Eskimos seeking Arctic policy

FROBISHER BAY, Northwest Territories (AP) — With an agenda that encompasses folk dancing and nuclear weapons, the world's Eskimos are gathered here this week to celebrate their past and discuss a plan for the future of their Arctic homeland.
The Inuit Circumpolar Conference, representing about 100,000 people from Canada, Greenland and the United States, opens its week-long General Assembly today in this town near the Arctic Circle with prayers, ceremonies and welcoming speeches.
Inuit is the name preferred now by most of the people widely known as Eskimos, a term many of them consider offensive.
"We are seeking a greater voice in self-determination," said James F. Stotts, an Alaskan member of the ICC's executive council. "We feel too many of the decisions that affect us are taken by others outside our homeland."
The principal goal of the assembly is to draft a Circumpolar Arctic Policy to be urged upon the governments of all three countries.
"These international gatherings have two very important purposes," said John Amagoalik, president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, this country's main Inuit organization. "One is the political activity. The other, perhaps even more important, is the cultural activities."
Amagoalik said that because of the Inuits' small numbers, their culture "is always on the brink of extinction." Gatherings like this, he said, "give us a chance to celebrate our fragile but continuing existence" with performances of Inuit music, dance and theater.
There are 25,000 Inuit in Canada, about 42,000 in Greenland—where they are the majority—and about 30,000 in Alaska.
About 500 observers, performers, members of an advisory elders body and others participating in the conference began arriving at Frobisher Bay, an inlet on Baffin Island northeast of Hudson Bay, over the weekend.
The influx of visitors has taxed the facilities of this town of 2,400 people, just south of the Arctic Circle, forcing the Frobisher Inn to house its guests four or five to a room—and two strangers to a bed.
"We ask you to be patient, tolerant and understanding," says a sign in the lobby.
Workshops during the week will hammer out language on such issues as culture, transportation, whaling, health, education and environmental protection, which could include a proposal to make the Arctic a nuclear-free zone.
Canada announced this week it would allow tests of the U.S. cruise missile, which would be launched from the Northwest Territories to a target near the Alberta-Saskatchewan border.
Many Inuit also are concerned that exploitation of Arctic oil and natural gas will damage the fragile environment, both because of the risk of oil spills and because year-round ice-breaking would disrupt animal migration.

Senate nearing decision on MX

WASHINGTON (AP) — After 11 days — and occasional long nights — of work, the Senate is preparing to wrap up its consideration of a $200 billion defense bill with a climactic debate on the MX missile.
A compromise agreement worked out by key senators Friday brought an end to a filibuster by opponents and cleared the way for a vote — probably Tuesday — on four amendments to kill the strategic nuclear weapon or place conditions on its production and deployment.
Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., leader of the anti-MX forces and self-described "eternal optimist," says he hopes to score at least one victory. But, he acknowledged Friday, "I think it will be uphill."
Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chief defender of the MX as chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said he thought the vote to begin building the MX for initial deployment in 1986 would closely resemble the 59-39 approval the Senate gave in May to funds for flight-testing the 10-warhead missile.
Final passage of the defense bill will be voted immediately after the MX amendments are considered, according to the agreement.

Global Christian assembly begins work

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The World Council of Churches, launching its assembly with a service that included Indian toms-toms and modern dance, faces "terrifying" issues of peace and justice in the three weeks ahead, a council leader says.
"You can never tell what will happen at such assemblies," said Archbishop Edward Scott, primate of the Anglican Church of Canada and head of the council's central committee.
He said the meeting, which began Sunday and is described as the most widely representative gathering of Christians ever, will address "pretty terrifying" issues confronting humanity, including threats to peace, justice and human rights.
The assembly will also focus on witnessing in a divided world and healing ruptures in families, communities and nations.
It is the council's sixth assembly, held every seven or eight years since the founding 35 years ago of the global, inter-church organization for cooperation and work for Christian unity. The assembly, the council's supreme legislative body, reviews past council work and sets directions for the future.
"Faith has to be the context both for our concerns and actions," Scott said as the assembly held opening ceremonies.
The three-hour service was held in a huge gold-and-white-striped tent with a cross atop it on the campus of the University of British Columbia, with prayers, litanies and hymns resonating among the surrounding trees.
Demonstrators appeared outside at the start, their placards denouncing its members as "wolves in sheep's clothing," charging the council "finances Reds" and that the Soviet Union "controls" votes, a reference to the 30 denominations from Communist Eastern Europe, including the big Russian Orthodox Church.
Nine hundred delegates — Protestants, Anglicans, Orthodox, old Catholic and Pentecostals — joined about 15,000 worshippers packing the Pacific Coliseum for stirring worship and drama.
Modern dancers portrayed prayers and Scripture readings. Costumed Indians sang to tom-toms and the massed thousands rang the rafters with "O Come, O Come Emmanuel."
At one point, dancers and "winged angels" on stilts enacted the crucifixion and resurrection.
From the 1,000-voice choir came a murmurous, sighing, crying sound that built up like some oceanic ache of all humanity while dancers clacked staves and stomped in a relentless beat.
While Roman Catholicism is not a member of the council, more than 150 Roman Catholics were present.

