, the court said a woman's decision to have an abortion during the first three months of her pregnancy must be left to her and her doctor. It said states may interfere in the abortion decision during the second trimester only to protect the woman's health and may take steps to protect fetal life only in the third

Americans spend an estimated $700 million each year for abortions, with more than a million legal abortions performed annually. About three-fourths of those are performed in the nation's 530 licensed abortion clinics.

"The court is saying that if you are going to do anything about this, you are going to have to change the Constitution. We're not going to let you chip away at them," Falkenberg added.

A vote on an anti-abortion amendment proposed by

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah may come up in the next two weeks in the Senate

"I don't have a lot of confidence that the Senate with its present make-up will pass this constitutional amendment, but I think it is important to have it debated," Hatch said.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., supporting Hatch's cause may have been helped by the court's decision "a little bit because it says it has to be a constitutional amendment or nothing. Clearly, the Supreme Court action sent activist groups on both sides back to the drawing boards to draft new strategies for 1983 and the 1984 elections. "The bottom line is that it only helps our political action. Right-to-life has been modestly successful legislatively, very successful politically, and terribly unsuccessful in the judicial arena," said Gemma. "Every time we lose one in the courts we even win better politically. It fires our troops, it helps educate the

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) - An Austin man has been arrested on allegations he tried to buy trade secrets concerning an international concession for nachos - fried tortilla chips topped with melted cheese and a slice of jalapeno pepper, police said

Investigators said Donald E. Nielson was charged with theft of trade secrets, a third-degree felony carrying a possible penalty of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

An undercover police officer and district attorney's investigators arrested Nielson, 29, as he made a $200 payment for information about the operations of Liberto pecialty Co., authorities said.

The company holds nacho concessions in all 50 states and in countries on three continents, officials said.

Liberto President Frank G. Liberto told the San Antonio Express he became aware "a couple of months ago" of attempts to purchase customer lists and information about product movement and the dollar amounts of orders.

"God only knows what he was going to do with that information," Liberto said.

Shuttle astronauts are ready

By HOWARD BENEDICT

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) -With America's first space-faring woman Sally Ride and four male astronauts "ready to go," the countdown began today for the seventh space shuttle mission, set to blast off Saturday.

The count started on schedule at 3 a.m. EDT, with the clock ticking down from 40 hours toward a liftoff at 7:33 a.m. Saturday. Twelve hours and 33 minutes of "hold" time are built into the count to to allow for contingencies.

Test conductor Robert Webster's "call to stations" summoned more than 50 engineers and technicians to consoles in the control center three miles from the launch pad. Scores more workers were on the pad, grooming the sleek spaceship Challenger for the six-day trip.

Their first tasks were to check the external fuel tank, verify the shuttle's computers and navigation systems and test the crew's drinking water.

Much of the pre-launch media attention has focused on Ms. Ride, the 32-year-old astrophysicist who is the first woman named to a U.S. space flight, although the trail was blazed by two Soviet female cosmonauts.

She and her four colleagues. commander Robert Crippen, pilot Rick Hauck and mission specialists John Fabian and Dr. Norman Thagard, flew to the launch area Wednesday afternoon in three T-38 jet planes after completing training at the astronaut base in Houston.

"We're really looking forward to it and we're ready to go," Crippen told reporters on their arrival.

The T-38s touched down on the same runway where the Challenger is to return to Earth on June 24 — the first shuttle set to land on the strip just five miles from the launch pad. We're looking forward to landing right back here again in about nine days," Hauck said

"Rick said that pretty well." Ms. Ride said. "I don't think there is anything I can add."

Ms. Ride's historic role has overshadowed other aspects of the flight, but it is one of the most ambitious yet in the fast-maturing shuttle program.

With Ms. Ride playing a key part, the astronauts are to deploy two commercial communications satellites - for Canada and Indonesia - practice rendezvous maneuvers with a third payload and conduct more than 20 scientific and technological experiments

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) - A dense, toxic people back in their homes. cloud of insecticide sent scores of injured and hysterical people to hospitals and chased 1,500 others away from their beds during the tense hours before it dissipated early today.

The 100-yard-wide cloud leaked from a campus greenhouse Wednesday night where biology students set off nine pesticide bombs.

During the next four hours at least 118 people were treated at two hospitals for hysteria or inhalation of the fumes. Hospital officials said eight people were admitted, including Nacogdoches'

'They suffered eye irritation, nausea, mild respiratory distress, burning skin, abdominal pain and headaches," said Medical Center Hospital assistant administrator Linda Lujan. "There was a tremendous amount of people coming in, but everyone was very cool and very organized at the hospital. Most of the staff was on the premises by the time the first victim arrived."

Jarvis Ammons, the city manager in this city of about 28,000 located approximately 175 miles southeast of Dallas, said the cloud had dissipated by early today and authorities began letting people back into their homes and dormitories at about 12:30 a.m. CDT.

"I think we got it fairly well under control now." Ammons said early today. "They have released the road blocks south of the university and are allowing before they could be treated.

"We are lucky we didn't have to evacuate the hospital, if it had got much farther south we would have had to," said Ammons, referring to Nacogdoches Memorial Hospital.

He said the city's emergency plan, which had been tested during chemical spills from train derailments in 1974 and 1978, had worked well and enabled authorities to act quickly.

"We were very fortunate it was so well organized. . There may have been a little over reaction, but I certainly would rather overreact in a situation like Mayor A.L. Mangaham was the most seriously injured. He was overcome by fumes as he watched firefighters hose down the greenhouse.

Chandler said of Mangham. Ms. Lujan said the mayor was in the hospital's she said. intensive care unit in serious but improving condition. She said seven students from a school band camp would be kept overnight for observation

James Molsby said 51 people, about half of them of the campus and residents living south of the children under 15 years of age, were treated and university from their homes as the gas, kept close released at his hospital for minor respiratory ailments and hysteria.

