

Jobless rate soars after local cuts

By JEFF LANGLEY
Senior Writer

Pampa's unemployment rate skyrocketed to a modern-day record during the month of June, as more than one of every 10 workers here was out of a job, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

The unemployment rate in Pampa jumped to 10.2 percent during June, and Gray County's rate increased to 11.4 percent, the highest rates recorded here since the Depression, according to TEC officials.

The local unemployment rates were higher than both the state and national averages.

The latest unemployment rate for Pampa, which was released Monday, increased 1.7 percent over the previous month, while the county's rate jumped 2.8 percent during the period.

Dwain Adcock, labor-market analyst for the TEC in Amarillo, said a "pretty sizable layoff" at a "large manufacturing firm" he declined to identify here just prior to a June 12 unemployment survey caused the giant leap in the number of people out of work. He said students who couldn't land a job this summer also added to the unemployment rate.

Ray Hupp, vice president of Ingersoll-Rand, denied that his firm had another round of layoffs during June. He said the last outright job cuts at the plant were announced in March.

According to an informed source, however, a large portion of the local plant's employees, including some executives, now work for two weeks and are off for two weeks each month. Most Ingersoll employees file unemployment claims during the two weeks each month they aren't working, the source said.

The local figures for Pampa and Gray County are released one month behind the latest figures for the state and nation. During July, the unemployment rate in Texas was at 8.3

percent. The rate nationwide for July stood at 9.4 percent. When the nationwide oil slump hit the local economy, Ingersoll and other local oil-related industries began the layoffs that have pushed the unemployment rate up about seven to eight percentage points above the average figures recorded since the Depression.

Ingersoll-Rand, a manufacturer of mobile oil rigs and high-quality metals, announced its first round of massive layoffs in June, 1982. The company has continued to slash its labor force as the oil slowdown continues. Before the layoffs, the plant employed about 1,000 workers. About half of that number has been cut off outright, while most of the remaining employees work on the reduced work schedules.

Canadian's YMCA building plans delayed for at least three weeks

CANADIAN - Construction of Canadian's new YMCA center will be delayed at least three weeks for redesign after it was learned the low bids on the building came to a quarter million dollars more than the budget allowed.

Canadian's YMCA board of directors, who met Monday afternoon for the bid approval, were told by architect Pat Tunnell of Amarillo that he would literally have to go "back to the drawing board" to rework the plans for the gymnasium addition to what used to be the old Hemphill County Hospital.

The board bought the hospital in January of 1981 to convert it into the YMCA center, and began making plans. The plans, drawn up by Tunnell, were for a large gymnasium made of tilt-up concrete panels 29-feet high, handball courts, locker rooms and showers, saunas, whirlpool baths, and areas for spectators at events. The old hospital building is a one-story V-shaped structure, and the gymnasium would have to be added to the existing building.

A budget of $720,000 was allocated for construction, the plans were drawn, and the bids were advertised for, but Tunnell told the board the minimum bids came in at "right at $1 million."

Discussing possible cost-cutting methods to bring construction back within the budget, the board members and Tunnell abandoned the idea of concrete tilt-up panels in favor of less expensive concrete block construction, scrapped a planned $8,000 public address system for the building, cut down on the number of square feet in the new building, and dropped the roof from 29 feet to 20 feet.

YMCA Executive Director Steven Ahlstrand said $600,000 of the required money was already in hand through private donations and matching grants, and feels the rest of the $720,000 would be no problem to raise.

Of the cost of construction, local (Canadian) subcontractors will receive nearly $400,000 for heating, cooling, plumbing, electrical, mechanical and concrete materials work, the board was told.

The board will meet again August 29 to look at the revised bids.

Woodrow and his boss

PETALUMA, Calif. (AP) — Lu Lu's no mutt, and she stunned pageant judges with her unusual, eye-catching body — utterly hairless, except for her eyelashes.

The Chinese crested took on some real dogs Monday to win the purebred division of the World Champion Ugly Dog Contest.

But Lu Lu didn't go on to compete for the overall ugliest title, won by Woodrow, an honest-to-goodness mutt whose admirers have to admit looks a bit like a stuffed sausage.

The 30 canine contestants from around the state were judged by the ungainly appearance of their rumps and the scruffiness of their coats. The more misproportioned their bodies, the more unappealing their snouts, the better.

The triumphant Woodrow, a terrier-corgi mix, is "really ugly," said William Wright, one of three judges at the Sonoma-Marin Fairgrounds on Sunday. "The body is ugly — it's just ugly all over."

After taking the title, the black-and-gray mutt waddled off panting, leaving his master Jim Cornwell of Petaluma with a trophy and a 25-pound bag of dog food.

Woman shoots would-be rapist, escapes harm

SEGUIN, Texas (AP) — A woman awakened by a man who bumped her bed while she slept shot the intruder as he advanced, fired twice more as he struggled for the gun and a fourth time as he tried to flee through a door, police said.

Police said they found the man collapsed and bleeding early Monday not far from the apartment door, sent him to Guadalupe Valley Memorial Hospital.

He was later transferred to Methodist Hospital in San Antonio, 30 miles west of here.

Hospital officials in San Antonio said a bullet was lodged in the man's spine and he may be permanently paralyzed.

Seguin police detective Reno Reiley told the San Antonio Express that the 35-year-old nurse, who police would not identify, said the intruder threatened to rape her and then kill her 4-year-old son.

He said the woman told the man she wanted to get a tissue from a nightstand and pulled a pistol instead.

The woman said the man then came at her and she fired once, sending the wounded intruder staggering out of the room, reports said.

The would-be victim said she followed the man as he made his way through the still-darkened apartment toward the front door where he turned and a struggle ensued, investigators said.

The man shoved the nurse, sending her reeling into the kitchen where he grabbed her and tried to wrestle the gun away, she told officers.

The man strained to turn the barrel of the weapon toward her, the woman recalled, but she managed to keep the gun pointed at her assailant and pulled the trigger twice during the struggle in the kitchen.

As the man fled out the door, the woman told officers, she went to the door and fired another shot at him.

The woman fled to neighboring apartments with her son and a neighbor called police.

Canadian awards paving contract

By JULIA CLARK
Staff Writer

CANADIAN - At a regular meeting of the Canadian city council Monday night, the council awarded a bid of $47,664 to Lewis Construction of Pampa for paving and drainage improvement on Dogwood Street. The project is subject to annexation and dedication of the portion of the street to be improved.

A $1530 bid to "Dub" Adcock was awarded for a public address system for the council meeting room.

Subject to appraisal of city hall to determine the present value, the council decided to raise the liability insurance on the building to approximately $450,000.

The application for a Federal Home Administration loan for the water and sewer project has been postponed, subject to getting the water lines and meters completely installed. According to FHA specifications, the city can show only a 15-20 percent loss of water from the pumps to the meters. There is currently a 45 percent loss.

In other business the council agreed to apply to the Criminal Justice Division through the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission for a grant for the Canadian Police Department. A resolution to apply for a grant to the Texas Department of Community Affairs for street paving was also approved.

The seal coat project for Canadian streets will start August 22, according to an announcement. And "Bert" Kelly was appointed administrative assistant for the streets, park and sanitation department.

weather

The high for Monday was 93 degrees recorded at 4 p.m. The overnight low, recorded at 6:01 this morning, was 66. The forecast calls for fair and warm conditions through Wednesday. Today's high will be in the mid 90s.

PUC ruling puts Ma Bell's rate hike on 'hold'

By JAMES R. KING

AUSTIN (AP) — Regardless of the final outcome of Southwestern Bell's record-breaking rate hike request, the telephone company will not be able to charge higher rates at least until sometime next year, a utility commission examiner says.

The phone company wanted to raise the basic home service charge in Texas by 60 to 82 percent beginning Oct. 31 — and much more later on.

But hearing examiner Jacqueline Holmes said no in a four-page ruling handed down Monday.

She rejected a request by Bell that the utility commission consider for now only $497 million of the phone company's record $1.7 billion rate hike request it filed in June.

Ms. Holmes said she would keep the phone company's case intact, and hear the entire $1.7 billion case it on its merits Oct. 11, as scheduled. She said if Southwestern Bell can meet its anticipated filing schedule it "will probably be able to bond rates (put higher rates into effect under bond) by late January."

She also said the commission could authorize interim rates Jan. 1 — a rare move in which higher rates are allowed temporarily, on an emergency basis, for companies that would otherwise operate at a cash loss.

Bonded and interim rates have to be partially refunded to customers if the final rates approved by the commission turn out to be less.

Bell spokesman Dale Johnson said his company's lawyers would decide by the end of the week whether to appeal Ms. Holmes' ruling to the full three-member commission.

The problem for Bell is that most of its rate case is related to a court order that it break away from its parent corporation, AT&T, on Jan. 1, giving up most long distance revenues.

But Southwestern Bell has not been able to back up its request for divestiture-related expenses to the satisfaction of PUC examiners.

So the phone company had tried to get the commission to rule only on $497 million of the request for the time being — money not related to divestiture — in hopes of at least being able to put those higher rates into effect under bond beginning Oct. 31.

Telephone company officials had said they would go after the rest of the money later, after they know more about divestiture.

Utilities ordinarily are allowed to raise rates under bond 125 days after they file for an increase. But in this case, the 125-day "time clock" has not started running yet, because the PUC examiner has ruled Bell's filing is not yet accompanied by sufficient documents to back it up.

Bell remains under an Oct. 3 deadline to provide more information on divestiture-related increases, and if it does not meet that schedule, the hearing would have to be held later than Oct. 11. That, in turn, could further delay imposition of higher telephone rates.

"This case must go forward and it should include all the aspects of the original filing — the 'business as usual' changes as well as the changes anticipated to result from divestiture and access issues," ruled examiner Holmes.

"The commission is facing a truly unusual situation in this docket. The telecommunications industry of 1984 will be radically different from the one which had historically existed; it is the duty of this commission to protect the public interest going forward, not looking back," she said.

Johnson said the news was not all bad for Southwestern Bell. "While the time frames may still be at issue, we are pleased that she is going forward with it," he said.

PUC general counsel Allen King, who represents the public interest at the agency, had supported Bell's bid to get the commission to go ahead with the "business as usual" part of the case that Bell can document today.

As it stands, the ruling "does not allow them to have an effective date (for a rate hike) for the foreseeable future," King said. "On this issue, I tend to agree (with Southwestern Bell) that they should have an effective date on the $497 million request."

Last year, the phone company asked for $471 million more in revenue and was granted a $249 million increase.

Don Butler, a utility lawyer representing the Texas Municipal League, said he was glad the phone company cannot put higher rates into effect as soon as it had hoped, but he added, "The bad news is the case is still on the docket."

Butler has asked the commission to dismiss it without a hearing.

Libya keeps bombing Chad, warns U.S. it will shoot down AWACS

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) - The government says Libyan warplanes shattered a two-day lull and dive-bombed the rebel-besieged outpost of Faya-Largeau, and Libya is threatening to down U.S. surveillance planes sent to help Chad's army.

Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat said the Libyan planes raided the town 500 miles north of the capital N'Djamena in three waves Monday afternoon, blasting residential huts in support of Libyan-backed rebels ringing the town. He gave no casualty report.

It was the first reported bombing since Saturday of Faya-Largeau, a strategic desert oasis of 10,000 people in this destitute war-ravaged former French colony. The fighting has become a focal point of confrontation between Libya and the United States.

Faya-Largeau has been under siege since the end of July, when President Hissene Habre's forces chased out insurgents led by former President Goukouni Oueddei after the rebels started a new offensive.

Goukouni's men regrouped with Libyan air support and have repeatedly shelled and bombed the oasis to force the loyalists trapped there to surrender.