Hopes for capital spending continue

By CHET CURRIER AP Business Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — As the economic recovery gathers momentum, hopes are rising that it will give a much-needed lift to capital spending.
To many people, the capital-goods business may be the economic equivalent of the dark side of the moon.
It consists mainly of sales by one company to another of production machinery and other "widgets" most members of the public never see.
But obscure or not, it is an important part of American business. It provides many jobs, contributes to productivity, and can give impetus economic expansion at times when consumer spending flags.
In the recession of the past couple of years, capital spending nosedived. With many companies struggling to survive, it was not a time for building new factories, making large purchases of machinery or replacing the corporate auto fleet with shiny new models.
Even if a company was in an expansive mood, high interest rates made it very costly to act on that impulse.
By tradition, it takes capital spending longer than other areas of the economy to recover from such a slump. In the early stages of an upswing, the industry's customers experience an improvement in their business — but they are still in a wary, cost-conscious mood.
An old rule of thumb holds that factories and mines across the country must be operating at 85 percent of their existing capacity before conditions are ripe for a capital-spending boom. At the bottom of the recession last year, capacity utilization, as reported by the Federal Reserve, sank below 70 percent.
By June, it had climbed back to 74.5 percent — still well below the 85 percent trigger point, but at least headed in the right direction.

The sounds of revolution heard in the music of Nicaragua

By SOLL SUSSMAN Associated Press Writer
MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — U.S. and international pop stars dominate the airwaves in Nicaragua, but local musicians hope that songs heard through the long fight to overthrow the late dictator Anastasio Somoza can be served and developed as a homegrown musical tradition.
"My cause is the cause of my people, the cause of Africa, the cause of all oppressed peoples," sings Luis Meija Godoy, in a 1980 song called "To Sandino."
The song salutes Augusto Cesar Sandino, the freedom fighter of the 1930s who gave his name to the leftist Sandinista National Liberation Front, which ousted the Somoza family in 1979.
Meija Godoy, one of the most popular Nicaraguan musicians, said that the music is known popularly here as "Son Nica" or "Nicaraguan Sound." It has two motives, he said — to rescue the country's traditional music and to counteract gradually "music that's sold like by the multinational companies."
He said, it hasn't driven international pop stars off the Nicaraguan hit parade. Government and private radio stations generally play the local music — also called "testimonial songs" — only on holidays or political occasions such as the July 19th anniversary of the 1979 revolution.
Godoy's brother, Carlos Meija Godoy, another proponent of the Nicaraguan sound, sang the theme song earlier this month at government festivities marking the fourth anniversary of the Sandinista revolution.
The refrain of the song, "Guitars and Rifles," has a lively beat, interrupted by shouts of "Long Live Nicaragua" and "All Arms for the People."
"The only thing we've got is a great love for what's ours," said Luis Enrique Meija Godoy, who was interviewed in the music department of the Ministry of Culture which was formed since the revolution.
Most of the songs are accompanied by the traditional instruments of Nicaraguan folkore — guitars, accordions, the marimba and other percussions. There also is influence from Caribbean, classical and popular music.
Meija Godoy's latest album, recorded in the Netherlands, is called "I'm From a Simple People."