"They were basically crying and scared because of the danger of the stuff," said Molsby.

The pesticide contained the toxic chemical parathion, a deep brown to yellow liquid that turns into a gas in the air. It is highly toxic by skin contact, inhalation or swallowing.

Baker Pattillo, vice president of student affairs, said that about 325 of the 5,000 students enrolled in summer school at the university and 600 to 700 junior high school students were evacuated from dormitories on the south side of the campus.

About 500 other people were evacuated from a four-block area south of campus.

A biology student, Katie Fisher, who helped place the insecticide bombs in the greenhouse at about "He got a pretty good dose of it," Police Sgt. John 8:20 p.m., said it was the first time the chemical had ever been used there. Nicotine is usually used.

> The students set off nine canisters, according to directions on the insecticide, Ms. Fisher said.

"It appears that the greenhouse is not as well sealed as it should be and when we closed the door we saw that the smoke was beginning to come out," had to be stripped of their clothes and scrubbed she said. "We then started clearing people away and notified people immediately.'

"We are going to be working with some substantive proposals to see if there can't be some would no longer seek to impose the quarantine as an solution to this problem without a special session," White said "I think there are avenues that have not been addressed that may be productive, and I will endeavor to do that. White said one of the possibilities was some method of inspecting and vaccinating cattle herds for brucellosis in different manners.

There are many different ways you can go about testing and vaccinating herds to detect brucellosis. It may be that some herds can be treated differently from others," he said. "Those people who ship only for slaughter there are some alternate programs that might be available," White said. "I'm not saying it's going to happen but it needs to be explored. They might be able to qualify that would permit them to operate from Texas."

White said this category apparently includes South Texas rancher R.J. Nunley of Sabinal, who has a permanent injunction against the state to prevent inspection of his cattle.

White said he thought the greatest benefit of the delayed quarantine was "it will let all states be advised we are working for a solution and should relieve the pressure from other states."

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin issued a temporary restraining order against the USDA on May 31, saying it would cause "immediate and irreparable" damage to Texas' cattle industry

On June 7, more than 800 cattlemen gathered in Austin to demand that White call a special session try to avoid the quarantine. In another resolution, they asked the USDA to delay enforcement until the Legislature could act on the matter.

The quarantine was announced by the USDA when it became apparent Texas' lawmakers would finish their 140-day regular session and go home May 30 without passing a bill that would have brought the state's brucellosis controls in line with federal standards.

Brucellosis is a livestock disease that causes weight loss and miscarriages in cattle, but poses no health danger to consumers of the meat or pasteurized dairy products.

Under the quarantine proposed by USDA, breeding cattle could be shipped out of Texas only from "qualified herds" that have passed two tests for brucellosis. Steers, spayed heifers and other cattle for slaughter would not be affected.

At the May 31 federal court hearing, attorneys for USDA said the quarantine was needed because one Texas rancher, Nunley, a friend and business partner of former Gov. Dolph Briscoe, obtained a permanent injunction in 1979 that keeps federal inspectors from checking his herd for brucellosis. Nunley claimed the inspecitons were

District Fire Chief Jim Noah said that while there is no indication of arson. "There is always that possibility."

He said local investigators returned to the fire site Wednesday and hoped to "tie up the loose ends" and terminate the on-scene investigation after receiving test results later today or Friday.

'We had a very unusual and different fire situation, and the question remains: How can you lose lives in a two-story hotel with windows to the outside in every room?" McMillen asked. "It was obviously a very fast fire." Officials said the wing had no smoke detectors or sprinkler systems and the alarm in the main building did not sound because of corroded batteries.

Many of the survivors said they were awakened by honking car horns and breaking glass and fled through broken windows when the dense, noxious smoke cut off hallway escape routes.

Investigators believe the fire started in or near nine rolls of carpet that blocked a lower level exit, a violation of the city fire code. Fire officials late Tuesday issued a citation which carries a maximum $200 fine

McMillen identified the visitors to the fire site Wednesday as representatives of the National Fire Protection Association, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the International Conference of Building Officials.

He said they hope to determine, among other things, what steps might be taken to prevent a similar fire in other buildings.
Noah described the fire

PIK your crop and eat it too

You remember the PIK Program?

Sure you do. That's where the federal government decided there was too much grain in storage in the United States, so they would pay the farmer not to grow

There's been a new twist now.

You see, PIK stands for payment-in-kind, which means that instead of costing the government cash money, the program simply gives the farmer some of the excess grain already in storage. Meaning, I guess, that you can still get a certain number of bushels to the aere without farming the acre.

Well, darn it all, the government has run into a little snag now. It seems the program designed to cut down on the extra grain in storage has worked too well. So many farmers have taken advantage of the PIK Program that the government has run out of grain with which to pay them. So much for scoffers who say government programs don't work, eh?

So John Block and his buddies in Washington have a

Now, in order to ensure that the farmer receives enough grain to pay for his idle acres, the government will have to buy the grain he does raise and then give his own grain back to him for the grain he doesn't raise.

Let's run over it barefoot one more time.

The government doesn't have enough excess grain to give farmers to cut down on the excess grain in storage that it no longer has

Therefore, the government will buy grain from the farmer and then let him keep the grain. And the government is paying about 30 cents more per bushel for the farmer's grain than the going market price for it.

This could very well be a United States Government first: Taxpayers have now made it possible for the farmer to get paid for his cake and eat it, too.

This is actually quite simple to understand. All you have to do is recall Uncle Remus's story of the tar baby. In Br'er Rabbit's efforts to extricate himself from his first sticky punch, he became an integral thrashing part of the tar baby

The evolution of the PIK Program would make an interesting study. For years, taxpayers have been paying farmers not to grow things. Now, however, they are paying farmers to grow things so they can have the grain to pay them for not growing things.