Libya's government has denied active military involvement in the insurgency, despite witnesses' accounts of Libyan bomb runs on Faya-Largeau and Western intelligence reports that suggest a heavy Libyan role in the fighting.

The U.S. State Department says 2,000 Libyan troops are with the rebels besieging Faya-Largeau.

In N'Djamena, Habre's men on Monday paraded before Western diplomats and reporters a Libyan pilot they claimed was captured over the weekend when a Soviet-built Sukhoi fighter-bomber was downed near Faya-Largeau. But the Libyan news agency JANA claimed Habre's troops had seized the man two years ago.

The pilot, Maj. Abdassalam Sharfadine, was handcuffed and guarded by soldiers with submachine guns as he told reporters he commanded a squadron of Sukhoi-22s and flew at least three missions over Faya-Largeau.

He also said his warplane was supplied with napalm and fragmentation bombs for use in the fighting.

JANA reported from the Libyan capital, Tripoli, that Col. Moammar Khadafi's gunners would shoot down two U.S. AWACS radar surveillance planes sent to the region "wherever they may be," if they "in any way have effect over Arab Libyan territories." The dispatch did not elaborate.

Murder suspect's brother ends up charged with killing during trial

HOUSTON (AP) - A man who went to court to testify in his brother's murder trial ended up behind bars himself as two witnesses identified him as the killer.

Isaiah Robledo, 33, of Pasadena, was to have gone on trial Monday for the May 14, 1981, shooting of Juan Anzaldua, 22.

His brother, Isaia Robledo, 28, earlier had told police his brother did the shooting, which allegedly took place during an argument over a pool game. He had been subpoenaed to testify in the trial.

But before the day was over, Isaia was under arrest and Leopoldo was on his way home.

He (Isaia) was surprised," said John Crow, the defendant's lawyer. "When he came to court, the last thing he expected someone to do was arrest him."

Before Isaia Robledo arrived in court Monday, two other witnesses showed up.

East Texan studies worms in his trees

By BOB HOWIE
Longview Morning Journal

PITTSBURG, Texas (AP) — East Texans are a hodgepodge of experts on topics ranging from possumology to waterwitching.

Bud Steger, for instance, is a student of worms. But Steger's crawlers aren't the plain-vanilla brand.

His are plucked from trees.

"I guess a conservative estimate might be that we have almost 5,000 catalpa trees out there," said Steger, resident Pittsburg catalpa expert.

"In the 20 years they've been out there, I suppose we've had more than 100,000 worms," he said.

Steger, a jocular man with a little boyish gleam in his eyes, will have you believe he knows very little about the green and black worms inhabiting his grove.

And that's typical of most East Texas experts, who really know what they are talking about.

What began as a hobby has turned into a semi-scientific study of the worms, their growth patterns, production of the trees and their life cycles.

And, any fisherman who knows the difference between a bucketmouth and a crappie will tell you that catalpa worms are considered gourmet fish food.

"I've seen the catalpa moth several times, but I've never seen one lay eggs," Steger said.

"A friend once said we ought to apply for one of those half-million dollar grants to study the life cycle of catalpa worms," he said, laughing. "You know, with what all the government gives out for studies, we just might get one."

Steger, who loves fishing almost as much as quail hunting, started out with a few trees planted along a small creek running across his property.

Then, as trees were pruned, more were planted and pretty soon, a grove got started.

By accident, though, Steger discovered how to really make his grove come up to snuff.

"One day, I was out looking at the top of one of the trees which was several feet above my head," Steger said. "Well, I couldn't figure out whether to get the worms out of the top or just lose them."

"So, I grabbed ahold of the tree and bent it over and the tree, as I bent it, twisted," he said. "I just laid it over against the limb of another tree and left it there."

"Well, sir, about a week or so later, I looked out there and saw a whole bunch of new sprouts had sprung out of the bent-over limb," he said. "I started doing that to all the trees and that's how they got so thick. It kind of looks like a vineyard in there."

Catalpa moths lay eggs on the underside of catalpa tree leaves, the eggs hatch into worms, which gorge and grow on the leaves and later fall off and burrow into the ground, emerge a short time later as moths and repeat the process.

"I've spent hours down there watching the worms, and nature has a way of protecting them and helping them along," he said. "We might have thousands of worms, but in all these years, I've only seen maybe a half-dozen moths."

"I've got a sneakin' feeling that nature determines ahead of time which of the worms will become moths and I've noticed that every now and then some of the worms are colored differently," he said. "I've always wondered whether that had anything to do with it."

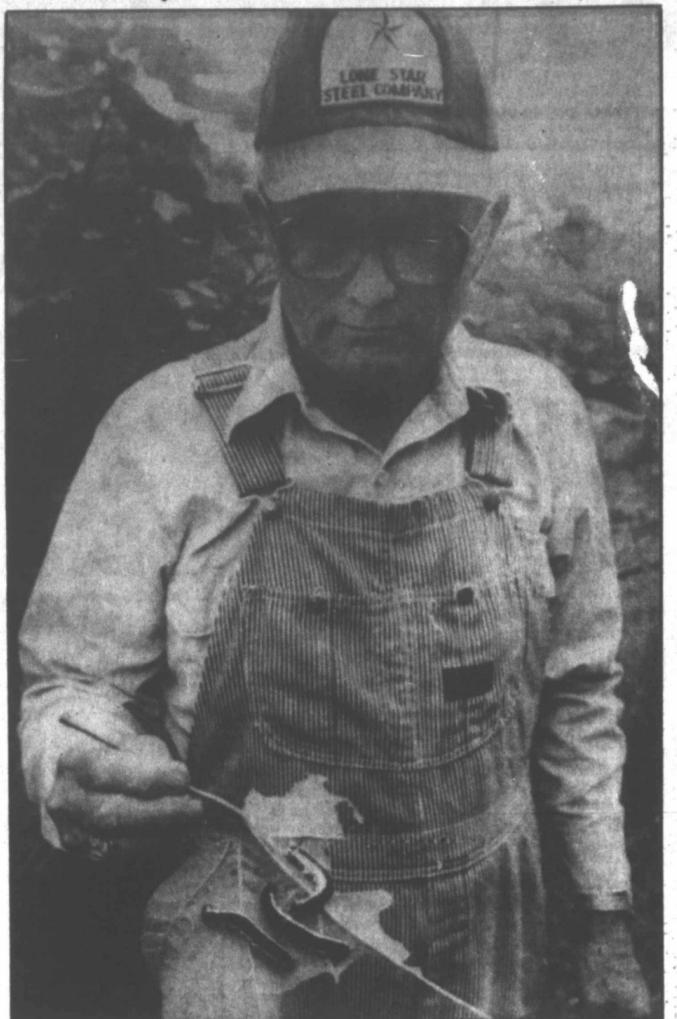

Steger isn't real keen about selling his worms, mainly because of the weird hours most fishermen keep.

Like a lot of the vegetables growing in his almost three-acre garden, the worms are just a pastime for Steger and he gives most of them away. Lots are frozen, though, for those times when catalpas aren't plentiful.

There's a selfish, but cagey, motive behind Steger's catalpa ranching enterprise, however.

"The way I figure it, since catalpa worms are real popular to fish with, then when I get really old — I'm only 65 now — and folks come around to get worms, then I can get them to take me fishing," Steger said, grinning.

Giveaway cheese, butter wind up in store

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Cases of butter and cheese filling a 7-foot-high cooler in the rear of a Juarez store all bore the same markings: "Donated by the United States Department of Agriculture for food help programs."

Stamped in capital letters, the cases and individual packages read: "MAY NOT BE SOLD OR EXCHANGED."

But the American butter and cheese was for sale Monday at Super Henry, a small convenience store just across the Paso del Norte bridge, the El Paso Times reported.

The bargain butter was selling for 30 cents a pound — about 15 cents cheaper than Mexican butter, which often is hard to find, and about one-fifth the price of butter in the United States, the newspaper said.

Word that USDA products were on sale in Juarez surprised officials involved with the distribution of surplus commodities, a USDA program administered by the Texas Department of Human Resources.

"I have no idea how they got them," James R. Chilton, DHR's commodity distributor for West Texas, said Monday from his office in Lubbock.

The store manager at Super Henry offered no help.

"I can't give you any information," he said nervously after ushering a reporter and photographer away from his cooler.

When asked his identity, he said "I have no name."

Moments earlier, a cash register clerk said the products were bought in Juarez from an individual he did not know.

Chilton said even if the seller were known to authorities, little could be done about it now. But that will change, he promised.

"All we can do now is turn it over to fraud and investigate, but we don't know of any state law against the sale, and USDA doesn't know of any federal law," he said. "But under the new program, it is against the law."

Chilton and other officials were unaware when the new law governing the Emergency Food Assistance Program takes effect or of the penalties for selling commodities that are supposed to be free to the poor.

Super Henry's cooler contained at least two 32-pound cases of butter, eight 30-pound cases of American processed cheese and 27 blocks of cheese weighing 5 pounds each, the Times reported.

The butter was selling for about 30 cents, and the cheese blocks were priced at about $3. USDA values the butter at $1.52 a pound and the cheese blocks at $7.35 each, the newspaper said.

Until June 6, USDA commodities were being distributed by two El Paso agencies. Distribution was halted while new eligibility guidelines were written and implemented.

Alderman Joe Divis said he thinks the stray commodities came from one of the agencies. He said he received complaints that one of them was giving away large quantities to anyone who wanted it.

Speakers criticize administration

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Republicans won't be able in the 1984 presidential election to get away with claims that they care about Hispanics' interests, representatives to two national conventions meeting here told.

Charles Manatt, the national Democratic chairman, said President Reagan "is going to have to do more than serve tacos and enchiladas to Queen Elizabeth" — a reference to a menu the president planned during the queen's recent visit to the United States.

Gov. Toney Anaya, D-New Mexico, said Reagan will be judged not by his promises but by "the higher unemployment levels, the cuts in food stamps, the cuts in education funds, the backtracking on 30 years of civil rights progress."

Manatt's criticism of Republicans' concern for Hispanics came during the National Conference of State Legislatures, which began here Monday.

Anaya addressed about 200 Hispanic leaders in San Antonio for a national Hispanic convention.

The Hispanic leaders prepared today for speeches by Vice President George Bush and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

Anaya applauded a move to register a million Hispanic voters by the 1984 presidential election, which would raise the number of registered voters to more than 70 percent.

"The hands that historically have picked the lettuce in this country and the hands that historically have picked the cotton in this country are the hands that can pick the next president of this country," Anaya said.

The added voting clout could swing election results in Texas, California, New Mexico and

New York — states with large numbers of Hispanics, the New Mexico governor said.

The support of Hispanics was crucial in the recent victories of Federico Pena as the mayor of Denver and Harold Washington, a black, as mayor of Chicago, Anaya said.

"Politicians of all kinds are courting us. We are the second-largest and fastest-growing minority in America," Anaya added.

"We are sending out the word that Hispanics are not going to be satisfied with a symbolic 'in-house Mexican' and that we're not going to be satisfied with a verbal commitment for a few more dollars for bilingual education," Anaya said.

At the National Conference of State Legislatures, Manatt said Reagan will find Hispanics demanding "that he replace his rhetoric with reality and make major shifts in budget priorities."

State Rep. Gonzalo Barrientos, a Democrat from Austin, said Reagan's claims of economic recovery ring hollow in Hispanic communities.

"What recovery? Recovery for whom? The rich?" Barrientos asked. He compared the Reagan economic plans to giving the people porridge with the finger, adding "You don't get much to eat that way."