A love song called "The Inventory" urges lovers to join hands, "Now that the country needs rifles and volunteer work."
He said the music since the revolution "has the same roots" as the songs of insurrection but has changed. "It reflects the search for peace and the defense of sovereignty," the musician said.
The 38-year-old Meija Godoy spent five years in exile before the revolution, while his brother spent the two years before the revolution out of the country.
Meija Godoy sings, writes songs, plays the guitar and some marimba. He traces the protest music back to the 1960s when musicians made songs reflecting the thoughts of Sandino.
Musicians went into the hills in the 1970s, he said, and found survivors of Sandino's forces who still remembered songs from those days. Those songs, which in turn can be traced back to the Mexican Revolution of the early 20th century, were sung again.
He said that the Somoza regime started cracking down on the musicians in the 1970s as they gained popularity, but the music played on the clandestine Sandinista radio station and sung at rallies became an important part of the revolution.
An album called "Loaded Guitar" was circulated internationally to gain support for the revolutionaries.
Sandinista commander Carlos Nunez Tellez in liner notes on an album by the group Pancasan wrote that "Nicaraguan song has been food, light, stimulation in the difficult hours... Now the people have triumphed and the music speaks another tongue. Now it talks of hopes converted into reality."
A song called "July 19th" in the Pancasan album says the date "means the end of death and agony... of our struggle reaching an objective." Another song called "Notes on Uncle Sam" starts with a strong beat, whistles and a sarcastic "Oh, Yeah" — in English — and ends with shouts of "Viva Nicaragua Libre" — Long Live Free Nicaragua.
Songs also played a part in the educational crusade launched after the revolution that reduced Nicaragua's illiteracy rate from 60 percent to 13 percent. "Hymn to Literacy" says "Let's raise barricades of notebooks and blackboards — remember the national crusade."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

No such thing as no-risk living

Someone had better start asking how far the government should or can go to insure people against the risks of living in an industrial society.

Government, business and taxpayers already are staggering under the weight of social programs designed to make life better for the aged, the sick and the poor - such things as Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid and a variety of welfare plans.

All sorts of costly regulations have been imposed by the federal government to protect citizens against air and water pollution.

Several years ago a program was started to compensate miners suffering from "black lung" disease caused by breathing coal dust. It was estimated to cost $40 million to $350 million a year. It is currently running at $2 billion a year.

The government recently set up a "superfund" to pay for cleaning up toxic waste dumps.

Now, there are reports that momentum is building in Congress to establish a fund to compensate persons injured by toxic substances. Sponsors are working out how the liability would be shared among industry and federal and state governments.

What is behind this move? Genuine concern over health problems is one factor, of course, but that isn't the whole of it.

Something approaching a mass hysteria over toxic hazards is another. The fear is out of all proportion to any actual damage to people or property. Even the horrors of Love Canal have been found to have been vastly overstated.

Politics also is involved. There are votes to be had in creating new social programs and expanding old ones, no matter what the cost or how much they are abused.

Critics of the toxic substance compensation plan are not far wrong when they claim that people who get cancer from smoking for 30 years will claim they got it by walking past a toxic dump.

Before embarking on another expensive "entitlements" program, Congress ought to step back and reflect on what it's getting into. The government cannot insure everybody against everything.

Texans bite the bullet to hunt in New Mexico

Texas outdoorsmen - outdoorswomen, too - are doing a slow burn in reaction to a new and exceedingly stiff hike in New Mexico's out-of-state hunting fees.

And while admitting that New Mexico previously offered a lower-priced, much-closer-to-home hunting ground than did Colorado, Wyoming or Montana, even the unriled can see that our neighboring state to the west has shafted Texas hunters in at least one sense... perhaps two.

Most of the hunting for both big and small game in the New Mexico takes place on lands that fall under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management or the National Forest Service. In a word, those are federal lands - vast parcels on which every U.S. landowner pays taxes. More correctly, everyone's tax money makes retention and management of those regions possible.

So when New Mexico this year upped out-of-state license fees by as much as 350 percent, the message was clear: Another state containing federal hunting grounds has moved to rip off non-residents for access to a countryside that is mutually owned and financed, but state-controlled.

(In fairness, more than a few New Mexicans are not too happy over the turn of legislative events: resident fees, while hardly comparable in final heft, slid up dramatically as well.)

Over the years, most other Western mountain states have raised their out-of-state fees in slow stages. And they took such unpopular actions with an eye toward inflationary times, parity with adjoining states' fees and the avowed interest of initiating or sustaining high-quality game management programs.

New Mexico's leap toward the top of a monetary heap came with minimum pretense, however. To a neighboring state now deeply in the grip of an oil bust, New Mexico's message to the Texas working man-hunter seems to be a loud and resounding "STAY HOME."