Maybe it would be better to buy grain from the Soviet Union and give it to Texas wheat farmers so they wouldn't raise grain to sell to the Soviet Union because the Soviet Union is having a hard time growing grain this year, but the American taxpayers pay 30 cents per bushel more for grain than it's worth on the open market which would mean making friends with the Soviets, putting grain in the American farmer's granary, and making everybody happy, well paid, and with literally lots of dough.

Except for the American taxpayer, of course.

That's the only fly in this new PIK Program salve. The bread bakers will have to outbid the taxpayers to get enough grain to feed us, which means that we'll be paying twice for each loaf of bread we eat this year.

Oh well, there's always a sorehead hanging around someplace, isn't there?

Is feminism just 'women trying to be people?'

By PAUL GREENBERG

You've come a long way, baby.

SANIS PAB3

That was my first, ill - considered reaction to "Needlework Women's Work," the show about needlework - and much more - here in Pine Bluff, Arkansas. The much more was the emale experience in American society.

But it would be wrong to use that phrase about having come a long way.

First, because of that too familiar, condescending Baby stuck on at the end.

Second, because as an advertising slogan for a brand of cigarettes, the phrase has come to signify those things feminism ought not to aim for. It's as if this pitch for nicotine were saying: You too can now run a higher risk of lung cancer. You too can pollute your immediate environment or, with any luck, burn the house down in your sleep. So much of what passes for feminism seems to be saying: Women too can now be as driven, hard, and self - centered as men trying to live up to the macho image.

Women may have come a long way but, like men, still may have a long way to go. Like any other social movement, feminism surely doesn't move in a straight line - as if illustrating some too - sure nineteenth - century theory of progress. Instead, the struggle for women's rights has its ups and downs, retreats and advances, periods of expansion

This conference, with its stress on history and a specific skill (needlework), seemed in step with the general tenor of this decade's feminism - more mature, more introspective, more interested in the actual than theoretical. Susan Swan seemed to personify all that in her talk to the conference. She's an associate curator in charge of textiles at the Winterthur museum in Delaware; her presentation was quietly competent, unfussy, direct, and marked by a demure sense of humor - all signs of maturity, and of a period of

One guide to whether a social movement is expanding or consolidating is the grievance - humor index. That's the number of injustices sternly cited compared to the number of droll observations about injustice, or anything else.

According to my count, Mrs. Swan's ratio was roughly one injustice to six witticisms - a ratio that indicates sense of proportion. She spoke of the eighteenth - century needlework sampler as a sex symbol. She noted the historical value of "just awful" needlework, producing some amusing examples. And she cited one question from a young lady a couple of hundred years ago that might still bear asking: "Do you suppose that the mind of woman is the only thing

The interest in social history as something more than an immense collection of grievances from which to choose indicates a more mature approach among feminists. Women's Lib has cast off some of its more adolescent features and is developing not only a sense of humor but a sense of history. Those are formidable acquisitions in any social movement

Mary Ross Taylor, now working with Judy Chicago in presenting The Birth Project, demonstrated that feminists can have a sense of humor about things that still hurt. When that futile but inevitable question arose - "Is it Art?" she offered the conference three "warning signs" by which to recognize art: 1. I'ts displayed in an art museum. 2. It's done by a recognized artist. 3. It's recognized as art by the artists

Mary Ross Taylor was much better than The Birth Project, which was on display in one of the galleries. The Birth Project isn't so much art as polemic. Indeed, it has to depend for the most part on words rather than images to make its now deadeningly familiar points. Among its sappy lines is this self - advertisement near the beginning of the show: "Judy Chicago is an example of a new kind of artist one who is committed to the reintegration of art and society Instead of art being relegated to special buildings set off from the rest of life, she has a vision of art which is integral to the everyday life of people." That sentiment was framed and exhibited at the local art center, doubtless preparatory to being relegated to other museums

Another prize example of hokum is from the artist's own essay in the exhibit: "I thought to myself, if men gave birth, the crowning would be the subject of every painting in history, you know, just like war." Maybe the subject of birth got crowded out by the numberless pictures of Madonna and Child in Western art.

As for the images presented, they have some form and line, less color, and little texture. Like so many works that set out to seize attention, the principal effect of this one may be indifference. The Birth Project is not another Dinner Party, Judy Chicago's monumental tribute to womanhood. It is pretentious rather than whimsical, clinical rather than artistic. (One of the speakers later defended The Birth Project as art by citing one of Mary Ross Taylor's "warning signs," namely that Judy Chicago was an accredited artist.)

The speakers were several cuts above The Birth Project. Not until the final panel did there emerge the Brownmiller Factor - which I have named after Susan Brownmiller, the author of an egregious tract that was once all the literal rage, one thesis of which was that men are rapists at heart. panel discussion. To cite only a few examples: There is a male conspiracy against female artists. "Where there is money, there is men," to quote one of the panelists. Quilts by women are not considered art, but furniture by men is. (Susan Swan was fair enough to demur at this point, noting that nowhere is needlework or furniture, whether by men or women, considered to be among the fine arts.) There was also a decided resistance among the panelists to calling needlework's a "mere" craft, which may say something about American society as a whole and why craftsmanship becomes so rare. Although never stated so baidly, a couple of the panel's underlying themes could be summed up as (a) men are beastly, and (b) only women have it rough.

The panel discussion was not so much about art or any other idea as about the acquisition of power, of status and funds and recognition. The contrast between the individual speeches - with their information, proportion, and humor and the final, more ideological panel was much more dramatic than anything in The Birth Project. It demonstrated what happens when collective grievances come to dominate individual competencies.

There is one line from The Birth Project that rises above ideology, and might be kept in mind. It's a definition of feminism from Pamela Harper Nesbit. Feminism, she says, is "just women trying to be people." (Shouldn't we all be?) That sums up the Higher Feminism of this conference, and of this decade. It's most welcome.