Reagan was in San Antonio in May for a Mexican-American celebration. Bush was on the agenda for the Hispanic conference today, and Reagan has scheduled trips to El Paso, Texas and Tampa, Fla.

"The Hispanic community won't be fooled by the Reagan administration's cynical attempt to win their votes with a public relations blitz, while ignoring the pressing needs of 20 million Americans," Manatt said.

White says Block could give drought aid by nod of head

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block could give West Texas farmers and ranchers drought relief with just "a nod of his head."

White commented shortly after he asked Block to reconsider his denial of federal drought relief for West Texas counties.

"Anybody who has witnessed the devastation in that area should recognize very quickly that this is a matter of grave concern, not only to those people there but to our nation," White said.

"Secretary Block could have by the nod of his head given some large measure of relief to those farmers and ranchers who are impacted so heavily by this drought," he said.

White told Block in a letter that the drought-stricken area — "which is not a great deal smaller than your home state of Illinois" — would normally have received 6.26 inches of rain in the last six months. However, Van Horn has had less than an inch, Fort Stockton only 1.26 inches, Pecos, 1.48 inches and Presidio only 1.3 inches.

White later told reporters that Block's farm in northwest Illinois has had more than 16 inches of rain this year, including two inches in June and another two inches in July.

"His farm has had more rain each month in the summer than our drought area has had all year," White said.

"It was an arbitrary decision on his part and it's one that he can change," the governor said.

White noted that Block and his family recently make a much-publicized effort to live on the average food stamp allotment.

"We have just seen him survive on $8 of food this past week, but we don't know that he could survive on the one inch rain that those farmers and ranchers in West Texas have received this year," White said.

"He would be a pretty dry secretary."

He said West Texas ranchers have been forced to buy expensive feed and, in some cases, even haul in water when cattle tanks dried up. "Now, ranchers are being forced to sell herds ahead of schedule, which will have a devastating effect on the economy of West Texas as well as a significant impact on the nation's consumers of beef," White said.

White suggested some relief might come from "the large stockpiles of corn stored by the USDA in the Texas Panhandle since the grain embargo of 1980."

Put an end to the paper chase

We all know that the purpose of government is to print and shuffle paper.

No wonder, then, that some of the highest paid government workers in Washington are printers.

The General Accounting Office reports that printers in the Government Printing Office, which publishes the Congressional Record and other federal publications, earn 42 percent more than other government printers.

And what's more, they want more money. The Reagan administration, elected to cut paper shuffling, doesn't want to give them a raise.

Here's a solution. Both the government and the printers union should hold firm to their demands at all costs, until there is no alternative but for the printers to go on strike for a day. Then, when the presses stop, America would experience the unique test of a government without paper.

Imagine it: a bureaucracy that would have to make decisions in the real world, not on paper; a Congress that would have to listen to congressmen's remarks on the floor of Congress, not read them in the Congressional Record (which frequently is "adjusted"); a president who would have to write momentous proclamations by hand, not run them off on a printing press.

One can hear the outcry already. Bureaucrats weeping at their clean desks, congressmen thundering in the well of the House, the president borrowing a mimeograph machine from Republican headquarters. While the Republic, unfettered by paper, rolls on mightily and smoothly.

Ah, a government without paper is a fantasy too beautiful to imagine. We'll never see it. A GPO strike would be illegal.

It's time union members grew up

By PAUL HARVEY

This is going to sound political. I regret, but cannot avoid, that Paul Harvey was a disciple of supply-side economics before our present president was.

President Reagan matured - as many of our college professors did - under President Franklin Roosevelt.

From him they came to believe that big government, taxing and spending, ensures the "public welfare."

President Reagan was 30 before he recognized that the FDR formula for prosperity had outlived its usefulness.

Workers were getting paid off with a two-bit buck. That is when he shifted gears, changed political parties and began to urge what we now call "Reaganomics."

Essentially, Reaganomics prescribes less taxes; more take-home pay for producers, corporate and individual.

And eventual weaning of the free-loaders. In its third year, Reaganomics has already proved so successful in reviving our economy that its critics are shushed and at least some are being converted.

Americans are making more and buying more without paying more for what they buy.

Where durable goods orders can soar 5 1/2 percent in one month while consumer prices are increasing a scant two-tenths of one percent - then we are managing the miracle many economists believed impossible: "Recovery without inflation."

Your dollar has shrunk only 2.6 cents the past 12 months; the least shrinkage in 16 years!

Further, our American economy the second quarter was growing at an annual rate of 8.7 percent.

Another thing: Wages have been rising faster than prices. Workers again have incentive to work.

After allowing for inflation, workers' incomes improved each of the last three months.

Economists of the FDR school are now silent or conceding that Reaganomics works. With incentive we will produce more so that we can be paid more and so that what we produce can cost less.

So marketplace economics is no longer on trial; now we are already, restive workers in some key industries are seeking wage increases; auto workers for example.

If those increases race ahead of production increases, then each car will cost more and recovery could be short-circuited.

But American labor unions have more enlightened leaders than heretofore. Foreign competition taught them a painful but invaluable lesson - that for more pay to be worth more requires more production. If they can sell that to the membership, American workers are a match for any in the world!

He knew there was no simple solution for us.

By DON GRAFF

Some of us are going to miss Thomas Ostrom Enders. A lot. The physically imposing career diplomat has played a commensurately large role during the past two years in shaping American policy in Central America, particularly El Salvador, which has made him a convenient target for critics of that policy.

Enders came to his responsibilities with impressive foreign service credentials. He had previously held embassy posts in Stockholm and Belgrade and was ambassador to Canada during the Carter administration. There was also a stint in the early '70s in Phnom Penh which, according to reports, had greater military than diplomatic significance, involving as it did the targeting of American air strikes as Cambodia was following Vietnam down the tube.

The critics particularly liked that part. Would you buy a used policy from this man?

Yes indeed, Tom Enders had been around before January of 1981. But not around Latin America, which was very clear early in 1982 at a State Department press background briefing on the origins and development of the Salvadoran civil war. He either was unaware of or chose to ignore key points of the tragedy. Either way, it was a disturbing performance.

But he was willing to learn, which he demonstrated by embarking on a crash course in Spanish.

Apparently he proved a reasonably quick learner. I don't know about the Spanish, but by November of 1982 he seemed to be acquiring a much clearer perception of certain Salvadoran realities that eluded higher echelons of the Reagan administration.

While not completely abandoning the hardliners' preference for a military solution to the guerilla war, Enders began advocating a "two-track" approach which would also encourage negotiations with less-extreme rebel factions.

That, apparently, was his undoing. Enders has been relieved of his Latin American responsibilities at State. Going with him is the department's other key figure in shaping Salvadoran policy during the past two years - Ambassador Deane R. Hinton, who also, on the evidence, proved too competent a learner on the job.

Hinton had been sent to San Salvador as an antidote to Carter administration envoy Robert White, who had pushed political compromise over military confrontation and had been harshly critical of Salvadoran right-wingers responsible for most of the violence directed at the civilian population.

But by last November, Hinton was warning the Salvadoran establishment that it could continue to indulge in "gorilla" tactics only at the peril of eventually losing American backing.

Hinton's remarks were reported to have had the approval of Enders. But they had not been cleared with the White house, which promptly disavowed any change in "substance or style" of American policy that might be read into them.

The changing of the Salvadoran guard is being read as a decisive shift in primary responsibility for Central American policy from State to the White House. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who from her command post off the East River has for some time had the inside line into the Oval Office, is more than ever the intellectual - if that is the word - force behind policy.

There is, of course, no need for the ambassador to learn anything about Latin America. She already knows all that needs to be known, especially whom she likes and whom she doesn't.

There is no accounting for taste and as an individual she is entitled to hers. But it is a matter of public concern that her friends are more likely to be found in Buenos Aires and Santiago than in Mexico City and Caracas, capitals in which reasonable facsimiles of democratic governments are attempting to find a way out of the military bind for the Reagan administration despite itself.

The outlook, never bright in Central America, is looking ever darker.

It is not easy to feel sympathy for Thomas Enders. But there is reason to regret his departure in the circumstances. He did come to comprehend the complexities of the Central American situation, and some of the dangers of an obsession with deceptively simple solutions.

Always in short supply in Washington, there's that much less of that around with his departure.

You should reach out ...reach out and kill!

By ART BUCHWALD

It usually comes at 10 or 11 at night, maybe when you're in bed or watching TV or in the bathtub. The phone rings, and keeps ringing. You remember the kids are out and you break your neck to answer it.

"Hello, hello" you shout into the receiver.

And then you hear this voice (it's usually a he, though it could be a she). "This is the Blank Upholstery Company. If you are in need of having your furniture reupholstered or new drapes hung in your living room, leave your number at the sound of the beep and one of our salesmen will call you tomorrow morning."

You have just become the victim of an obscene junk telephone call.

Berry's World

The obscene junk telephone caller is now getting through to every home in America. No one is safe from being awakened out of a sound sleep or being taken away from his dinner, or even making a baby, while the obscene junk telephone caller is out there in some dark room selling his services, his subscriptions, and making his pitches or charity and political contributions, insurance policies, gold coins, and even discount telephone equipment.

But it's not a person that is calling. It's an obscene computer - one that has been programmed to start speaking as soon as it hears your voice, and is prepared to dial the next number as soon as you hang up.

Getting an unlisted number will not protect you from the obscene telephone computer. It just goes from number to number with 30 or 40 tapes spitting out its filthy messages.

How can you avenge yourself against this new George Orwell Frankenstein?

There is a solution. It takes patience and a little detective work, but this is how I recently got back at one of the obscene junk calls.

Instead of hanging up on the computer, I listened to the entire message. The voice wanted me to subscribe to a magazine, at the sound of the beep, which would give me a chance to win $100,000 in their sweepstakes. I wrote down the name of the magazine.

The next day I bought it and looked up the name of the publisher. I then called the magazine's office and said I had a gift of flowers to send the publisher's wife and wanted his home address. The secretary gave it to me and I found his telephone number in New Rochelle.

That night I waited until midnight and made my first call. "Hi," I said in a bright voice. "This is the Axmo Muffler Company. We would like to give you a free estimate on our latest muffler, guaranteed for the life of your car. It is an opportunity you can't pass up..." The publisher hung up on me.

I waited a half hour and called back. "I'm sorry to disturb you but we're conducting a survey on zits for the Acne Institute. Do you have any relatives or friends in New Rochelle who have been afflicted by this disease?" He hung up again.

Every half hour I made another call. I told him I was selling roofing by mail; I informed him that if he could name the first president of the U.S. he would get a case of dog food at cost; I inquired if he needed mulch for his grass; and if he was interested in Mexican tax free bonds.

By four o'clock the man was a blithering idiot. "Why are you doing this to me?" he cried. "Because," I said, in my most obscene voice, "you're doing it to us. Stop your junk computer and I'll stop my telephone calls."

"I'll call the police!" he screamed. "You may call them as soon as you hear the beep," I told him.

I could have sworn I heard the publisher crying at the other end of the line.

If you want to do the same thing, be my guest. And if you can't get the big shot who instigated a junk call at his home at night, keep calling him every hour at his office.

Since the government won't stop the obscene calls, the people must take justice into their own hands. It's time every free American shouted into his phone, "BEEP YOUR JUNK CALLS, I'M NOT GOING TO TAKE IT ANY MORE."

Today in History

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Aug. 9, the 221st day of 1983. There are 144 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 9, 1974, Gerald Ford was sworn as the nation's 38th president as the resignation of Richard Nixon took effect.