We don't doubt that many Lone Star nimrods will do precisely that, at least initially. Similarly, we don't doubt that New Mexico towns soon will feel the economic impact of the Texans' absences. Fine.

What rankles underneath is the fact that New Mexico's precipitous rise in fees may drive up the already outrageous market price of hunting leases in Texas, where almost all land is privately held.

In a year or two, New Mexico could have Texas hunters over a proverbial barrel. With competition for leases much too fierce and too high-priced at home, Texans could find the Land of Enchantment's fees no longer so repulsive.

The end result of such a scenario? New Mexico reaps a shrewdly grown financial harvest.

One apparent alternative might be to give up annual outings into the high lonesome for - in particular - mule deer. But we suspect Texas hunters aren't about to do anything that drastic, no matter what the cost in either dollars or pride.

Parting shots

In the 1968 campaign, was Henry Kissinger working for Richard Nixon or Hubert Humphrey? The answer is yes. At least that is the theory expressed in a new book, "The Price of Power." The author claims that Henry fed Nixon information on Humphrey and Humphrey information on Nixon. Henry says it's a slimy lie - and he will never do it again.

What is the price of power? Apparently, a two-headed coin.

One man's sorority

By RUSTY BROWN

I like stories about men helping women. One of my favorites is about Walter Ross.

It begins more than 50 years ago, when times were bad. It was the "capital D" Depression. Millions of men lost their jobs. Women to.

Young women gave up hope of going to college. Women at home also sacrificed. It was hard to whistle a happy tune when the kids were without shoes and the winter coat, passed from child to child, finally fell apart.

Along came Walter Ross, book salesman and officer in a publishing company, the Grolier Society. Ross, I suspect, feared the failing economy would sink him too and was no doubt anxious to think of new markets for books.

He reasoned that if women had a chance to get together to read and discuss literature, they would be less depressed about the Depression.

One day, while covering his territory, the 31-year-old Ross drove into the little town of Vinita, Okla. He talked to the librarian about starting a "What To Read Club." She liked the idea and promptly took Ross to meet Sally Rogers McSpadden, sister of the caronteur and wit, Will Rogers.

Mrs. McSpadden, a prominent clubwoman, encouraged the book salesman and even helped design the first study programs. They all agreed the "What To Read Club," was a dull title, and since the motto was to be "life, learning and friendship," someone suggested a classier name: Beta Sigma Phi, the first letters of each of those words in Greek.

The first chapter of Beta Sigma Phi was formed in Abilene, Kan., on April 30, 1931.

Today, the sorority has 250,000 members and is ranked among the largest women's organizations. Its 12,500 chapters stretch across the U.S., England, Indonesia, Norway and Australia. There will soon be chapters in the West Indies and Western Samoa.

Walter Ross died in 1969 but his son, Walter "Bill" Ross, and a staff of 90 continue to handle the sorority's business affairs from a red brick headquarters in Kansas City.

"My father," says Bill Ross, "wanted to give women a way to share their strengths." In truth, Ross originated a network of support groups long before psychologists defined their importance.

Beta Sigma Phi members, half of whom hold full-time jobs, gather two evenings a month in intimate chapters of 10 or 20. They pay annual dues of $11.50 and dig into a study project ever year. In addition, they donate time to volunteer activities and fund-raising crusades.

One chapter may spend a weekend painting rooms at a battered - women's shelter or a day care center. Others stage parties for kids in hospital wards or "adopt" residents of nursing homes, taking turns inviting them home to dinner.

In Ocala, Fla., members worked with the police department on a safety program for youngsters. In McHenry, Ill., the women displayed and explained honest-to-goodness moon rocks in a community education program.

Women of all ages and professions are members, including a Minnesota Supreme Court judge, the Oklahoma "Nurse of the Year", Michigan's "Legal Secretary of the Year" and the "outstanding volunteer" in Louisiana's nursing homes.

Most touching, of course, is the caring between sisters. Whether a woman is going through a divorce or has lost a job, her sisters try to meet her needs.

Last year, a Beta Sigma Phi member and her husband were 500 miles from home, keeping vigil at the hospital bed of their critically injured son. Two younger sons were alone in a motel room nearby when the husband had a heart attack.

Local chapter members heard of the situation and rushed to help, though they were strangers to her. Said the grateful woman: "I had only been a Beta Sigma Phi a short time. I didn't know just what or whom I had joined forces with."

Neither did Walter Ross when he started his little book club of seven members. But 250,000 women have taken his idea and run with it.