To correct that problem, Ritchie announced Wednesday, the last day of the NCTA's annual convention, that $500,000 in seed money had been raised to form a Consortium for Cable Information.

underestimate the number of channels available as it is, he

Several prominent industry figures agreed during panel discussions Wednesday they couldn't predict the future of cable programming in any

"Movies, sports and news are the most interesting programming to viewers now," said Allen Gilliland, the president of Gill Cable in San Jose, Calif. "I don't think we should expect anything spectacular to happen (in developing new channels.)"

"What the consumer really wants is variety and choice, said Frank Biondi, the president of Home Box Office. "And I believe we're largely fulfilling that promise.

Cable does have some unique problems, however. that conventional broadcasters striving for a mass audience don't face. panelists agreed.

Advertising-supported cable channels have been slow to develop because specialized channels can't deliver the audience numbers that advertisers are used to. And both ad-supported and pay-TV channels often find the audience niche they're tring to carve out is not as large as they thought.

Referring to ARTS, a cable cultural channel partially owned by his firm, ABC Video Enterprises President Herb Granath said he had found that "opera nuts really don't like ballet."

"The segment of people who like sex must be further subdivided into people who like one kind of program and not another," he added.

Panelists urge continued Mexico investment

DALLAS (AP) - Bankers and trade officials urged Texas businessmen to consider Mexico a good risk for foreign trade and investment because its economic crisis is easing and there is little prospect of another peso devaluation

About 75 Texas businessmen, bankers and lawyers were told at a seminar Wednesday sponsored by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the World Trade Association of Dallas that Mexico is a country rich in natural resources and worth far more than its $80 billion foreign debt

"There are no dramatic changes foreseen in the exchange rate. The pressure is off the peso," said David Vance, senior vice president of Interfirst Bank in Dallas.

He told those attending the seminar entitled "The Mexican Market Today — Adjustment to Continued Change." that the exchange rate probably will stay between 121 to 150 pesos to against

e of the west The court Wednesday overturned the murder conviction against Michael Joseph Banks on grounds the trial judge should have told the jury about "his right to arm himself and seek an explanation.

Appeals Court Judge Mike McCormick argued unsuccessfully that it was not a legal right - but only a romantic notion that everyone in Texas can tote his .45 and settle his differences at high noon on

But the appeals court ruled 7-2 in favor of Banks, who shot and killed his brother-in-law. Donald Ray Sessions, after asking Sessions about some missing money Oct. 28, 1977.

Banks fired his pistol after Sessions, unarmed and standing on a stairway, turned toward him. Bank argued it was self defense. but a Houston jury convicted him of murder in 1979, and he was sentenced to 15 years in

Banks appealed on grounds the judge refused to instruct jurors as to a person's right to carry a gun when he seeks to settle differences with another person and fears he may be attacked as a result.

The 14th Court of Appeals in Houston rejected that argument and affirmed the conviction. But the Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that because the trial judge told the jury about laws regarding self defense for people who start fights, "the trial court is obligated to also charge (instruct the jury) on a defendant's right to carry arms to the scene of the difficulty and to seek an explanation ...

McCormick protested that there is no law that allows an individual to carry a gun to the site of a possible confrontation with an enemy. He said the tradition dates to an 1883 court case - which McCormick said the Legislature tried to abolish in a series of penal code reforms passed in 1973.

"The majority (of the appeals court), despite the clear legislative expression to the contrary, continues to follow the Code of the West." McCormick said.

Seminar chairman Roger J.A. Turner, the Mexico Desk Officer for the Chamber, brought 13 panelists together to offer businessmen advise on how to get an import license, to deal with Mexican customs officials and what steps suppliers must take to get reimbursed. Ann H. Hughes, the Chamber's deputy assistant secretary for the Western Hemisphere, said the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid has taken the right steps to correct Mexico's $80 billion dollar foreign debt. "I think the de la Madrid administration has come to grips with the economic situation, they moved quickly to put together a program under the IMF (International Monetary Fund), which meant that the government would receive international resources." she said.

"At the same time, they had to take austerity moves which will help them bring their house in order," she added.

Ms. Hughes said the moves have "inspired confidence" in some U.S. businessman, but she conceded smaller businessmen "who can't wait longer to receive their money" still are being hurt by the economic crisis in Mexico.

"A great deal of what happened to Mexico is not of its own making. The dramatic reduction in the price of oil certainly was not anticipated," she said.

Dr. Ernesto Amtamann Obregon, president of the Mexican Business Council for Foreign Affairs, repeatedly empasized in his speech that Mexico "will pay its debt to banks. Mexico, he said, is rich in natural resources and worth more than its $80 billion dollar debt. Mexico is still a good risk, 'said Obregon.

"We are a growing neighbor with growing needs and have growing pains," he said.

Senate facing withholding tax repeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is reconsidering the repeal of withholding taxes on interest and dividends while budget conferees continue searching for a 1984 spending plan acceptable to both houses of Congress.

Withholding is expected to be repealed but it's still unclear whether Congress will take the action before collection of the tax begins July 1. In response to an extensive lobbying campaign orchestrated by the banking industry, the House and Senate passed different repeal measures

House-Senate budget negotiators are moving toward a compromise budget for 1984 that includes an additional $12 billion in taxes next year and less money for defense than President Reagan had

The compromise, which one House source warned could still fall apart, may include a $6 billion contingency fund for recession-relief programs already adopted by the Rep. Ed Bethune, R-Ark., who successfully Democrat-controlled House.

These programs, which include health insurance for the unemployed and a jobs bill, would have to be approved by Congress before the money is actually spent. The fund could not be used for other

The compromise projects a $181 billion deficit if the contingency fund were spent, compared to this year's estimated $210 billion deficit.

The package contains a 5 percent increase in defense spending, half what Reagan wants, and $13 million more than the president had sought for domestic programs, not including the of the current fiscal year, won't be spent until recession-relief funds.