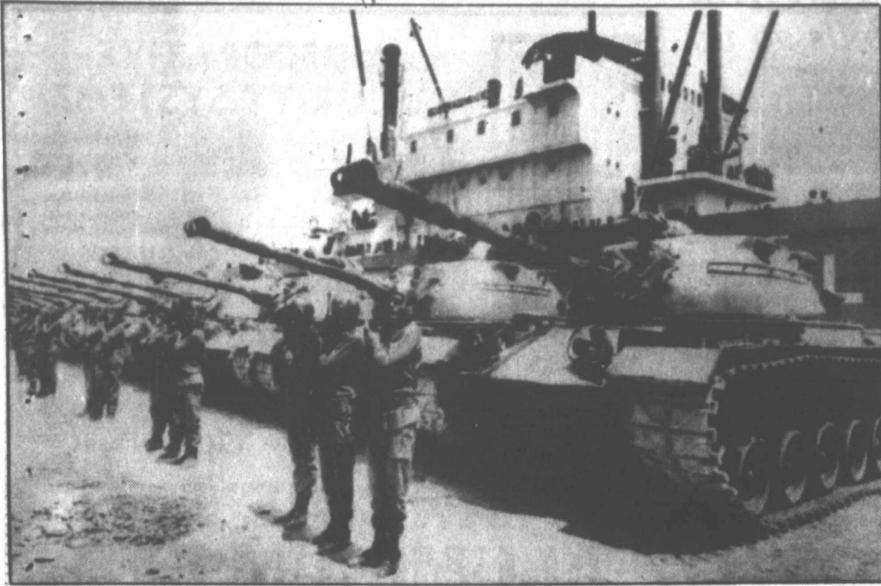

On this date:

In 1831, the first steam locomotive in the United States made a run between the cities of Albany and Schenectady in New York.

In 1942, Britain arrested Indian nationalist Mohandas Gandhi, not releasing him until 1944.

In 1945, the United States dropped its second atomic bomb, destroying much of Nagasaki, Japan, near the end of World War II.

Israel hunts escaped prisoners as McFarlane seeks Saudi help

By The Associated Press
Israeli jets and troops combed southern Lebanon today after a jailbreak at the Ansar detention camp, and the Lebanese government was reported willing to cancel its troop-withdrawal pact with Israel and make a deal with Syria.

A military spokesman at the Israeli army press center in the Beirut suburb of Yarz said prisoners escaped through a hole in the camp's fence overnight in what was believed the first breakout from Ansar since the Israeli invasion in June 1982.

The spokesman said he could not give the number or nationality of the escapees. About 5,000 Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners are held in Ansar, 35 miles south of Beirut in Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon.

Travelers from the area reported the Israelis fired more than 125 flares over the camp and crisscrossed the area with jets and troop patrols.

Prisoners reportedly have been restless because of the slow pace of indirect negotiations between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization and the International Red Cross to arrange a prisoner swap.

In Beirut, the independent An-Nahar newspaper today reported that Lebanon will abandon its U.S.-mediated troop withdrawal agreement with Israel if the Syrians agree to a timetable for removing their troops from Lebanese territory.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified Lebanese official as saying President Amin Gemayel's government had outlined the Lebanese position to U.S. special envoy Robert C. McFarlane, who is trying to negotiate withdrawal of all foreign armies from Lebanon.

The newspaper said McFarlane also was told that if Israel acts sooner than Syria and sets a timetable for pulling out its forces, the Lebanese Parliament would ratify the troop-withdrawal agreement, arranged on May 17.

Israel has asked for quick ratification of the pact but has also said it will not set a timetable for withdrawal and will not honor the agreement unless the Syrians agree to pull out.

In east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, Syrian gunners shot down a pilotless Israeli reconnaissance plane Monday. There was no word on any Israeli retaliation.

McFarlane, stymied by Syrian President Hafez Assad's steadfast refusal to withdraw his 50,000 soldiers from Lebanon, conferred with King Fahd in the Saudi resort city of Taif.

Arab diplomatic sources in Saudi Arabia said McFarlane discussed a new U.S. plan to guarantee Syria's security if it withdraws from Lebanon, but they gave no details.

The Syrians have demanded that Israel withdraw its 28,000 troops from central and southern Lebanon unconditionally before they consider a pullout.

McFarlane, during a stop in Damascus, proposed to Assad on Sunday that Syrian and Israeli forces agree to disengage as a first step toward total withdrawal from Lebanon, but a member of the Syrian Cabinet said Assad rejected the proposal.

"Robert McFarlane came to us with an empty bag," Syrian Culture Minister Njah Attar wrote Monday in the government newspaper Tishrin. "We refuse the policy of partial withdrawal because it consecrates the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon. We also refuse a disengagement in the Bekaa because it helps the policy of partial withdrawal."

McFarlane also apparently failed to soften Syria's opposition to the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal pact signed May 17. Assad was quoted by the state-run Syrian media as having told McFarlane the withdrawal agreement "steals Lebanon's independence and turns it into an Israeli protectorate."

Syria has opposed the agreement because it calls for Lebanon to recognize Israel and provides for joint Israeli-Lebanese patrols in southern Lebanon near the Israeli border. The pact also stipulates that Israel will not pull its troops out unless Syria withdraws its forces.

Israel invaded Lebanon 14 months ago with the stated aim of destroying Palestinian guerrilla bases it said were launching points for raids on northern Israeli settlements. The Syrians have been in Lebanon since the end of the 1975-76 civil war.

The Israelis have said they plan to pull their forces back about 20 miles south of Beirut, withdrawing from areas where Israeli soldiers are being attacked by Palestinian guerrillas and their allies.

Oklahoma town wins praise at convention of state legislators

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A small Oklahoma town that seemed headed for oblivion when the state capital was moved — stolen, the locals say — has built itself into an arts center and tourist attraction, according to an official with the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

"It's going on all over the country. It happened in Guthrie and it can happen in other places," Clark Strickland of Denver on Monday told a committee of the National Conference of State Legislatures, holding its annual convention here.

As local officials told the story, Guthrie was on its way to statewide stardom after it sprang up in a one-day land rush and became the territorial and later state capital.

The prevailing attitude in 1907 when Guthrie became the capital of the 46th state was, "It was never going to end," according to Ralph McCalmont, president of the First National Bank of Guthrie.

The end came in 1910 when the state seal was picked up in a luxury car and hauled to Oklahoma City.

"There was little to boast about in Guthrie" until the locals went to work in the mid-1970s to revive the town, Oklahoma state Sen. Bill Dawson said Monday.

Guthrie sprang to life on April 22, 1889, during the one-day land rush that brought 15,000 people to the prairie.

In the town's boom years, it was such a good-time town that Carrie Nation "tore up some of her first bars" there, McCalmont said. While living in Guthrie, Nation published "The Hatchet," her prohibitionist newspaper.

Silent movie cowboy star Tom Mix tended bars and got his some of his acting training in Guthrie, and Lon Chaney worked as a stage hand at a Guthrie playhouse, according to McCalmont.

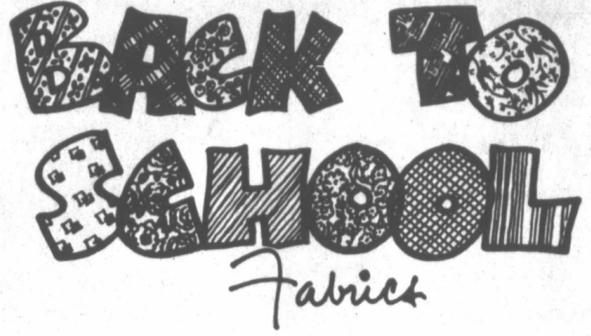

Guthrie drew eight railroads that brought 44 trains a day to town.

It was a "fool's paradise," McCalmont said.

In 1910, the southern Democrats who populated most of Oklahoma decided they didn't want their capital in the Republican town of Guthrie.

"For the next 50 or 60 years, Guthrie slept," McCalmont told the lawmakers.

Convicted murderer says he wants to die

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Larry Keith Robison, sentenced to death for one of five brutal killings near Lake Worth last year, has told a judge that he wishes to waive appeal and take his punishment "like a man."

In two letters since his July 22 conviction on a capital murder charge, Robison told State District Judge Charles Dickens that he sees no point in a drawn-out appeal process.

Robison was convicted and sentenced to die by lethal injection for the Aug. 10, 1982, shooting and stabbing death of Bruce Gardner, 33. Gardner was one of five found in two cottages near Lake Worth.

"I don't see any sense in sentencing me to death and then making me go through all this legal mumbo jumbo that may stretch out for years while I slowly waste away in a 5x8 cell," Robison wrote in his first letter.

"I believe I have a right to die without doing all that. I would appreciate it if you would go ahead and set a date for this thing so my family can go ahead and get on with their lives," he wrote.

Robison, who turns 26 Friday, is confined to the Tarrant County Jail awaiting a request for a new trial that normally proceeds an appeal. Appeals are automatic in death penalty cases.

In his letter of reply, Dickens told Robison is an appeal is required, but told him the case would be a top priority before the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Former KMBC-TV anchorwoman Christine Craft clowns around with one of the station's cameramen in Kansas City Monday after she was awarded $500,000 in her fraud and sex discrimination suit against KMBC. The jury found KMBC guilty of fraud and recommended that the presiding judge find the station guilty of sex discrimination. (AP Laserphoto)

Christine Craft is not sure if verdict will have much effect

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Anchorwoman Christine Craft, awarded $500,000 in a sex discrimination suit against her former employer, says she's glad she won but has no illusions that this is going to make a huge difference in TV news.

A federal jury deliberated 8 1/2 hours over two days before finding Metromedia Inc. guilty Monday of fraud and awarding Ms. Craft $375,000 in actual damages and $125,000 in punitive damages.

The four-woman, two-man jury also recommended that U.S. District Judge Joseph E. Stevens Jr. find that Metromedia committed sex discrimination. If Stevens accepts that recommendation Ms. Craft could receive further damages, but he is not expected to rule on the issue for at least a week.

The jury found Metromedia innocent of violating equal-pay laws when it paid her less than the television station's male co-anchor.

The $1.2 million suit by the 38-year-old Ms. Craft accused Metromedia, former owner of KMBC-TV in Kansas City, of demoting her in 1981 for being "too old, unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

The suit charged the company with fraud for misrepresenting the job when it hired Ms. Craft as co-anchor in January 1981, with sex discrimination and with violating equal-pay laws.

Jury foreman Kenneth W. Green said the panel made its decision because "we didn't want to see anyone else put through what she went through."

But Ms. Craft seemed less sure of the verdict's effect.

"I have no illusions, shall we say, that this is going to make a huge difference in TV news, but ... if it keeps one news director at one station someplace, somewhere, from doing the same thing, I hope it does that," she said.

Ms. Craft said she planned to return to her current anchoring job at KEYT-TV in Santa Barbara. Because KMBC was sold to the Hearst Corp. in May 1982, she called the part of her suit seeking reinstatement to her KMBC post a "moot point."

"I consider today a victory for civil rights in this country, for women's rights, for the rights of men and women journalists," said Ms. Craft in a news conference on the courthouse steps.

"I still know the difference between the American and National leagues and that I will defer to Clare Boothe Luce or Eric Sevareid ... but I will not defer to someone just because he or she happens to be better at basic hair spray."

Donald W. Giffin, attorney for Metromedia, declined comment on the verdict, but said an appeal was possible.

Jane Pauley of NBC's "Today" program said it was "awfully good news."

The fraud ruling was based on Ms. Craft's contention that Metromedia defrauded her by saying she was hired solely for her journalistic skills.