What can politicians say?

By ART BUCHWALD

Things to be said when discussing Carter's black book and other crimes and misdemeanors, if you are a Republican team player.

"It's much ado about nothing."

"Everybody does it in politics."

"We didn't steal the book. Someone gave it to us."

"I never was in any wrongdoing. I hope the Justice Department gets to the bottom of it."

"In retrospect it was stupid to even have accepted the material, but at the time we thought it might be helpful."

"Their side was probably doing it to us."

"I never heard about a mole in the Carter White House until I read it in the newspaper."

"When I received the material I'm sure I gave it to X."

"Y must be mistaken. He never gave it to me."

"It's summer and the press has nothing to write about."

"It's unfair to compare the stealing of a black briefing book to Watergate. There were no break-ins, and the president isn't trying to cover up anything."

"It's silly to think that Carter would have won even if Reagan didn't know his game plan."

"Jim Baker was stupid to admit he saw the material."

"Stockman was stupid to admit he got the material and it was helpful."

"Bill Casey was stupid to deny he ever saw the material."

"George Will didn't do anything wrong when he helped Reagan prepare for the debate."

"George Will didn't have to say on TV he saw the material from the Carter camp."

"In a political fight you use everything you can to beat your opponent."

"It's different to steal material than if someone hands it to you."

"I forgot who gave me the stuff. I never saw the guy again."

"It's ridiculous to say I knew anything about it."

"The whole thing is a Democratic conspiracy to make us look bad."

"There was never a Republican mole in the Carter White House."

"If there was a mole in the White House he never passed on any classified material."

"The information from the Carter National Security Council was common knowledge to everyone."

"Nobody cares about the dirty tricks except the press and the politicians."

"The president says he wants to get to the bottom of it. That shows he had nothing to do with it."

"You can't control every volunteer in a political campaign."

"In a campaign you get so many pieces of paper that you never ask where they came from."

"I don't know how the Carter papers turned up in my files. I certainly didn't put them there."

"It's strange that this story should have broken just as the 1984 elections are upon us."

"The important thing to remember is Carter would have lost the debate even if we didn't have the briefing book."

"If the Democrats want to make something out of this we have plenty of stuff on them that we haven't released before."

Things to say if you are a Democrat:

"If someone had given me purloined papers from the Reagan camp, I would have returned them immediately."

"It makes me sick to think this is how they won the election."

"Nobody learned a thing from Watergate."

"I'm not enjoying the White House discomfiture one bit. If I were the president I'd fire the whole staff."

"If it hadn't been for the mole in Jimmy's White House, Amy Carter might now be in charge of nuclear proliferation policy."

Amherst' error

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN

What's wrong with U.S. colleges? That's a question that many people are asking these days. Some of the most prestigious institutions in the country engage in some of the most peculiar practices.

For example, it has come to light that Amherst College, an old-line New England college, has set up a Corliss Lamont Lectureship For A Peaceful World with a gift of $150,000 from Mr. Lamont.

You may ask, so what? Well, a recent issue of The New Republic Magazine, a journal with the most impeccable liberal credential, features the statement that a few years ago, "Corliss Lamont, the old stalwart of the National Council on American - Soviet Friendship, organized a response to the allegation that the Vietnamese government is guilty of human rights abuses." Mr. Lamont, whom Amherst College honors with a lectureship, declared, "We have examined these charges and find them to be based on distortion and exaggeration." He sees no evil in the bloody North Vietnamese regime.

Anyone who has followed Left movements over the past 49 years knows Corliss Lamont as a household word. Dr. E. Merrill Root, in his book "Collectivism On Campus," pointed out what Mr. Lamont, son of one of the wealthiest man in America, wrote books in praise of the Soviet Union and never said an unkind word about collectivism in its most extreme forms. When the communist New Masses was in financial difficulties, Mr. Lamont signed an appeal for funds for the journal. And there is much, much more to his record.

All this is the public record, set down in countless articles and books.

Why, therefore, should Amherst College, a leading New England college, accept funding from Mr. Lamont for a "peace" lectureship? Is the Amherst administration and faculty ignorant of Mr. Lamont's background, interests and political orientation? Mr. Lamont has the right to be pro-Soviet, but that doesn't excuse a college from accepting a grant from such a source and honoring the donor in the process.

It's very hard not to suggest that there is a Left bias in the administration at Amherst. The choice seems to fall between ignorance and bias, and Amherst is not known for its ignorance.