In House action, Reagan's request for $114.6 million to produce a binary chemical weapon was deleted from the Pentagon's 1984 defense authorization bill by a vote of 256-161. The million for summer jobs for unemployed amendment to delete the money was sponsored by teen-agers.

removed the program from the 1983 appropriation.

The House, meanwhile defeated 255-164 an lment to remove $6.18 billion for B-1B bombers and turned back another that would have cut money to buy the Sergeant York anti-aircraft

On the other side of Capitol Hill, Senators voted 75-23 to approve a $225 million health-care program for the unemployed. The money, contained in a $16 billion supplemental appropriations bill for the rest legislation spelling out benefits and eligiblity is passed later this summer.

As part of the appropriations bill, the Senate added $40 million in federal aid to education and $30

Reagan unable to shed commission's shadow

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) President Reagan doesn't seem to be able to get out of the shadow that the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is casting on his administration.

After the president tried to remodel the panel, but before he could actually install a new team, the commission sharply criticized the administration, saying it was not appointing enough minorities to top positions and was trying to reduce civil rights enforcement in

Civil rights has been a problem area for the president for the two-and-a-half years he has been in office. When he has not been busy defending his record on specific rights issues — he opposed extension of the Voting Rights Act as first proposed but eventually supported a revised version — he and his aides have had to face strong criticism over the impact of their policies on blacks.

"Even though I do not consider him a racist, the effects of his policies are as devastating as if they were racially motivated," Benjamin L. Hooks, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, contended in a speech a few months ago.

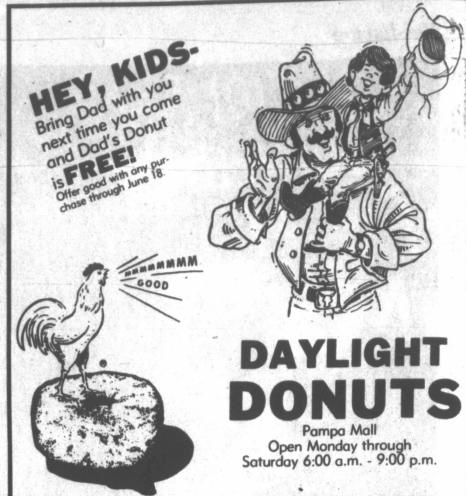

While Reagan and his aides assert that he has made great gains in appointing blacks to high-level policy jobs, they make no attempt to predict that if he seeks re-election he will have any luck in winning black votes. With the exception of two visits to a Roman Catholic high school in Chicago with an all-black student body, the president has made few public appearances aimed at demonstrating support among black citizens.

Public opinion polls turn up virtually no support for the president among black voters. In fact, this has been seen as one element in bringing down his overall job approval rating.

On Tuesday, before the new nominees to the civil rights commission could be installed, the panel released statements criticizing Reagan appointment policies and saying the administration had made numerous "efforts to reduce federal civil rights enforcement in education.

Senators making final bid to increase salaries

WASHINGTON (AP) - Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. is seeking support for a pay plan that would equalize Senate and House salaries, while delaying tough new restrictions on moonlighting until next year or later.

After a week of intermittent consideration of the pay issue, the Senate appeared certain to resolve it today.

Last week, the Senate voted 51 to 41 to limit the compensation its members can receive from speeches and other outside income to 30 percent of salary, or about $18,200. A number of senators had reported giving speeches worth over $100,000 annually, some to groups with issues pending in But sensitive to voter discontent with pay increases, the Senate declined last week to raise its $60,662 salary to the House level, which has been at $69,800 since last December. Sources who spoke on condition that they not be identified said Wednesday that Baker and other key figures in the pay dispute were making one last attempt to find a majority of senators willing to vote themselves a pay raise, while putting off new limits on outside income until Jan. 1, 1984 or Jan. 1,

If that fails, the Senate would be stuck with the embarrassing disparity in pay with the House and similar limits on outside income

The tight security, designed both to protect the pontiff and to forestall any outbursts of support for the outlawed independent labor union, underscored the stark difference between the Poland which John Paul visited in 1979 and the country still under the shadow of martial law today.

Bogus products flooding market

WASHINGTON (AP) - Robert K. Adikes cringes whenever he sees a kerosene heater that seems identical to one manufactured by his company.

"It's a misrepresentation," says Adikes, senior vice president and general counsel of Kero-Sun Inc. "People expect the same quality, service and dependability that they would have with ours and they're not getting it.'

Bogus kerosene heaters are the latest in counterfeiting. Americans are bilked out of billions of dollars a year by companies that try to pass off imitation name-brand jeans, jewelry, automobile parts and other goods as the real thing.

The problem also has international implications, with the West pitted against the Far East, where many of the counterfeit products are manufactured.

"The chances of purchasing a counterfeit record or tape are now estimated to be one in five, a counterfeit pair of sunglasses one in four, a counterfeit Cartier watch even higher," says Peter T. Jones, senior vice president for legal and external affairs at Levi Strauss & Co. and chairman of the International Anti-Counterfeiting Coalition.

'Bogus parts don't have to account for themselves even though they are quite often faulty," says W. Douglas Newkirk, the assistant U.S. trade representative involved negotiations for an international anti-counterfeiting code.

"It's one thing to have a pair of jeans split in the seat," he says,"but it's something quite different to have your brakes fail in your automobile or your helicopter stop working when it's in the air.

While most experts say consumers are the main victims of the counterfeiters, even the U.S. government has suffered losses at their hands, getting stuck with bogus parts for fighter planes, missile systems, helicopters and the space shuttle program, according to Deputy Attorney General Edward C.

A division of Rockwell International, the prime contractor for the shuttle, bought bogus transistors in 1976 for load assemblies of the Enterprise, a prototype used to test the approach and landing operations of the shuttle, says Rockwell spokesman Dick Barton

The parts cost 33 cents each, compared with the going price of about $2.50 or $3, according to Barton. Rockwell discovered they were not authentic when the subcontractor could not

Barton says the fake parts never presented any danger to the Enterprise. "We tested all the suspected assemblies and they all worked perfectly," he says.