The two-week trial centered on Ms. Craft's claim that on Aug. 14, 1981, former KMBC news director Ridge Shannon said she was being demoted because she was "too old, unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

Shannon denied on the witness stand ever making the comment, and also denied that Ms. Craft's sex had anything to do with her salary or her demotion. He declined comment on the verdict.

Metromedia said it demoted Ms. Craft because surveys showed audience reaction to her was extremely negative.

Short-term bills go up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury bills rose for the second straight week as the discount rates for three and six-month securities neared their highest levels in almost a year, officials say.

About $6.2 billion in new three-month T-bills were sold at an average discount rate of 9.57 percent Monday, up from 9.36 percent last week. Another $6.2 billion in new six-month bills were sold at an average rate of 9.7 percent, up from 9.56 percent.

The discount rate for three-month bills has increased in 10 of the last 14 weeks and yields are at their highest level since the 10.025 percent of last Aug. 9. Rates for six-month bills, also rising in 10 of the past 14 weeks, are at their highest level since the 9.704 percent of last Sept. 13.

Monday's new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 9.97 percent for three-month bills and 10.37 percent for six-month bills.

Anchorwomen jubilant but still wary

By The Associated Press
The $500,000 jury award to Christine Craft, the former Kansas City anchorwoman who claimed she was demoted because of her age, her looks and her sex, drew cries of "Bravo!" from female newscasters — and worried commenters from TV executives.

"Bravo to the jury and to Ms. Craft for having the guts to have her image dissected and defended," said Carol Martin of WCBS-TV in New York City. "It is a consciousness-raising decision for viewers, for TV management and for women behind and in front of the camera."

But ABC News president Roone Arledge said the national spotlight on Ms. Craft's trial is bad news for the business.

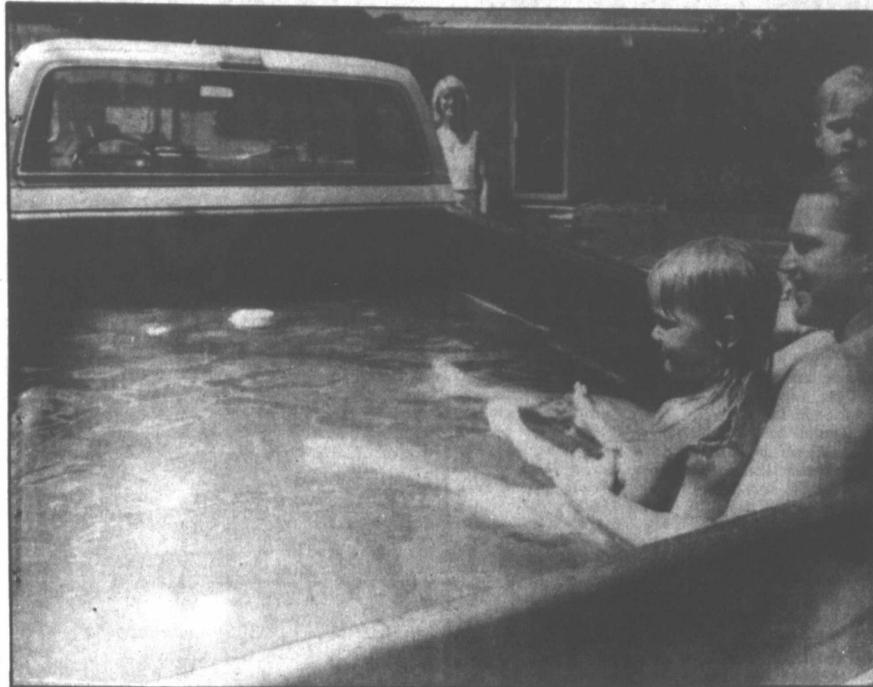

"The thing that really troubles me is that it is a condemnation of our industry, that people have to be judged by standards other than pure journalism," Arledge said.

"It is a fact of life that exists," he said. "The criteria are different in television, as long as your face is out there as your byline and you are judged by all the cosmetic things that go with that."

Reuven Frank, president of NBC News, said: "I think what will happen is that the legal departments will instruct news executives on what to say."

Ms. Craft, former anchorwoman for KMBC-TV in Kansas City, was awarded $375,000 in compensatory and $125,000 in punitive damages by federal jurors who found the station's former owner, Metromedia Inc., guilty of fraud because they told Ms. Craft she was hired solely for her journalistic skills.

AFL-CIO may speed blessing

BOSTON (AP) — As U.S. Sens. John Glenn and Alan Cranston wooed the rank and file, the AFL-CIO Executive Council was poised to bolster the campaign of Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale by speeding its presidential endorsement.

The plan to move up the endorsement from December to October topped the agenda at today's meeting of the council, the AFL-CIO's top policymaking body.

Supporters of the former vice president among the 35 union leaders on the federation's top policymaking body have campaigned to shorten the endorsement timetable.

But Cranston, D-Calif., has been fighting the move, appealing to unions to give him more time to establish his credentials as a viable presidential candidate.

"December gives me more opportunity to show my strength," Cranston told the United Food and Commercial Workers union last week.

Cranston sent a letter Monday to executive council members in which he said, "I can't believe that labor would turn its back on me after our long and close association with one another."

But even as he distributed copies of the letter, Victor Kamber, a former union official active in the Cranston campaign, conceded that he expected the date to be changed to October.

Glenn, D-Ohio, was in Boston on Monday to receive the endorsement of two Massachusetts congressmen.

Glenn told a news conference a change in the timetable would be "for the benefit of one particular candidate," but added, "I expect to do very well with the rank and file. No matter what happens here I will be competing for that support."

AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland brushed aside Glenn's complaint that union leaders were setting the stage for a Mondale endorsement.

Glenn "will, of course, be given consideration as will all of the other candidates for office," said Kirkland.

The timing, he said, would be decided "on the basis of our own concerns rather than how it affects any candidate."

Americans aren't saving for rainy days

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If any rainy days lie ahead for the economy, American consumers apparently aren't saving for them.

Just a few months out of a long recession, they are spending far more and saving much less than most economists expected.

The savings rate, as calculated by the Commerce Department, fell in the second quarter of this year to its lowest level in more than 30 years. At the same time, personal consumption increased sharply.

President Reagan's economic programs have stressed savings. It was thought extending eligibility for Individual Retirement Accounts to all workers would be a major step in that direction.

It may yet prove to be. But a recent survey of more than 1,000 adults by R.H. Bruskin Associates, a New Brunswick, N.J., market research firm, found that just 15 percent had opened IRAs for 1982. That leaves a large proportion of the population who shrugged off a powerful tax incentive to saving.

Deposits into IRAs of up to $2,000 a year per individual can be deducted on current tax returns. Thus, for someone in the 33 percent tax bracket, the government is effectively chipping in $1 for every $2 the individual saves.

And dividends or interest earned on IRAs accumulate tax free until the account-holder withdraws money, typically after retirement.

A second nagging question: How long can consumers keep their spending up? At the recently depressed level of the savings rate, "it seems unlikely the consumer will dip further into savings to support spending," says Carol Brock Kenney, chief economist at the investment firm of Shearson-American Express.

"If the savings rate stabilizes or rises, then the recovery in consumer spending will be completely dependent on the outlook for disposable income," observes Edward Yardeni at Prudential-Bache Securities. "We think that consumer sentiment has peaked for a while and that the savings rate is more likely to rise than fall. We expect a less robust consumer recovery in the second half of the year."

A case can be made that the economy needs some extra saving, rather than spending, right now to help sustain the recovery. The money is needed in the bond markets, the reasoning goes, to help meet the heavy borrowing demands of the government to cover its budget deficit.

Congress sets record, numerous bills remain

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Congress broke last week for its five-week summer recess, it had passed more bills than any Congress since 1980 — even though it left a host of major legislation to await its return after Labor Day.

The first seven months of 1983 saw a total of 63 bills enacted, a major increase over the 26 measures that had been sent to the White House this time last year.

Congress is also ahead of last year's schedule in approving appropriations bills to fund the government. Of the 13 spending bills needed to finance government agencies and programs, three have already been signed by the president and one is awaiting his signature.

Last year at this time, not a single spending bill had been approved by either the House or the Senate.

Congressional leaders patted themselves on the back for their productivity and then used the remaining day before the recess to pass a few measures that were, well, of something less than national significance.

For instance, the Senate rushed to pass a bill sponsored by Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., to name the airport control tower in Chattanooga, Tenn., after Harry Porter, whom Baker described as "a fixture in the state... a longtime resident and a friend of mine."

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said he was more than eager to accommodate his Republican counterpart.

"The majority leader knows of my fondness for him. He knows I would jump into the Potomac for him," Byrd said, announcing that there would be no Democratic opposition to the special high-priority treatment Baker's bill was receiving.

"I am speechless," Baker said. "I am not often speechless."

"I hope we can keep him that way," Byrd responded.

And the Harry Porter Control Tower Act of 1983 joined the list of measures to win congressional approval.

Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

Dear Abby

Wealthy couple argues about who should pay
By Abigail Van Buren

© 1983 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am an elderly widower in good financial circumstances, as is my ladyfriend. I take her out to a fine restaurant once a week, and in turn, she invites me to her home for dinner. We both enjoy our relationship, but we have one serious problem. If I invite her to go on a trip, she insists that I should pay her expenses, even though she has ample funds.

I try not to be smallish, but I resent having to pay for her company. The amount would not be insignificant if we went to Hawaii, for example. The money saved this way will eventually go to her children and grandchildren, who are not in need of it.

We are both stubborn and cannot find a compromise. For my part, it is not the money, it's the principle of the thing. I should like to learn your opinion.

NAMELESS, PLEASE

DEAR NAMELESS: When someone says, "It's not the money, it's the principle of the thing," it's usually the money. Since you invited her to go on the trip, it should be your treat. (If she invited you, it should be her treat.) Because you are both stubborn, you are letting life pass you by without enjoying many of the pleasures you can well afford. The one thing you cannot buy is time. Make the most of your lives while you have the health to enjoy them.

DEAR ABBY: My wife's parents invited us to accompany them on a trip to visit some relatives who live in another state. It was a nice drive, but far enough away so we had to stop at a motel overnight.

As we were checking into the motel, it became evident that her parents expected us to share a room with them to save expenses. The room was large, with two double beds to accommodate four people, but I didn't feel comfortable with this kind of arrangement so I told my in-laws in a very nice way that I preferred a room of our own, which I would gladly pay for. (I did.)

My wife didn't say anything until we were in our room. Then she said she was very disappointed in me for not going along with her parents' wishes. And for me to insist on having my own way was "disrespectful" and I owe her parents an apology.

Abby, I just couldn't imagine my wife and me sleeping in the same room with my in-laws. (We'll be married a year next month.)

Was I "disrespectful"? And do I owe them an apology?
LIKES PRIVACY

DEAR LIKES: Disrespectful? No way. And no apologies are necessary.

DEAR ABBY: "Had it" wrote that her husband informed her that "he was not happy working at any job, and since he has the right to be 'happy,' he intends to stay home."

That caused me to recall the words of Leo Rosten: "The purpose of life is not to be happy. The purpose of life is to matter, to be productive, to have it make some difference that you live at all. Happiness, in the ancient, noble verse, means self-fulfillment and is given to those who use to the fullest whatever talents God or luck or fate bestowed upon them."

ARTHUR H. PRINCE

DEAR ABBY: Please don't hand out any prizes for the most insensitive mother-in-law in the world until you've heard about mine.

The first words she ever spoke to me, when my then-girlfriend called long-distance to tell her we were marrying, were, "Do you have any money?"

When she came on the train for our wedding (and to meet her future son-in-law), she first tried to fix her daughter up with "a lovely young man" she had met on the train!