One also wonders whether the alumni have any idea whom their alma mater is honoring. Unlike administrators and political scientists, the ordinary alumnus is not too likely to recognize the name Corliss Lamont, at least the younger Amherst grad. Someone should wake the alumni up and urge them to call the administration to account.

Back from the USSR

Greenpeace members, from left, Pat Herron of Seattle; David Rinehart of Albany, Ore.; and Nancy Foote of Washington, D.C., talk to reporters Sunday night on arrival at Seattle - Tacoma International Airport. They were detained five days in the Soviet Union after an anti-whaling protest in Siberia. (AP Laserphoto)

Greenpeace endangers Eskimo's efforts to reunite with relatives

NOME, Alaska (AP) — The confrontation between anti-whaling demonstrators and Soviet officials could jeopardize Alaskan Eskimos' chances of ever being reunited with their relatives in Siberia, an Eskimo leader says. Jenny Alowa said Eskimo inhabitants of three Bering Sea islands and one Alaskan coastal village last had contact with their Siberian relatives 32 years ago, even though the two continents are only 40 miles apart at one point. "Our situation is similar to East-West Berlin," Ms. Alowa said in a letter to the Greenpeace Foundation released Saturday. "I am disappointed and somewhat mad about your mission to Siberia. I am mad because your program, even though it is for a good cause, may have jeopardized our plan of visiting Siberia in the near future," she wrote before departing for the Inuit Circumpolar Conference at Frobisher Bay in Canada's Northwest Territories. Inuit is the name preferred by most people known as Eskimos. Seven Greenpeace members were detained for nearly a week by armed Soviet troops after landing at the whaling village of Lorino in Siberia to protest alleged violations of international whaling accords. The Soviets denied the allegations. The protesters were transferred to the Greenpeace Foundation ship Rainbow Warrior on Friday at a rendezvous in the Bering Sea. Bob Cummings, a Greenpeace publicist aboard the Rainbow Warrior anchored outside Nome, said he was unaware of the situation. Other local displeasure with Greenpeace, an international environmental group, surfaced Saturday when the Rainbow Warrior arrived. Although several dozen people lined the Nome jetty to greet the ship, others carried signs reading: "Greenpeace — the Soviets don't want you and neither do we" and "Whales are great — green people we hate."

Cummings said he thought the Greenpeace protest had helped the Inuit by highlighting the difference between commercial whaling, such as that done by the Russians, and the subsistence whaling the Inuit are struggling to maintain. Many Alaskan Inuit disapprove of commercial whaling, but are reluctant to object too vigorously for fear their own subsistence hunting will be banned. The separation of the Inuit began with World War II, when the Soviets banned traffic between Bering Sea islands and the Siberian mainland. Ms. Alowa said Inuit who lived on St. Lawrence, King and Little Diomed islands in the Bering Sea and the Alaskan coastal village of Wales last had contact with their Siberian relatives more than 32 years ago, even though Gambell on St. Lawrence Island is only 40 miles from the Soviet mainland. Ms. Alowa wrote that both the Alaskan and Soviet Inuit peoples, totaling about 100,000, share the same dialect of the Yupik language. Both branches of Inuit are indigenous to the area north of the Arctic Circle, she said.

Chrysler-UAW contract talks get underway

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Bargainers for the United Auto Workers say they'll ask for at least $2 an hour more from Chrysler Corp. to cash in on the company's recent profits, but the automaker says it will seek concessions from the union. The current contract is set to expire next Jan. 14, but the union asked for early negotiations beginning today because of Chrysler's financial success. The union says it will ask Chrysler for a $2-an-hour raise for its 47,100 U.S. workers over the term of a new pact. That would bring the workers up to the pay levels of auto workers at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. But Thomas Miner, Chrysler vice president for industrial relations, said last week at Chrysler's Highland Park headquarters that the union may have to do some giving as well.