Among products that have been counterfeited: aircraft brakes and bolts, automobile brakes, antibiotics, eye drops, heart pacemakers and chemicals.

Carleton Eastlake, who worked on the FTC's investigation of bogus aircraft fasteners, says the agency did not have the "technological competence" to move ahead with the investigation. The responsibility lies with the Federal Aviation Administration, he said

Fred Farrar, an FAA spokesman, says there's no evidence that any aircraft crash was due to fake components. However, he acknowledges a "potential problem" and notes that "there's no way we can police the whole market. Spurred by the International Anti-Counterfeiting Coalition and other manufacturers, the U.S. is seeking to negotiate an international code against counterfeiting as part of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The agreement would deny economic advantages to the counterfeiter so he will lose the incentive to produce bogus

The United States and the European Economic Community agreed to a draft code in 1979. Since then, Japan and Canada have accepted it in principle

Newkirk, the U.S. trade official, says some developed countries are concerned about offending the developing countries, which in many instances are the source of the fake

"We don't have that concern here in the United States," he adds. "The element of consumer fraud is rather major and we think that's really our first interest.'

The United States also is trying to get action from the countries where counterfeiters operate. "If a country gets a reputation for counterfeiting," Newkirk says, "no one is going to want to buy its products.

But he says the only country they've really made headway with is Taiwan, which has introduced stronger anti-counterfeiting regulations.

Debate on human origins centers on Lucy

AP Science Writer

STONY BROOK, N.Y. (AP) - A new debate has erupted over human origins and the famous fossil skeleton known as Lucy, the remains of a human ancestor of 3 to 4 million years ago.

The controversy concerns the way Lucy walked and whether she had a fondness for climbing trees questions of crucial importance in determining when and how humans evolved differently from

Walking on two feet bipedalism - was what first set human ancestors apart from the furry, ancestral apes who roamed the forests and grasslands of East Africa, says Randall Susman, an anthropologist at the State University of New York in Stony Brook

"Bipedalism preceded stone tools, large brains, advanced hands," he says. 'It's the primordial human adaptation, the thing that got the rest of the ball rolling. The way Lucy walked, therefore, should illuminate the behavior and development of the earliest human ancestors and tell us 'how long we've been socially and psychically like we are," says Susman.

Susman and colleagues at Stony Brook surprised anthropologists last year by proposing that Lucy was a much more apelike creature than had been claimed by her discoverer, Donald Johanson of the Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif.

Lucy's shoulders, hands and feet - well suited for tree-climbing — and her gait — a hunchbacked, bent-kneed style of locomotion - show how primitive she was, Susman's group said.

65-6841

Johanson didn't accept it. He stuck to the theory put forth by his colleague Owen Lovejoy of Kent State University in Ohio, who said that Lucy walked fully upright like modern humans.

With Susman's hypothesis. therefore, the stage was set for the kind of quarrel that is so common in anthropology.

In April, Johanson gathered the disputants for a summit meeting. He invited Lovejoy, the Stony Brook researchers and about a dozen other anthropologists to Berkeley for a scholarly Studying Lucy is easier, in one regard, than studying some other prehistoric animals. The collection of fossils from Lucy and her kindred is substantial. Reproductions of the fossils covered three large tables at the Berkeley conference Even so, many arguments turn on the subtlest features of a particular bone and will probably continue no matter how many more fossils are

The question of Lucy's locomotion is closely related to the question of when humans and apes went their separate ways in the ancient past. If Lucy were a primitive walker, it could mean that apes and humans split from a common ancestor that lived perhaps as recently as 5 million years ago

The conference at Berkeley opened with Susman and Stern elaborating on several of their recently published papers on Lucy and her kindred, the species known as Australopithecus afarensis.

Measurements of Lucy's skeleton and a comparison of it with human and ape skeletons show that some parts of Lucy were quite modern looking; others very primitive and apelike, Susman and Stern said. The skeleton combines features of humans and chimpanzees.

"We began to envision an animal that is a mosaic of both," Susman says.

Lucy's feet were long in proportion to her body size, and her legs were short. Her joints and pelvis indicate that she leaned forward as she walked on stubby legs and primitive feet, they said

Her hands and shoulders are among her primitive features, they said. Her curved fingers, among other things, suggest that she might

"It makes so much sense for Lucy to climb trees, because every other primate that size climbs trees," says

Lovejoy responded with a critique of the Stony Brook claims. He contended that while there are some differences between Lucy's skeleton and that of a modern human, the differences are so subtle that her walk would look exactly like a modern human's.

Lucy's skeleton and other fossil remains of Australopithecus afarensis clearly demonstrate that the creature was a fully upright walker, although stronger and faster than a modern human, Lovejoy says. "Explain to her what a hamburger was, and she'd beat you to the nearest

McDonald's nine times out of

A crucial part of the Susman-Stern argument concerned the long, curved bones of Lucy's fingers and toes. To them, these bones showed that Lucy's hands and feet were powerful and suited to grasping tree limbs.

Lovejoy argues that the curved finger and toe bones called phalanges are a remnant inherited by Lucy from her ancestors, and that in the time of Lucy they were gradually evolving into modern human fingers and toes. They are, therefore, of little significance.

Tim White, a professor of anthropology at the University of California in Berkeley, who is closely allied with Lovejoy and Johanson, said he was influenced by the Susman-Stern analysis of the hands. "As far as the hand bones go. I left the conference with a lot more ambiguity. I'm not sure what they mean," he said.

How will the disagreement be resolved? White says new techniques for studying fossils, such as sophisticated X-rays, might reveal much more information about Lucy's skeleton and the many other fossils of Australopithecus afarensis that have been found.

On the other hand, it might never be resolved. As White says, "There are some parts of the past that I don't think we're ever going to know.

ear Miss Marbles.