The day before our wedding she told her daughter that she'd been to a psychic who told her that we would have a miserable marriage.

We were to be married by a judge in a simple civil ceremony, so as we climbed the stairs to the courthouse she said, "This couldn't be tackier if you had planned it."

Do-it-yourself room stretches remodeling dollars

If you're thinking about adding a room onto your home, you certainly don't want to build an inch more than you need. Why?

Consider this: Assuming contractor costs of $40 per square foot, the difference between a 12 by 15 foot addition and a more compact 10 by 12 addition is a cool $2,400.

Space is expensive. But there's a strategy for beating the higher cost of building. Think in terms of "double duty": making a room serve more than one purpose.

A good illustration of double duty remodeling is the "3-in-1 Greatroom" in the current issue of "Woman's Day Kitchens & Family Rooms" magazine. This "great room" consists of a redecorated existing kitchen them flow together in the open-plan style. The result is a large room for cooking, dining and entertaining — which goes double duty one better.

The open-plan layout has other advantages besides spaciousness. For one, it lets the cook converse with guests seated in the family room or mixing a drink at the "bar" (really nothing more than a large wicker tray filled with bottles and glasses and occupying a niche in a wall storage unit.)

The storage unit, built into a corner of the family room at a 45-degree angle, has deep open shelves up top (for TV, books, games, the "bar," etc.) and commodious cupboards below. Its diagonal placement adds architectural interest by people aren't skilled enough to tackle basic construction jobs like framing and wiring, almost anybody can do finishing work (floor, ceiling, walls, trim).

The room's color scheme of soft, country pastels was suggested by the blue, apricot and beige of the do-it-yourself no-wax floor tile, which closely resembles expensive imported ceramic tile. Other considerations in the choice of flooring were ease of installation — the tile is the self-sticking kind — and ease of maintenance.

Cued by the floor colors, designers painted the walls peach, except for one corner of the family room and the backsplash behind the kitchen counter. Those areas were treated to buff-colored brick veneer: goodlooking and easy to apply.

Accent colors are two shades of blue: blueberry (curtains, throw pillows, footrest) and cornflower blue (chairs, stools, crockery).

Countertops are "autumn cider," and the sofa slipcover and a tablecloth are the same cheerful, splashy print, also in blue, apricot and beige.

Opposite the storage unit in the family room is the brick-walled dining corner, with a round table for meals, games or cards and a hutch whose shelves display prized collectibles.

There's more dining in the kitchen, at an oversized island. It has a projecting edge at one end for leg room for people ensconced on stools. And the island is ideal for buffet set-ups.

But its primary function is as a surface for food preparation. Because this kitchen is for people who look on cooking as an art form — and who like to watch artists at work.

Small, inexpensive, do-it-yourself touches give the redecoration a custom flair. For example, wooden spandrels reminiscent of Victorian "gingerbread" adorn the kitchen cabinets, window and island, and other molding painted cornflower blue embellishes the cabinet doors.

Both types of molding or trim are available precut from building supply stores.

Capping off the whole room is a do-it-yourself ceiling in rustic "knotty pine" planks. Downlights in the ceiling provide dramatic illumination for work and play areas. Of course, even this remodeling project, for all the designers' cost-cutting savvy, still wasn't cheap. But at least it didn't cost a penny more than necessary, thanks to "double duty" and do-it-yourself products.

Plenty of cost-cutting knowhow when into Armstrong and featured in a current issue planning this peach of a room (color of "Woman's Day Kitchens & Family scheme peach and blue) designed by Rooms" magazine.

with a family room added on. breaking up the room's square outline. Since both rooms are smallish in themselves, it was decided not to divide them with a wall but rather to let The great room is chockful of do-it-yourself ideas that hold down costs. While most

Pioneer spirit captured in oak furniture

Early colonial settlers' most logical choice for wood in constructing furniture was oak, because of its strength and beauty.

Pioneers' romantic vision of an ever-widening, ever-promising western frontier made for a gutsy spirit. Oak symbolized their own strength, integrity and endurance in spending dawn-to-dusk days clearing timber and creating a homestead from a harsh, untamed environment.

Thomasville has captured that spirit in its new American Oak collection. Dining-room pieces range from a classic Welsh cupboard to a timeless Windsor chair.

Windsor chairs were first made in England around 1720 by the poor for their own use. Later, they were produced in quantity in factories near Windsor. But it was in America that they attained their greatest popularity and their most graceful styling. Because they were sturdy, attractive, light and comfortable, they became the favorite chair in the average American home. Originally these chairs were made by wheelwrights rather than cabinet makers — hence the use of a bentwood back frame supported by spindles and legs pegged into saddle seats. These Windsor chairs have decorative pierced splat backs and graceful cabriole legs in front with bowed stretchers originally designed to accommodate ladies' hoopskirts.

The keeping-room table was found in the early 19th century great room — a combination kitchen, dining room and family room. This piece was the worktable and was used for everything from sitting down to dinner to working out the barter agreement for a neighbor's corn or side of beef. Today, it makes a stylish and functional desk or kitchen piece with its 33-inch by 74-inch top and three drawers.

America's pioneer spirit is captured in the American Oak collection of fine furniture. Crafted of oak in a warm fruitwood finish called Tidewater, the pieces have a solid robust look of endurance, but reflect the grace and charm of European influence. The Welsh cupboard has nine pegs for cups, three shelves, six drawers with drop-in silver tray in top left drawer and one lower shelf. The keeping-room dining table has three drawers, and the Windsor chairs have pierced splat backs and cabriole legs.

Dial '800 Cocaine' for drug help

By Ellie Grossman

NEW YORK (NEA) — It's a party but you're depressed, so when the host says, try this, you'll feel better, you do. You know you can handle it. Besides, what's to handle? It's only cocaine.

Mental disorders; nosebleeds; headaches; high blood pressure; irregular heartbeats; job loss; family loss; stroke; heroin addiction to counteract cocaine's side-effect jitters; epileptic seizures; death.

That's what an estimated 5 million to 10 million cocaine addicts may be trying to handle. And each day perhaps 5,000 people try the drug for the first time and at least 20 percent of them will become addicted and face that, too, says Dr. Mark S. Gold, director of Fair Oaks Hospital, a private psychiatric facility in Summit, N.J., that treats problems of drug abuse, among others.

Despite the misery it engenders, cocaine is now "the number three drug problem in America, after alcohol and marijuana," he says. That's because "the typical user has very limited or no prior drug use and has been led to believe the drug is safe, so he's very surprised when he cannot limit his own use."

The drug is also easy to get — "The '60s and '70s brought suburban and work-place delivery and the cocaine pusher is your neighbor and co-worker" — and, lastly, many of us crave the lift it gives which is equal to the caffeine in 10 cups of coffee, he says.

We want that because Americans believe in feeling good all the time. We're thrown by everyday ups and downs and on cocaine you feel positive. Energetic. Confident you can do the spectacular — and that's the pitfall. Any success you do have, you credit to the use of the drug. Psychologically, you become addicted. And, Gold says, "I also think it's physically addictive if you define physical addiction as continued use in the face of real physical and medical consequences that the person associates with the drug."

Once addicted, you go the way drug addicts go. And even if you want to go for help, you probably won't know where to go. Most cocaine users don't.

Now, however, they can find out. On May 6, 1983, Fair Oaks Hospital initiated a national, 24-hour, seven-day, toll-free telephone number "800 Cocaine" (800-262-2463) — which any cocaine user or interested party anywhere can call confidentially for a referral to the nearest substance-abuse physician, self-help group or major medical school with a cocaine treatment program.

"We have more than 300 referral sources, at least one in every state," Gold says, "and our staff consists of eight to 10 telephone counselors, many of them ex-cocaine users, two of them substance-abuse psychiatrists who supervise the calls and answer difficult questions."

On any day, there are roughly 750 calls, with twice as many men calling as women, Gold says, and that's surprising. "Men are least likely to seek help, which means there are probably 10 times the number of male users out there."

The typical male caller, he says, is white, 30-plus, middle to upper middle class; from New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Miami, Chicago or Dallas-Fort Worth; a man who may have turned to cocaine hoping to achieve society's ideals of male aggressiveness in business and proficiency in bed (chronic users become impotent, he says).

But ironically, fewer than one-quarter of those callers ask for referrals. Says Gold, "Many think that suicide is the only answer to their cocaine problems, so they call to set up a safety net. They want to make sure the number works. They say, 'I'll call you when I need you. The man who does ask for help tends to be the caller on Sunday night who says, 'My wife left me, my kids don't talk to me and my boss won't give me a promotion.' That guy will go into treatment or kill himself."

That man, obviously, is depressed, which may be why he tried cocaine in the first place.

Through your own cleverness and mental efforts you can find several new ways to add to your resources this coming year. Use your ideas instead of sitting on them.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you put your mind to it today, there's an excellent chance you'll come up with some lucrative ideas that could result in material gains. Leo predictions for the year ahead are now ready. Romance, career, luck, earnings, travel and much more are discussed. Send $1 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to state your zodiac sign. Send an additional $2 for the NEW Astro-Graph Matchmaker wheel and booklet. Reveals romantic compatibilities for all signs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A project you're contemplating has the long-range benefits you envision. Get it off the drawing board and into action as quickly as possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) An old plan which has outlived its usefulness should be discarded for one that is more productive. Today you may conceive the new method.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Try to associate with friends who have a positive and hopeful outlook. Your thinking today will be strongly influenced by your companions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Set your sights a few pegs higher than usual today. When properly motivated, you'll be extremely clever in achieving your objectives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You are well equipped today to handle complicated issues. Logical thinking, coupled with what you learned from past experiences, will be the reasons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Financial or commercial dealings today should work out to your satisfaction because you'll know how to use relevant information wisely.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Associates will find you an enjoyable companion today. You have the ability to draw out their thoughts and opinions and make them feel appreciated.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Strive to be industrious today and be especially mindful of details. You have the capabilities to produce something of superior quality.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Let good sportsmanship be uppermost in your mind today in any competitive involvements. It will help enhance your image.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Finishing touches could be very significant today, so make an extra effort not to leave any loose thread hanging. Complete what you start.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Unless you have something complimentary to say about others today, it's best to keep your thoughts to yourself. Subdue temptations to criticize.

Age hasn't mellowed Texas' attorney general

By CANDICE HUGHES

Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) —

Some people mellow with age. Texas Attorney General

Jim Mattox isn't one of them.

"People back me in a corner and I fight," Mattox says.

His friends use words like ambitious, intense, tenacious, independent, outspoken and feisty to describe the attorney general. His foes add words like vicious and rash.

Mattox is in one of the biggest fights of his career and he is handling it in his usual fashion.

"He's like a bulldog. I haven't seen a nickel's worth of change in close to 20 years," said one old friend,

John Collins, a Dallas trial lawyer. "He is terribly consistent."

A Travis County grand jury

is investigating Mattox's campaign finances, his ties to

South Texas rancher Clinton

Manges and accusations that

Mattox threatened the law firm representing Mobil Oil, which is involved in a lawsuit with Manges and the state.

Many public officials would react with a terse denial of wrongdoing and refer all questions to their lawyers.

But not Mattox.

"Jimmy's got a low boiling point," says Dallas Senator

Oscar Mauzy, a friend of Mattox's for nearly two decades. "Sometimes he talks before he thinks."

Mattox has lashed out at

"big oil," fired off

countercharges against its lawyers and grabbed headlines by calling for a boycott of Mobil to force a settlement in the state's high-stakes oil royalty suit.

He has vowed to "do right and take the consequences" and "fight no matter what happens." He portrays his battle as a righteous one: Jim

Mattox fighting against the fat cats for the schoolchildren of Texas.