"I suspect that the company will have an issue or two it wants to discuss, although we don't want to come (to the bargaining table) with a laundry list," Miner said. "My definition of collective bargaining ... is that it is a two-way street." The No. 3 U.S. automaker, which was on the verge of bankruptcy just a few years ago, reported a record $310.3 million second-quarter profit last week and announced it will repay by mid-August the $1.2 billion in federally guaranteed loans it received in 1980 and 1981. The UAW says workers are entitled to a raise because the company's new financial health could not have occurred without the concessions the union made in 1980 and 1981. Miner would not specify the areas the company has targeted as possible concessions, but Chrysler pushed hard in negotiations last year for cuts in health care costs. The UAW agreed to help slash $10 million from the health care budget in the current contract. But Marc Stepp, UAW vice president in charge of the union's Chrysler department, said recently "the days of the concessions are all over with." Chrysler's U.S. autoworkers earn an average wage of $9.85 an hour. In 1980 and 1981 they granted $1.2 billion in concessions — including elimination of cost-of-living allowances and annual pay increases — to help the company stay afloat. Chrysler lost $3.27 billion from 1979 through 1981. The workers' current contract reinstated COLA and gave employees an immediate pay raise. But workers began demanding more money as the company's finances improved this year.

Names in the news

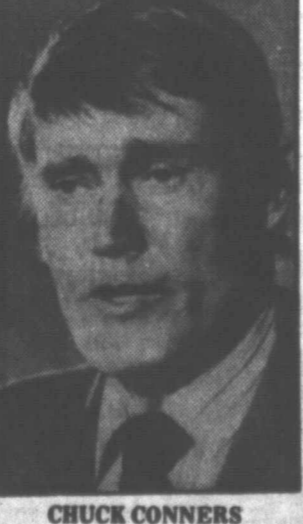

BANNING, Calif. (AP) — Six former stuntmen, including actors Chuck Connors and Dale Robertson, have made their mark again — this time in concrete — after being inducted into the Hollywood Stuntmen's Hall of Fame. "This is a great honor to me," Connors, 62, said Sunday. "I feel a stuntman is an important part of movie industry." The inductees cast their footprints and handprints in cement at the tourist attraction 75 miles east of Hollywood. Connors, star of the 1960s television series "The Rifleman," did all his own stunts. Robertson, 60, was in the TV series "Tales of Wells Fargo" and "The Iron Horse" as well as a string of Western movies in the '40s, '50s and '60s. The other honorees — Yakima Canutt, Dean Smith, Fred Scott and Red Morgan — aren't as well known, but their work still entertained millions, said Jonny Jay, a Hall of Fame spokesman.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Writer Maya Angelou, whose book about growing up in the town of Stamps was a best-seller, said after a recent visit home that blacks in America are losing their cultural heritage as they achieve success by the standards of white America. Ms. Angelou, in her mid-50s and a humanities professor at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, N.C., was in Pine Bluff recently for a family reunion. She also visited Stamps, the town of 2,800 people that was the setting for "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings." The more blacks succeed, the more their heritage recedes, she said. "Eventually, all the ethnic heritage, all the small and personal memories ... sort of melt into the pot," she said.

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — Rose Kennedy, the 93-year-old matriarch of the Kennedy clan, had a birthday wish fulfilled when her family gave her a $1 million check for a home for the retarded in Wisconsin where her eldest daughter has lived for 40 years. Family members held a party for Mrs. Kennedy on Sunday, complete with a birthday cake and a rendition of "Happy Birthday." Her birthday was on Friday. Besides numerous grandchildren, the festivities were attended by Mrs. Kennedy's only living son, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., her daughters Eunice Shriver and Jean Smith, and Ethel Kennedy, wife of assassinated Sen. Robert M. Kennedy. Kennedy said the money will be donated to St. Coletta School in Jefferson, Wis., which has provided his sister, Rosemary Kennedy, 65, with "spiritual, cultural and loving care" for four decades. The gift is intended to establish the country's first program to develop care and activities for elderly mentally retarded people. LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. talked his way out of the hospital where he has been recovering from triple bypass heart surgery and a lung complication, his surgeon says. The 49-year-old governor, with a small bandage on his throat to cover a hole where a respirator tube had been installed, left University of Kentucky Medical Center on Sunday for his Cave Hill estate. But his surgeon, Dr. Edward P. Todd, said a nurse would stay with the governor for at least a few days to supervise his recovery. Todd said he had planned to keep Brown hospitalized two more days, but the governor argued convincingly to be allowed to return to work.

LONDON (AP) — Former Empress of Iran Farah Diba says she has little social life and although she is "still very rich," continues to be concerned about money. "I have to worry about bills, traveling, education, health, like any other housewife on a limited budget," the widow of deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, 44, said in London's Sunday Telegraph. "Of course wealth is relative and compared to a lot of people, I'm still very rich," she said. "But nothing like