I have a problem which I know you can help me with, since ou are such a wise old broad. It seems that no matter which liet I try, I can't seem to lose weight. I hope you can find the solution for me, since last night I sat on my husband's lap and proke both his legs.

Sincerely.

I do indeed have a nifty solution for you. It is a proven fact at a person whose weight is 150 pounds would weigh only shout 50 pounds if all the water in his system were dried up. From personal experience I know this to be true, having weighed myself during a particularly awful hangover. With my mouth feeling like a dead cotton boll, I weighed in at 47% ounds. My suggestion to you, then, is to dry up.

Dear Miss Mingles.

I have a problem which I know you can help me with since you are such a wise old broad. My boyfriend and I are contemplating marriage. We have known each other for many years, and not only are we very much in love, but we're also great friends. However, I'm still afraid of marriage, what with the divorce rate being so high and all. Do you think that a modern marriage stands a chance?

Afraid in Brooklyn

Dear Miss Brook.

You have indeed come to the right place for advice. I'd say that you stand a good chance of a successful marriage with someone who is both a friend and a lover. After all, forty percent of the wounds caused by knives, guns and icepicks are inflicted by friends or relatives of the victims. In other words, the family that slays together, stays together.

Respectfully Still Wounding After All These Years

Dear Miz Mumples, I have a problem which I know you can help me with since you are such a wise old broad. I love my wife, but she keeps having babies. Year in, year out, it's a new kid every time I turn around. I like children all right, but I think enough is enough. What shall I do?

Yours Truly Deep in Diapers

I know how you feel. I had two entire children before I found the solution. Fortunately, before it went any farther, I learned that houseflies do not breed in Alaska, which is where I sent my husband and his two offspring fourteen years ago. Since that time I have not had a single problem with unwanted pregnancies, nor have I found any stray babies wandering round the house. And our marriage is still great, according to the postcards he sends me. My foresight in sending the children will enable me to enjoy my later years without the problem of having to babysit with grandchildren. My advice is to pack them all north to Alaska. Be sure to give your wife ough money to write, so that you, too, can know whether your marriage is still alive and well.

Happily,

Dear Abby Party hostesses' put-on leaves woman put-out

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A woman friend (?) phoned and invited me to a wedding anniversary party for mutual friends. She said, "I'm having a money tree for the honorees, so make your check out to me. I will cash it and hang the money on the tree, and put your name on the card listing all the donors."

I agreed to send my check, although I thought the idea was in poor taste since the honorees were wealthy and had much more than I

Then she said, "I'm sure you won't want to attend as the party is set up for couples only and you are a single woman, so just mail the check to me. Goodbye." Since I had already agreed to send a check, I meekly mailed it.

I later learned that several single men attended the party and had a good time. The honorees never acknowledged my gift, and since they're not the type to disregard a gift, I can only assume that my name was not put on the card.

I welcome your comments.

STUNG IN COLUMBIA, MO.

DEAR STUNG: Your "friend" could author a book on how to lose friends and alienate people. As any Monday-morning quarterback can tell you, when your friend said she was sure you wouldn't want to attend because the party was set up for couples and you were single, you should have told her you would either bring an escort or come alone and take your

It's not too late to tell her that your gift has not been acknowledged, and knowing it is unlike the honorees to ignore a gift, you are writing them to ask if your name was on the card - or inadvertently

DEAR ABBY: When flying on a commercial plane, I find that it is a rare flight when an infant doesn't scream or cry for a good part of the trip. I am extremely sensitive to noises, and the constant cries of a baby upset me no

I pay a large sum of money to fly, while the infant who flies for free ruins my trip. I feel that this is an infringement on my rights.

What are your thoughts about having a section on planes for passengers with infants? Just as there is a "No Smoking" section, there can also be a "No Infant" section. ALLERGIC TO CRYING BABIES

DEAR ALLERGIC: "No Smoking" sections on planes are not entirely smoke-free because smoke has a way of drifting.

A "No Infant" section would offer little relief from a screaming baby because sound (like smoke) also "travels." Given a choice, I'd opt for the crying baby and use earplugs or a headset.

DEAR ABBY: "Looking Ahead at 72" writes that she hope's that when the time comes (to die), some loving person will remove the hair from her upper lip because she wouldn't want to be caught dead with her moustache

Abby, you seem to think it's the mortician's responsibility to make the deceased appear as "natural" as possible. I have been in the funeral business for over 30 years, and it's our policy to allow the family to view the deceased before the public visitation in order to be certain that the deceased looks "natural."

Here are some of the requests we have had: "Can't you put a smile on Dad's face? He looks so

2. "Stick a pipe in his mouth, or nobody will believe it's

3. "Put Dad's glasses on. Nobody ever saw him without them.

4. "Take the rouge and lipstick off Grandma. She never wore any.' 5. "Put a Wall Street Journal in Dad's hand, so he'll look more natural."

NL roundup Evans drills three homers as Giants rout Astros, 7-1

Darrell Evans stayed up to watch his own version of the late show - then put on a show all by himself against the Houston Astros.

"This is incredible. I've never done anything like this before." said Evans after his three home runs and six RBI powered the San Francisco Giants to a 7-1 victory over the Astros Wednesday.

Perhaps Evans wouldn't have been as successful had he not stayed up late to do his homework. Hitless in 17 previous trips against the Astros, Evans studied video tapes of himself for a couple of hours after Tuesday night's 12-inning, 3-2 loss to the Astros. He said he paid particular attention to his hands and feet and made some adjustments. "I can hardly wait to get upto the plate when I'm hitting like this," said the 13-year veteran after boosting his average of .653.

In other NL action, it was Atlanta 3, Los Angeles 2; Montreal 7, Pittsburgh 4; St. Louis 7, Philadelphia 6; Chicago 7, New York 4 in 10 innings and San Diego 5, Cincinnati 1.