If he wins, he will wear his scars like medals on the campaign trail. He won't talk about the possibility of losing.

Said one close aide: "He ain't going to say 'I'm sorry.'

He ain't going to say 'I was wrong.' That's just not going to happen. He's convinced he is right."

Mattox is a loner with an appetite for combat. When he was in the Texas House, he led the opposition to then-Speaker Billy Clayton.

"I don't see that he's changed a whole lot," Clayton said. "He is kind of a maverick and he played the same role back then. He gave me some good fights. He's a hard hitter. He goes after the jugular."

Mattox did well in the Texas House. He established

the House Study Group, which has since become an integral part of House operations. He was named outstanding freshman by his colleagues in 1973; in 1975,

Texas Monthly magazine put him on its coveted "Ten Best" list.

Washington was another story. Mattox's defiant nature and love of battle kept him off the Congressional fast track.

After he arrived in Washington in 1976 as the new representative for the 5th

Congressional District in Dallas, Mattox wrangled with House Speaker Tip O'Neill.

The issue was the House dress code. A presidential edict to turn up the public thermostats had just gone out and it was warm on the House floor. Mattox showed up in shirt sleeves as he defied the rules and O'Neill.

The young congressman

basked in the spotlight of national publicity for three days. And for the next six years, every time he asked

O'Neill for a leadership position, he was turned down.

"Frankly you'd think somebody would learn to be more diplomatic over the years, but Mattox hasn't seemed to," says his old friend Doug Zabel, press

secretary to Texas

Agriculture Commissioner

Jim Hightower.

Mattox says he had a tough childhood. When he was 12 years old, his father left his mother to raise three children alone. She did it by waiting tables and relying heavily on her oldest son, Jimmy.

"It was a real struggle," said one old friend. "He's always been a fighter. Those were the skills he developed.

He had to go with his gut instinct so he trusts only himself now. I don't think he'll ever be close to another human being."

Mattox has said he "ran with a tough crowd" as a boy.

"A number of the guys I grew up with ended up in prison," he said once. But a strong

Southern Baptist code instilled by his mother kept him out of trouble, he said.

But there were plenty of brushes with authority

figures, hints of how Mattox would deal with legislative leaders later in life.

"I was the fastest runner on the (football) team, but I never got to play because I was always in some type of friction with the coaches," he told an interviewer once. "I quit football because I didn't like people telling me what to do."

Although he is locked in combat with "big oil" these days, Mattox enjoyed cordial relations with the business community as a member of the U.S. House Banking and Currency Committee.

He supplemented his longstanding source of campaign funds in organized labor with healthy

contributions from bankers and other businessmen.

"Bankers felt he was a friend and they supported him," said Charles Kirkham, a Dallas stockbroker and longtime Mattox supporter.

Mattox has successfully evolved from working man to businessman, despite having spent all but two years of his adult life in public service.

As a teen-ager, Mattox bussed tables, washed dishes, loaded freight. He worked his way through college and then helped his sister, Janice, and his brother, Jerry, pay for their educations.

When he finished law school

at Southern Methodist

University in 1968, Mattox said he was $10,000 in debt. In 1981, his Congressional financial disclosure said he was worth between $399,000 and $1.5 million.

"I dabble in real estate,"

Mattox says.

Despite his comfortable

financial circumstances,

Mattox lives modestly. When he left his four-bedroom

Washington townhouse last year, he still had furnished

only a couple of rooms.

Since he moved back to

Austin, Mattox has been living in a $450 per month,

two-bedroom apartment. He says he's looking for a house.

"I'm not at home very much," he says. "I don't entertain at home."

On the verge of turning 40,

Mattox is still single, a fact he attributes to the caution of a child of a broken home. He refuses to discuss his reputation as a ladies' man.

Jim Mattox never stops running. Maybe it's because he has run for office every other year for more than a decade. Even now, with more than three years to go in his term, he often refers to himself as a "candidate"

rather than officeholder.

Mattox runs hard, waging a campaign as though it were a war of attrition, leaving behind a trail of bruised and wounded opponents. Years later, many of them are still smarting.

Mattox also outworked the opposition, Mauzy said.

"He knocked on every damn door in that district," Mauzy recalls. "That's what he does best. The first time he ran for Congress in 1976, he walked the whole district with a sandwich board on his back that said 'I need a job.'

The sandwich board isn't what sticks in the mind of Mattox's Republican

opponent in that 1976 race.

"Intimidation," said Dallas

County Commissioner Nancy

Judy. "That's his modus operendi. He would stop at nothing to put me down."

One day, Mrs. Judy said,

Mattox "look over" her press conference. "All the cameras were focused on him," she said.

The relationship between

Mattox and television cameras seems to approximate that of a moth to a flame. He finds the limelight irresistible and is an expert at finding it. During the Democratic primary for attorney general, for instance, he held a press conference in a garbage dump to call attention to his conflict of interest charges against an opponent.

"I play at politics rough,"

Mattox admits. "But I don't know of anything I've done

that's improper."

Mattox says he learned to play rough by having "it done to me first."

American League roundup

(AP) — It seems now that the Toronto Blue Jays may be an endangered species.

"We were out for a little bit of revenge because of how we were treated in Toronto and we got it tonight," said Dave Winfield, whose hitting helped the New York Yankees to a doubleheader sweep of the faltering Blue Jays, 8-3 and 11-3 Monday night.

The sweep in Yankee Stadium not only extended the Blue Jays' current losing streak to six games and dropped them 3½ games back in fifth place in the American League East, but avenged a bad time in Canada last week. The Yankees lost three of four games to the Blue Jays and were further humiliated by Winfield's arrest for killing a bird.

Winfield became a cause celebre when a ball he threw between innings struck and killed a seagull. He was charged with cruelty to animals — seagulls are a protected species in Canada — and had to post a $500 bond. However, the charge was dropped the next day, and an official for the Toronto police came to New York to apologize for the incident.

Indians 9, Orioles 4

In Baltimore, Broderick Perkins and George Vukovich drove in two runs apiece as Cleveland scored six times in the third inning to beat the Orioles.

Winner Rick Sutcliffe, 13-7, ending a three-game losing streak, allowed five hits, including a grand slam homer in the fourth by Joe Nolan. Sutcliffe struck out seven and walked five.

Storm Davis, 10-5, was the loser

In Boston, Pete O'Brien's single broke a 7-7 tie in a five-run ninth in which Boston Manager Ralph Houk and pitcher Bob Stanley were ejected as Texas rallied for a victory over the Red Sox.

Houk and Stanley were thrown out for protesting a play at third on which Mickey Rivers, who had doubled, had moved up a base on a bunt. Mark Clear relieved Stanley and allowed

O'Brien's tie-breaking single. After Jim Sundberg walked to load the bases, Larry Biittner hit a two-run double. The last two runs scored on a sacrifice fly by Buddy Bell and an error by catcher Gary Allenson.

"That finish was a little out of the ordinary," said Texas Manager Doug Rader. "It was unfortunate to see Stanley lose it like that. You can't let yourself go like that."

White Sox 5-2, Tigers 4-7

In Detroit, Tom Paciorek belted a three-run homer to lead Chicago over Detroit in the first game of their doubleheader. Paciorek's homer highlighted a four-run Chicago third.

Larry Herndon's three-run homer backed the five-hit pitching of Jack Morris as the Tigers won the nightcap.

Royals 5-5, Brewers 4-8

In Kansas City, U.L. Washington singled home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning to lead the Royals to a comeback victory over Milwaukee in the opener of a doubleheader.

Roy Howell collected four hits to pace a 16-hit attack that carried the Brewers to victory in the second game.

Twins 4, Angels 2

In Anaheim, Gary Gaetti and Tom Brunansky led off the fifth inning with homers to spark Minnesota over California.

Gaetti, who initiated a triple play in the fourth inning, and Brunansky picked off consecutive pitches by Tommy John, 8-9, to erase California's 2-0 lead. It was the 16th homer for each.

Ron Washington and Tim Laudner then singled before Darrell Brown bounced into a double play as Washington scored the tie-breaking run.

A's 2, Mariners 1

In Seattle, Dwayne Murphy and Garry Hancock homered in the fourth inning off Jim Beattie to lead Oakland to the win. The surprising A's won for the 11th time in their last 15 games and moved into fourth place in the AL West, passing the Angels.

"They both hit sinkers that didn't sink — until they went over the fence," said Beattie, 8-8.

National League roundup

MONTREAL (AP) — Even in defeat, Montreal Expos Manager Bill Virdon conceded he had watched a good baseball game.

"It was an exceptional game, it's too bad we had to come out of it on the losing end," said Virdon after the Expos bowed 6-5 in 10 innings to the New York Mets, who have won eight of their last nine games.

Phillies 14, Pirates 5

In Philadelphia, Mike Schmidt was a one-man wrecking crew, hitting two home runs, driving in five runs and scoring four. Schmidt, who moved into 25th place on the all-time home run list with 375, also took over the NL lead in homers with 26, one more than Dawson.

Pirates lose; play title game Sunday

The Pampa Pirates dropped from their lone position atop play the Amarillo A's in Memorial Stadium (Gold Sox the Amarillo Adult Baseball League into a tie for first place, Stadium). Both the Pirates and A's have identical 9-2 records, when they were whipped 9-3 Sunday by the third-place Amarillo Hawks.

Hawks pitcher Tom Palacios hurled a three-hitter and struck out 13 Pirates in the seven-inning game. "I could really sing their praises, but I can't say much about us," said Pirate Coach Joe Zillmer after his club lost for the second time this season.

Zillmer said several of the Pirate starters, most of the "sticks" in the Pampa lineup, couldn't make the game, as they were playing in a championship softball tournament. The coach said the repeated loss of his starters "finally caught up with us."

"He pitched a masterful game," Zillmer said of Palacios. The Pirates' loss set up a game for all the marbles and the league championship Sunday, when the Pampa squad will

"We'll be ready," Zillmer said.

The coach said he plans to have all of his starters back in the lineup, with the exception of Pirate ace Alan Stuart, who has returned to California to again pitch for a professional farm team. Zillmer said the Pirates can survive the loss of Stuart, but his absence surely can't help. The Pirate Ace had mowed down all the opponents he faced this year. Stuart joined the Pampa team following a slight setback in a professional career. But after making mincemeat of the Amarillo League, Stuart is once again driving for the Bigs, Zillmer said.

The coach said he hopes all the Pirates' Pampa supporters can make the championship game at noon Sunday in Memorial Stadium at Amarillo.

Fastest humans

Carl Lewis is flanked by fellow Americans and teammates Calvin Smith, right, and Emmitt King after the swift trio swept the finish of the men's 100-meter race earlier this year, with a finals time of 10.07 seconds to take the gold medal. (AP Laserphoto)

Americans field three fastest humans

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Evelyn Ashford, the world record holder in the women's 100-meter dash, crumpled to the track, grabbing her right hamstring and writhing in pain.

She was the latest victim in a series of injuries that have robbed the inaugural World Track and Field Championships of some of their expected heroes and heroines.

With only two days of competition completed in the meet that ends Sunday, the growing injury list already contains some impressive names.

Ashford, who had reached a peak in her brilliant career last month by taking the world record (10.79 seconds) from her heated rival, Marlies Gohr of East Germany, broke down Monday in the 100-meter final.

"I'm very disappointed, but I will be back next year," Ashford promised after learning that she had suffered a torn hamstring muscle and her recovery period would be 8-10 weeks.

"I have a few scores to settle," she added.

One of the scores will be against Gohr. The former world record holder, capitalizing on Ashford's frightening fall, won the 100 in 10.97, leading a 1-2 East German sweep.

She was not very sympathetic after capturing the gold medal.

"That is her problem, not mine, that she couldn't make it," Gohr said about Ashford's injury.

"I know how to beat Ashford now," she added. "I let Ashford win yesterday (in Sunday's second-round heats)."

The injury to Ashford overshadowed a 1-2-3 American sweep in the men's 100, led by Carl Lewis, and a surprising victory by Zdzislaw Hoffmann of Poland in the triple jump.

Lewis, after a slow start, zipped past Calvin Smith near the 60-meter mark and went on to win in 10.07 seconds.

Smith, the world record holder, was second in 10.21 and Emmitt King was third in 10.24, just ahead of 1980 Olympic champion Allan Wells of Scotland (10.27).

The little-known Hoffmann equalled the eighth best jump in history, soaring 17.42 meters (57 feet, 2 inches). Willie Banks of the United States and Ajayi Agbekalu of Nigeria tied for second at 17.18 (56-4 1/2), but the popular American was awarded the silver medal on the basis of a better second jump.

Marita Koch of East Germany and Diane Williams of the United States won the day's other medals, placing second and third respectively, in the women's 100 in 11.02 and 11.06.

Afterward, Williams put the meet in perspective.

"This World Championship has been a very sad one," she said, reflecting on the injuries.

Ashford's breakdown followed by one day injuries to Cuba's Alberto Juantorena and Italy's Sara Simeoni, both Olympic gold medalists and former world record holders.

Juantorena, winner of the 400 and 800 meters in the 1976 Summer Games, underwent surgery Monday after suffering torn ligaments and a broken bone in his right foot as he fell while crossing the finish line in an 800 heat.

Simeoni, the 1980 Olympic champion in the women's high jump, suffered a pulled leg muscle during Monday's qualifying and had to be carried off on a stretcher.

Houston Cougars will use the 'I' formation

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Coach Bill Yeoman, inventor of the veer offense, is joining the trend toward the I formation.

"We'll probably run some of the offensive formations from the I, everybody else does," Yeoman said. "Being in the I is not going to bother us."

Yeoman hopes use of the I formation will help the Cougar offense dig out from the doldrums that contributed to last season's 5-5 record.

Another change, however, has nothing to do with offensive formations.

"At the quarterback spot, and this doesn't come as a shock, we're going to have to get more careful play," Yeoman said. "We can't have the fumbles and the interceptions that we've had the last couple of years and still expect to play the way we should."

Lionel Wilson established 12 UH records and gained 3,766 total yards in the last two seasons for the second highest total in UH history. But fumbles and interceptions have checked his performance.

"Wilson is a very gifted athlete but he has to be more careful with the football to play," Yeoman said.

The Cougar offense was stalled by 34 turnovers last season, 17 fumbles and 17 interceptions. Wilson threw 13 of the interceptions last season and had 11 the previous year.

"I am kind of encouraged (offensively) because it appears as if we have a little more size and speed at running back and there's every indication that we have the same thing at receivers," Yeoman said.

Senior Dwayne Love will line up at fullback and Donald Jordan will get the starting nod at tailback. Love led the Cougars' No. 2 rusher last year with 831 yards and led the team with 10 touchdowns.

"Our offensive line, although it is not real deep, looks like it can play a little better," Yeoman said.

Guard Scott Marshall is the lone returning starter in the offensive line.

The newcomers will be Ray Rogers, a junior from Orange, at left tackle; highly recruited Todd Schoppe, a sophomore from LaPorte, at center; Duane Losack, a senior from East Bernard, at right tackle and Earl Jones, a 300-pound senior from Houston, at right guard.

Audrey McMillian has moved from quarterback to free safety, leaving Wilson as the lone returning letterman at the position. Wilson's early fall practice will be critical because he missed spring drills because of arthroscopic knee surgery.

"Lionel definitely could have used the work in the spring. There's no doubt about it," Yeoman said. "He really needed to work on his timing with the receivers."

Welterweight title on the line

(AP) — The "practice" for the vacant World Boxing Council welterweight champion is just what Colin Jones needed.

At least that's opinion of Eddie Thomas, a cool Welshman, who knew how to fight and knows how to handle fighters.

Jones, also a Welshman, lost at least the first five rounds against lanky Milton McCrory of Detroit last March 19 at Reno, Nev., then battled back to gain a 12-round draw in a fight for the title left vacant when Sugar Ray Leonard retired last November.

"Now he knows how being a champion feels... or being a half champion," said Thomas of the 24-year-old Jones, who will fight McCrory in a title rematch in the desert heat of Las Vegas, Nev., the kind of heat that has made good fighters blow their cool.

Thomas feels that the 12 rounds against McCrory in March can only help Jones. Jones has scored 21 knockouts in winning 24 fights — his only loss was on a disqualification — and because of his knocking out Sakrai Ve in the second round at London Sept. 14, 1982, and his March fight against McCrory, he fought less than two rounds.

On Nov. 6, Jones, already the British welterweight champion, won the European title by knocking out Henrik Palm of Denmark in Round 2 at Copenhagen in a fight that had been postponed when Jones developed appendicitis.

But what about 12 rounds in 90-100 degree heat? McCrory is an Emanuel Steward fighter and is used to training in the hell-like heat of the Kronk Gym in Detroit, which can get pretty hot at times outside, too.

But Thomas feels Jones has prepared for the heat.

"It was very hot in Wales (while Jones was training there) — 85-92, which is abnormal — and I had him running every day," said Thomas. A lot of that running

In heart surgery today - in football someday?

By ROBIN LICHTENSTEIN
Odessa American

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — Javier Garcia Jr. proudly lifts his blue T-shirt to display a row of black stitches that descend from the top of his chest to just above his navel.

In June, surgeons at Fort Worth Children's Hospital opened the 5-year-old Odessa's chest to close a hole the size of a quarter between the upper chambers of his heart.

Two days after the operation, Javier was walking through the hospital's halls, looking for someone to play with. "He hasn't stopped being active since," his mother said.

Mrs. Garcia and her shiny-eyed son were waiting at Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa to see Dr. Hudson Allender, a Fort Worth pediatric cardiologist.

Allender, 33, has joined his associate, Dr. Ralph Tierney, who has been conducting bi-annual pediatric cardiology clinics at Women's and Children's since 1976.

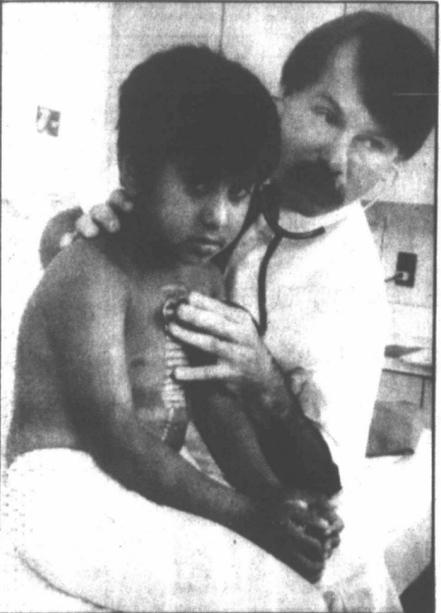

Those clinics now will be every three months since there are no pediatric cardiologists between El Paso and Fort Worth to meet the rising number of children being diagnosed with cardiac problems, Allender said.

"There's lots of kids in this area with heart disease," Allender said, noting that pediatrics is getting "more sophisticated" in recognizing such ailments in children.

"It's like that cigarette commercial, 'We've come a long way, baby,'" Allender said.

Of every 1,000 babies born, six to eight will have a heart defect of some kind, he said. Twenty percent to 30 percent of those with heart defects will undergo surgery.

UN envoy's star rises within the White House

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Alexander M. Haig Jr. once disparagingly equated Jeane J. Kirkpatrick with a company commander, seven grades below his four-star rank in the field of American foreign policy.

In the year since Haig's eclipse as secretary of state, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's own star has risen at the White House, where she has become an influential voice in the formulation of administration policies toward Central America.

President Reagan recently appointed the outspoken U.N. ambassador as his representative on the bipartisan commission on Central America, which is headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick scoffs at the notion that she has become the chief architect of Central American policies, saying that if there has been any shift in the decision-making process away from the State Department it has been toward President Reagan and not toward her.

It is, she told a reporter, "perfectly regular and normal" that "particularly salient or particularly delicate" issues be dealt with by the president. That is as true for the Lebanese crisis as it is for the conflicts in Central America, she said.

"My role is obviously just a function of my membership on the NSC (National Security Council)," she said when reached by phone recently at her office in Washington. Her position as chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations carries cabinet rank.

A senior State Department official in Washington gauged her contributions on Central American policy matters as major and indicated her influence on the issue had grown at the expense of that of Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who preferred a less rhetorical approach to the problem.

Asked to explain Mrs. Kirkpatrick's leading position, the official, who asked not to be identified, replied, "She knows the key players. She has a lot of experience in that area."

A former professor of government at Georgetown University, Mrs. Kirkpatrick is fluent in Spanish and has a long-standing interest in Latin American affairs. Her doctoral thesis dealt with the Peronist movement in Argentina.

Despite differences in approach, the senior State Department official said, there is little disagreement on basic policy objectives between Shultz and Mrs. Kirkpatrick. The two continue to communicate with each other, although not on a regular basis, he said.

There have been no reports of personality clashes.

In contrast, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's relations with Haig, Shultz's predecessor, were obviously strained, giving rise to recurrent speculation that the U.N. envoy was on her way out. One of the points of contention was U.S. policy toward Latin America.

During last year's Falkland Islands crisis, she was reported to have had a heated 45-minute telephone exchange with Haig over the American tilt toward Britain in its conflict with Argentina. She was said to have criticized him for having lost sight, in her view, of long-term U.S. interests in Latin America.

Another flap developed over a veto Mrs. Kirkpatrick cast in the U.N. Security Council against an Argentine-backed ceasefire resolution. Minutes later, new instructions were relayed from Haig, advising her to abstain. But it was too late and the veto stood.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick blamed the mixup on a communications snafu.

Haig, who was in France with the president, added fuel to reports of a feud when he disclosed that he had not personally conveyed the new instructions to the U.N. envoy.

Altogether, 55 children from throughout the Permian Basin were seen by the specialists in one July visit. Allender examined 46 of them.

"Heart disease in kids generally involves a plumbing problem," he said, explaining that tiny holes in the heart can get larger as children grow older.

But, the doctor said, "Heart attacks and sudden death are very uncommon in kids," who recover quickly from surgeries.

Children usually can be discharged from the hospital within 10 days of most heart surgeries, Allender said, while most adults who undergo open-heart surgery are hospitalized for at least two weeks.

Allender said heart diseases in children are congenital — present at birth — while heart diseases in adults usually result from "living too well."

Although dealing with children presents some unique challenges, Allender said he would much rather treat youngsters than oldsters.

"You couldn't pay me enough to treat adults," he said. Children, the doctor said, don't have "hang-ups" on body image, as many teen-agers and adults do.

Most children, he said, adapt well to heart disease. The hardest part of the diagnosis is trying to explain the problem to a child, especially if the patient has no symptoms.

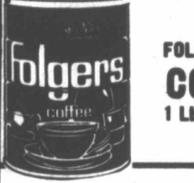

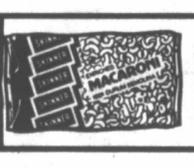

Javier Garcia had no symptoms. His mother said the hole in his heart was the size of a pinhead when he was born.

Allender, who diagnosed the boy but did not perform the surgery, said Javier is "pretty much cured."

"He should become eligible for the draft and be able to play pro football, if he's good enough," Allender said.