With his explosive afternooh, Evans tied Atlanta's Dale Murphy for the NL lead in homers, ran his career total to 250 and became the first National Leaguer to hit three homers in a game since Claudell Washington did it for the New Work Mets against the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1980.

Evans hit his first two homers - a solo shot in the first inning and a three-run blast in the third - off Houston starter Mike LaCoss.

The left-handed slugger hit a hard liner that was speared by Houston first baseman two-run shot deep into the right field seats at Candlestick Park.

"Even before I went in the ballgame, I felt real good," Evans said. "I just felt like I was going to hit the homers, and as soon as I hit the balls I knew they were gone.

Evans' power display backed the four-hit pitching of Fred Breining, 6-4, who had a perfect game until one out in the sixth. Braves 3, Dodgers 2 Jerry Royster tied the game with a run-producing infield single, then Dale Murphy's sacrifice fly provided the deciding run as Atlanta rallied for two runs in the ninth to beat Los Angeles.

With the bases loaded. Royster bounced a hard grounder off the foot of reliever Dave Stewart, 5-2, to tie the score. Murphy then followed with his RBI to 44. He also is hitting the sixth gave San Francisco Garber, 2-1, who came on in 315 and has a slugging a 5-0 lead. Evans smacked a the bottom of the seventh, recorded the victory. Steve Bedrosian pitched the ninth for his ninth save.

"This is a very patient ballclub," said Atlanta Manager Joe Torre. "The players feel that if they keep plugging away, something good will finally happen."

Mariners snap Rangers' streak on two-run triple by Cowens

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP)

— Al Cowens was desperate. He was hitting a paltry .186 with only one game-winning RBI when he faced Texas Ranger ace reliever Odell Jones Wednesday night with the Seattle Mariners trailing 4-3 in the top of the ninth ming.

There were two on, two out, and Cowens had a 2-2 count.

"I had tried everything to break my slump and I would have stood on my head at the plate if you had guaranteed me a hit," Cowens said.

Cowens didn't have to go that far as he lined a triple into right centerfield that gave the Mariners the tying and go-ahead runs in a 6-4 victory that snapped the Rangers' five-game hitting

"I was glad," he said. "All year I had not been doing the things to help this team."

Jones fell to a 2-3 record with the loss and Ranger Manager Doug Rader was questioned why his short reliever was left in the game over three innings.

"He had two strikes and two outs and there was no team miss a chance to move within a game of California in the American League West. Cowens' triple scored Domingo Ramos and Steve Henderson who had singled and John Moses scored Cowens with a single.

Ed Vandeberg evened his record at 2-2 with three and one-third innings of four hit Texas scored four runs in the fifth inning with rookie Pete O'Brien delivering the big blow, a two-run homer off Mariner starter Bob Stoddard. Seattle scored two unearned runs off Ranger starter Frank Tanana, who lasted five and two-thirds Cowens said he wasn't certain what kindn of a pitch

he hit for the game-winner. "I just swung the bat because when you're hitting .180 you can't guess on a pitch you just try to pickup the ball," Cowens said. "I had been trying to pull the ball too much and got into some bad habits. I kept trying to hit home runs. way I was going to take him Instead, Cowens just wen out," said Rader, who saw his with the pitch to right field. "I've been studying films, working with the coaches, doing everything to try to get out of this slump." Cowens needed for my confidence. For the streaking Range it was only their second I in the last nine games.

Executive urges Mexico to ease investment restrictions

MEXICO CITY (AP) - A leading American business executive urged Wednesday that Mexico ease restrictions on foreign investments. But Commerce Secretary Hector Hernandez Cervantes said the government contemplates in change in easing controls.

Anthony J. Dimino, outgoing president of the American Chamber of Commerce of Mexico, said foreign investments can alleviate Mexico's need for capital-money and help relieve the burden of its huge foreign "Direct foreign investments in Mexico is around 4 percent of the productive plant, compared to 40 percent in Canada ... (and) approximately 10 percent in the United States," Dimino said.

"Of course, complaints are heard both in Canada and Mexico of an excessive penetration of the market by foreign enterprises. But I ask, Wouldn't it benefit the Mexican people if there was a substantial increase in direct foreign investment?" he "Personally, I believe the answer is affirmative. Also, wouldn't it be better to invite foreign investments to take risks here ran than contract heavy loans abroad?" Dimino asked.

Arguing that profit and other remittances abroad placed a heavy burden on the country's balance of payments, Mexico has been restricting foreign investments here to joint ventures since the early 1970s.

Foreigners can invest up to 49 percent in any corporation - the other 51 percent must be Mexican owned. Corporations abroad can establish wholly-owned subsidiaries in this country, but then taxes are much heavier. Mexico has an $83 (b) billion foreign debt much of it owed to American banks - and is barely able to repay it because of a severe

Who is to blame?

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) - When they are to be quoted by name, management executives often avoid singling out labor for declining productivity. including it instead as just one of many contributing factors.

That list goes on and on: the cost of energy, a lack of low-cost capital, government regulation, a failure to provide sufficient research and development money, the high cost of technological change, poor management....

It is simply good manners to do so, the businessmen alibi, disguising their true reason, which has more to do with avoiding confrontations with labor that might produce lingering resentment and perhaps even lower productivity.

"Really," they say, "only two factors stand up to the test (of what is responsible for lowered productivity): The increasing cost of energy and a perceived deterioration in workers' attitudes.

One respondent to the First Pennsylvania survey made the point that "There is no such thing as a poor worker, just poor managers.

While the observation will generate debate, the evidence of recent years suggests that some managers believe it has substance. Increasingly, they are seeking to involve labor in quality control and other efficiencies.

On the whole, however, the economists found managers 'somewhat reluctant to address the productivity issue head on; they seem to be reluctant to work side by side with labor to discover new ways to improve workers' attitudes.'

What appears at first to be a severe criticism of labor's attitude by management turns out, to some extent, to be a criticism by o f management management's attitude.
